"Wild Beauty," another Nancy Carroll vehicle, which deals with a girl eager for life and marriage but careless in looking after her baby daughter. Also two other Nancy Carroll vehicles.

"Stepdaughters of War," starring Ruth Chatterton, revealing the privations of the women ambulance drivers in the war.

"Tomorrow and Tomorrow," starring Ruth Chatterton in a talking version of the distinguished drama by Phillip Barry which has been one of the noteworthy hits of the Broadway stage season, revealing the poignant situation of a married woman who is forced to call upon the lover of her earlier days to come and save her stricken son with his surgical skill.

"An American Tragedy," Josef von Sternberg's production from Theodore Dreiser's famous novel, with an outstanding cast in which Phillips Holmes, Sylvia Sidney and Frances Dee play the featured roles.

"Manhandled," starring Clara Bow, a romantic talking picture which centers in a girl of adventurous disposition. Other Clara Bow pictures are to be made known later.

"China," tentative title of a production starring Tallulah Bankhead, with Frederic March opposite. Two other Tallulah Bankhead vehicles to be announced later.

"Mister Noodle," starring Jack Oakie and Skeets Gallagher, telling of the rise of a self-confident country boy who originates a popular comic strip.

"Monkey Business," vehicle for the Marx Brothers.

"Twenty-Four Hours," talking version of the novel by Louis Bromfield, with Clive Brook, Lilyan Tashman, Kay Francis, Eugene Pallette and Regis Toomey. The story involves the murder of a girl performer in a night club and the conservative smart set of New York.

"No One Man," with Carole Lombard and Norman Foster featured, based on Rupert Hughes' book about a modern society girl who finds fascinating sides that appeal to her in every man, but complete fascination in no man.

Paramount to Produce 52 Ad Films for General Distribution

To Make Polar Recordings

Atlantic City (QP)—Exclusive recordings to be made of two subsea and aeroplane exploits for feature productions were announced by Emanuel Cohen. One will be of Sir Hubert Wilkins' trip to the North Pole in the submarine Nautilus. The other an attempted flight to Europe by Ruth Nichols, holder of the world speed record for women fliers. In conformity with Wilkin's contract, Paramount cameramen in London are to leave soon for Spitzbergen for preliminary shots, after which the camera and sound equipment will be turned over to the crew of the submarine which has electrical apparatus aboard.

Sponsored Product to Be Booked The Same as Entertainment Product on Block Basis

Fifty-two sponsored sound reels will be produced by Paramount Business Pictures, Inc., for distribution to theatres outside the Publix organization, as well as within the circuit's own houses. The product will be handled and booked on the same basis as entertainment shorts are being booked, through Paramount exchanges, James A. Clark, manager of advertising sales, told Motion Picture Herald at the Atlantic City convention.

The plans for the 52 pictures call for release of one each week, starting August 1. Completion of details of the sponsored reel program was to be made at the discussion of the project at Friday's sessions.

"All 52 pictures will be sold as a block, with a very fair contract insofar as the exhibitor is concerned and providing for one picture cancellation," Clark declared.

Approximately 15 subjects of the group already have been produced and been shown, or are being shown in every community which has a Publix theatre. Emphasis is being placed upon entertainment interest, the aim in production being to make the advertising itself indirect as far as possible, while still presenting the advertising to the best interest of the advertiser.

"Entering into the field of distribution of such product," Clark said, "the quality, to be a success from the standpoint of the exhibitors responsibility to their public as well as satisfactory advertising to the advertiser, must be at least equal to that of the best entertainment short."

The program as to identity of the advertiser and the particular product to be advertised has not yet been worked out fully, he said, though 15 subjects have been completed. Each subject to be released must have the endorsement of the theatre department as to its entertainment value.

"The nature of the presentation of the advertising depends upon the particular subject" Clark pointed out. "Only the subject itself will decide whether it is to be presented orally, pictorially or in a symbolical form."

None of the pictures will be less than 600 feet, he said, the length above this minimum depending upon the nature of the sponsored product. This was his response to an observation regarding protests that have been made by exhibitors from time to time because of the difficulty of fixing "short reels" to the time length of the program.

Most of the subjects already produced have been treated in cartoon form as the most effective form for the particular advertising product. At the same time, Clark pointed out the difficulty of maintaining entertainment interest for a full thousand-foot reel in that form. "Above all," he said, "for the best results for exhibitor and advertiser alike, the predominant factor must be entertainment interest."

Clark is in charge of distribution of the sponsored reels, while Lou Diamond, assistant to Emanuel Cohen in the short feature dept., has supervision of their production.

WILLIAM FOX was also at Atlantic City, we were told—but at the Ritz-Carlton.

The clockwork precision that characterizes Paramount conventions was very much in evidence. The switchboard force sounded revielle in all rooms at 7:30. Breakfast was at 8 in the Embassy room and the forenoon session started promptly at 9:15 in the Renaissance room. Luncheon at 12:30, the afternoon session from 2 to 5:30. Dinner at 6:30, and screenings at 8. All the rest of the time was alloted to the conventioners to do with as they pleased.

"Oldest exchange manager in Albany and I've been there only two and a half years," declared Kenneth Robinson. Robinson and Marvin Kempner, manager at Buffalo, were buddies as usual.

One of the downtown restaurants had popcorn kernels in the salt shakers, presumably so that the seasoning would not run too fast. There's an example of efficiency in distribution.

Saw F. Wynne-Jones of UFA comfortably ensconced in a divan as the Wednesday afternoon session started. Wynne-Jones is just back from Berlin. Vice President Felix Maltiz was not in attendance.

Charles E. McCarthy was advised Wednesday morning that his father was critically ill and McCarthy left at once for Middleboro, Mass. The sudden turn of events necessitated a change in the program Thursday forenoon, when Mac was to have addressed the sales force. Russell Holman and A. O. Dillenbeck of the advertising department were assigned to add his material to their scheduled talks.

Twenty years ago to the very date, April 15, the original papers were signed in the organization of Famous Players Company. It was truly a jubilee meeting.

The hall for the business sessions was directly across from the eating room. Some of the late comers at breakfast were fletcherizing on their last bite as they stepped into the convention room for another variety of food. That's mixing business with pleasure.

Sidney R. Kent and Sam Dembow strode together into both Wednesday sessions.

George Akerson, former secretary to President Hoover, was asked what his official position would be, to which he replied, "I don't know. I'm just learning the business."

Akerson, as already announced, will be assistant to Adolph Zukor.

There were at least five attending from the home office section of the foreign department. George Welter was one of those who couldn't resist rising early to drink in some of the ocean breezes. And Max Fleischer was one of the hardy Norsemen who braved the cool sweep across the boardwalk late Tuesday night.

N. Kohn and S. Cohen got together so well that they almost agreed upon a single spelling of their names. Kohn is in the foreign office in New York after three and one-half years overseas. First he was in Argentina and later he became special representative at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Sammy Cohen is editor of Around the World, foreign house organ of Paramount, which is printed in six languages besides English. One page of the house organ is devoted to the language of the territory to which the copy goes, and that means French, Dutch, Spanish, Portuguese and Italian.

There were five in the delegation from San Antonio, headed by H. E. Pickett, branch manager . With him were I. W. McClintock, K. Chalman, Fred Larned and Slater O'Hare. The home office executives were to leave Atlantic City Friday for the convention of the Western division opening April 22 in San Francisco.

Speaking about truces, the Warner theatre was one of those that bore the greeting sign of "Welcome Paramount Publix Corporation Delegates," and the posters said something about "Fifty Million Frenchmen" so there can't be anything wrong about that.

INDEPENDENTS PLEAD FOR RELIEF

ON WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

DAN ROCHE pushed back the typewriter he has used at the Pathe exchange for the past six years, covered it with a crepe-colored rubber casing, and took his hat and departed. And with him, a week or so ago, went from Film Row most of the history and traditions of Chicago film publicity work. He was a trail-blazer and a rail-splitter in the days when, by the very potency of advance picture publicity which he created, all of Chicago theatre owners found themselves booking pictures they hadn't intended to play at all.

Those were the days when even Hizzoner, the Mayor, would lend himself innocently to Dan's naively planned purposes, and the local dailies would align themselves editorially with "campaigns," subtly tied in one way or another with some picture being publicized by Roche. Pages of pictures, columns of copy and Page One streamers were turned to the benefit of the box-office, and they repose today in one of the most amazing files of theatre publicity this or any other town ever will see. Dan is generally credited with selling Chicago exhibitors the idea of advertising in the dailies and, in consequence, building up the film advertising sections to much the same status as one sees them in Chicago papers today. That distinction may be disputed, but this much remains fact: there was no film advertising in Chicago dailies before Dan entered the field, and it was he to whom the newspaper's commission checks were made out once they did begin to appear.

When the Biograph was "taken" by local gunmen recently the Essaness moguls were inside the theatre watching the performance. When the loot was announced as $300 the full wrath of the circuit fell on the luckless managers' head. (The standing orders are to empty the cashbox into the safe every time the receipts hit $50.)

A preview of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" had been planned at the Castle theatre for officers of the various state, county and city chapters of the W. C. T. U. and Anti-Saloon League. It was called off when the print failed to arrive on time. The man to whom it had been entrusted for delivery was interrupted later while telling an amazing tale of bravery under fire to the bartender of a Loop speakeasy.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hawkins of Three Rivers, Mich., announced while visiting local exchanges that she had discovered a resort town of 6,000 *population in her native state that never has known a film theatre. Complete remodelling of Fox exchange will be completed this week. The alternations will hide Clyde Eckhardt pretty securely, and will change the entrance from 910 to 914. A branch manager will be moved here from Kansas City to enable Eckhardt to give more time to his district offices.

THE Adelphia, determined on double features, cut its admission scale to a quarter top and began a campaign in community newspapers against circuit theatres. The campaign parallels that recommended at the independents' convention here, stressing "guaranteed" programs at lower cost, the best sound reproduction and home ownership.

Norman Moray brought to town with him a print of the first Bobby Jones picture, "The Putters." It is a two-reeler and has Dick Barthelmess and other Warner-First National headliners in its cast. The succeeding Jones releases will be single reel pictures, and the supporting stars will vary in most of them. The reels are primarily entertainment and are not to be considered a form of golf instruction, Moray said.

KANE

Lack of Cooling System Proving Handicap

Double Featuring Becomes Boomerang To Small Exhibitor When B. & K. Makes It Deluxe Policy

Chicago (QP)—Relief measures now being sought indicate that the small Chicago exhibitor fears one of the leanest summers of his career. The small independent who, last fall, prided himself on the consternation his double feature bills were causing deluxe houses and various exchanges, and demanded a variety of privileges as his price for abandoning them, is now clearly anxious to have the double bill policy done away with on any basis at all. Declining grosses are not the only factor in his change of front. It is evident now that the small house without a cooling system will have little chance of getting many patrons who will sit through even one feature in hot summer weather. The double length programs in such houses would be a definite warning to patrons.

Recent adoption of the double feature policy at the Balaban & Katz Granada and Marbro deluxe houses is a further summer threat of serious import to the small exhibitor. These large houses with their refrigeration systems and low admission prices will make deep inroads into the summer revenues of the smaller theatres if double featuring is not abandoned. In its first week on a double feature policy the gross of the Granada showed an increase of $6,000. There was a proportionate increase at the Marbro. Both theatres have their pick of pre-release pictures, and may play many of them two weeks after the Loop. Many of those thus double featured at the Granada and Marbro will not be available to the smaller houses for double featuring until three and even four months later.

Where the small exhibitors once asked for bonuses, pre-release classifications and booking eliminations as their price for returning to a single feature policy, they now are literally begging for a "break."

The petition of the Allied Theatres of Illinois for a summer adjustment of projectionists' wages likewise reveals the situation for the small exhibitor. The independents estimate that as many as 80 small theatres may close here this summer if the adjustment is not granted. Ordinarily, no more than 25 or 30 theatres close here during the summer. The operators' local, to which the petition was addressed, has given no indication that it will agree to any wage reduction, or will sanction one man in the booth, even temporarily.

Finally, the vast increase in exhibitor petitions at exchanges for reductions of film rentals indicates that the situation is already serious for the independent.

Chicago House Sold

Chicago—The Lucille has been sold to Sam Kowal, formerly with the La Salle, who will operate. The deal was negotiated through Albert Goldman.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

With Lent drawing the box office gross down only 8 per cent below average, the present period of supposed depression has been less severe than during the past few years. During the current week, however, receipts have shown an upward trend, indicating that the Easter period is a thing of the past insofar as the motion picture theatre is concerned. The current week, with few exceptions, has been a good one for the theaters, especially with the product now playing.

MUSIC AND TALENT

10 RKO THEATRES ADOPT 8-ACT PLAN

STAGE SHOWS

Philadelphia Fox

Week ending April 10

Fanchon & Marco's "Enchantment Idea" is a colorful show with several interesting features and some exceptionally good Oriental talent.

Ron and Don at the organ sing several songs specially popular with the audience, which joins in singing "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone," "You're the One I Care For" and a song made up of popular song titles and sung to the tune of "I'm Alone Because I Love You."

The stage setting for "Enchantment Idea" is suitable for a story from the "Arabian Nights," with a wrought iron grille forming a background for a magnificent throne on which sits an Eastern potentate in full regalia. The Sunkist Beauties in beautiful Oriental costumes add color to the scene and a distinctly modern touch is introduced when Jack Lester tap dances into the festivities. The Sunkist Beauties later appear as women of the harem, wearing long chiffon skirts and veils and dancing in many-hued lights, showing the marvelous effects of blending colors.

Sanami and Company present an interesting act with a decidedly Oriental touch. A red spotlight on a darkened stage reveals a four-armed statue of Buddha. The arms weave gracefully in and out, up and down, in time to Oriental music. Then the Buddha leaps to the stage and dances a very active dance, always covered by the red spotlight. A gong is sounded and a goddess appears on the pedestal bathed in a green light. The two join in a weird dance, then return to the pedestal and resume the statuesque appearance.

Jue Fong, a Chinese boy dressed in a gorgeously embroidered Chinese kimono, sings several tenor solos and announces that his last number will be one learned in his native land at his mother's knee.

The three Meyakos present their act against a black drop ornamented with a richly embroidered conventional design. The male member of the group provides very peppy music to which his two sisters dance. They are Japanese wearing their beautiful native costumes, and give an Oriental atmosphere to the program in spite of the fact that they do some very American hand turns and splits.

The Sunkist Beauties, wearing blond wigs and long yellow dresses, dance very effectively, apparently before a large mirror, but later fourteen instead of seven Beauties step out and the reflections prove to be very much alive.

Togo, the tightrope walker, gives the final thrill to the audience when he calmly opens a large Japanese parasol, tests a rope stretched from the stage to the balcony, and, dexterously balancing himself, walks to the balcony. He then slides down the rope backwards, landing safely on the stage to the relief of the audience.

Max Bradfield and the Fox Orchestra play "Body and Soul."

Ron and Don

These personable young chaps, Ron (at the left) and Don (at the right), have recently completed their second engagement of 10 weeks at the Brooklyn Fox theatre as featured organists. After successfully featuring themselves and their own organ creation, the "Baby Console," in many Paramount and Fox theatres throughout the country they are now inaugurating a new policy of distinctive organ presentations at the Fox theatre, Philadelphia. These boys are likeable and have made hundreds of friends in the music business and thousands in people who have been their audiences.

Success of New Schedule Prompts Keith Orpheum Company To Expand It

By ED DAWSON

The immediate success of the 8-act bill, which was given a test run at the RKO theatre, Los Angeles, the week of March 5, has prompted its adoption since then by nine other houses on the Radio Keith Orpheum circuit.

RKO officials state that since the adoption of the eight-act program to supplement the film fare business "has been immense" in these houses.

Theatres, and the dates on which the eight-act policy was inaugurated, follow:

RKO, Los Angeles, March 5; Golden Gate, San Francisco, March 11; Orpheum, Oakland, March 11; Riverside, Milwaukee, April 4; Rivoli, Toledo, April 4; Orpheum, Seattle, April 3; Orpheum, Tacoma, April 10; Orpheum, Salt Lake City, April 1; Orpheum, Omaha, April 10; Portland, Oregon, April 16. The Keith, Boston, is now under consideration.

With the reported success of the eight-act policy, it is understood that RKO executives are now discussing the probability of sending out the acts as a unit, a plan adopted by the Shuberts at the time they sought to compete with the Orpheum. No definite decision has been reached, however.

Vaudeville is now playing 68 RKO theatres. In a majority of these the five-act bill is adhered to.

Fox West Coast, RKO House In Presentation Competition

Portland, Ore.—Fox West Coast and RKO Orpheum are engaged in spirited presentation competition. The Paramount ran an Easter concert with orchestra of 30.

RKO Orpheum answered that success with a bill of eight vaudeville acts and Mel Blanc's enlarged band. Almost all union musicians are now employed.

ORGAN SOLOS

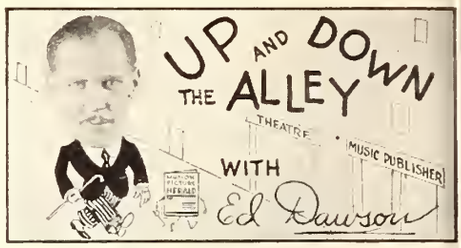
OLLIE WALLACE (Portland, Ore., Fox Paramount), for his Easter week organ offering, which was an outstanding contribution to the musical program, played "Ave Maria" from the opera "Cavalleria Rusticana," followed by "The Palms." It was a beautiful story the organ told as the master organist touched its keys. But when he finished one woman did not applaud. Her face, which had been crossed with lines of care, had smoothed as she listened. Something came to her that meant more than comfort. It was as though she had found a hold again upon the hope that does not fail. Her hands were gripping the seat as the notes passed into silence, but on her face was the peace that is beyond understanding. And the organist may never know.

ADA RIVES (Loew's State, New Orleans), has "Baking a Song Cake" as the title for her organ solo and each one of the four songs she introduces, to an audience which is willing to sing, takes a nice hand. They are "Cheerful Little Earful," "Walking My Baby Back Home," "I'm Alone Because I Love You," and "I'll Be Blue Just Thinking of You." The song slides are attractive and the routine is well handled.

HAROLD RIEDER, GABRIAL HINES (Newark, N. J., Branford) organist and orchestra conductor, respectively, presented the ancient organ novelty called, "Opera vs. Jazz" but they have modernized it and furnished this audience with 12 minutes of enjoyable entertainment. After a short introduction in which slides inform the audience that a controversy between the organist and musical conductor had been in full swing and that the organist thought the audience preferred "jazz" and that the conductor knew that they wanted "opera." The orchestra, Mr. Hines leading, played many operatic numbers with Mr. Rieder at the organ, breaking in on every 6 or 8 bars with the playing of popular numbers. The entire overture was done in a showmanlike manner and the audience enjoyed it.

MILTON CHARLES (Mastbaum, Philadelphia), at the organ, first sings "By the River St. Marie," which is acted on the stage as he sings it. He also gives a request program of songs: "Walking My Baby Back Home," "Two Hearts," "River and Me," and "Wabash Moon," accompanying himself on the organ.

ART BROWN (Burlington, Vt., Flynn) the most popular entertainer in these parts, presented another of his clever novelty organ presentations, this week, entitled "A Patch Quilt of Songs." Opening with an introductory slide to the effect that the songs played and sung by the audience would form the quilt. The following numbers were used: "Sleepy Town Express," "Lonesome Lover," a special called "A Patch from Grandma's Quilt" to the tune, "Curse of an Aching Heart," "My Love for You," a lisping chorus to the tune, "They Satisfy," and a closing chorus of "King's Horses." After each chorus was sung, the title sheet of the song was shown, adding one to the other until the entire six titles were on the quilt and at finish a flash slide of all titles with writing "Our Quilt Is Finished," on it. Brown is also doing very big with his 15 minute daily concerts of classic, semi-classic, novelty and popular songs.



BILL MEEDER (Richmond Hill, N. Y., RKO) presented an original novelty this week, which he entitled, "My Ideal." (Incidentally giving the song of that name one of the best plugs a song could get.) He opens by playing a straight spot solo of "My Ideal," and a second chorus for the audience to join in singing. The balance of the program consisted of appropriate songs which told the story of "My Ideal." The songs were: "My Ideal," "You Gotta Have Love," "Beautiful Lady," "Any Little Girl," and "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver." Meeder played each of the songs in a most pleasing combination of stops and received a tremendous reception for his efforts.

MAURICE (Loew's State, Providence) guest organist employed a stunt that produced more spontaneous singing than has been heard in this city in some time. This personable young fellow always opens his acts by slowly rising from the pit and breaking into the strains of "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here." To give impetus to the community singing Maurice declared that he would divide the house against itself into wets and drys. It was somewhat surprising to find the drys fairly well represented although the wet chorus predominated. Maurice varies his programs by employing a straight classical bill one week and a novelty program and ensemble song the next. He is rated one of the most popular organists ever to play Providence, and has received high praise in the dailies.

HERBIE (Saenger, New Orleans) delivers a repeat of requested song melodies and proves that they love his fare. His organ solo is a request to sing, and sing they do to "Just a Gigolo," "Mmm, Mmm, Mmm, Would You Like to Take a Walk," a timely song dedicated to Governor Long, senator-elect, who indulged in an argument recently with the governors of other states about how potlikker should be taken, the virtues of dunking being discussed to the melody of "When It's Spring Time in the Rockies," and a plug for straw hat day to the tune of "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver." Applause and singing, loud.

WESLEY LORD (Paramount, Omaha) at the console presents "A Spanish Fantasy," in which are introduced three popular melodies of old Spain. The first is the "Spanish Dance" by Moszkowski and the others are "La Golondrina" and "La Paloma." The introduction and the three titles are projected upon the screen before and during the concert. Following the short concert, Lord plays Lohengrin's "Wedding March."

Howard Newmiller, concert pianist and for more than three years musical director at WENR, has joined the staff of WBBM as director of the Artists' Bureau of that station. Newmiller comes to WBBM with a long list of accomplishments to his credit. Even before the advent of radio he was widely known among the followers of good music. Back in 1924, and in the days of WEBH, Newmiller organized the first radio light opera company. He has been actively associated with the world of microphones ever since. . . . No figures have ever been prepared to show the numbers of babies named after radio announcers but Jean Paul King, ace NBC mikeman, believes that he has a record of some kind in that respect. During the past six months King has been informed of an even half dozen babies who bear the name of Jean Paul, after the parents' favorite radio announcer. . . . An old favorite, the "Williams Oil-O-Matic," returned to the air last Sunday afternoon for another series of broadcasts. . . . Two Westerners, who came North to strike it rich, are Charlie and Gene, or the Messrs. Kretsinger. They are busily decorating WBBM programs with colorful songs and bright sayings. . . . Pat Flanagan, veteran sports announcer, caught the flu and then just as quickly cured himself of it. Reason? How? Why, Pat, along with his other accomplishments of speaking Gaelic, studied medicine, taught chiropractics and conducted physical culture classes.

Guy Lombardo and his Ace orchestra, the Royal Canadians, who have created what is known as the Lombard-tempo, claims that jazz of the past decade has been too fast and too headlong. "Jazz should take it easy and soothe the ear with slow, billowing, undulations of rhythm. It should make you want to relax and be nonchalant, he says. . . . Ward Byron of the New York NBC studios is in town to visit his good friend Don Marcotte. Ward is a likable chap and we had hopes of him making his stay a little longer, but this he was unable to do as the time allowed him for his trip was limited. . . . The Chicago offices of Remick Music Corporation are now located in the Woods theatre building. . . . Joe Koestner is again conducting the Williams Oil-O-Matic program, every Sunday afternoon from the Chicago studios of National Broadcasting Company.

Hal Pearl, Chicago's youngest and most handsome organist, continues to please the audience at the Sheridan theatre with his original slide novelties. . . . Louis Panico leaves the Canton Tea Garden on April 24th, to open the Playmore Ballroom May 2d. Leaving there for Dallas, Texas, and other parts west. Louis has a great band and should go over with a big bang. He has the best wishes of countless admirers from all parts of the country and, of course, I am one of them. . . . Henri Gendron opens the New Oriental Gardens in a very short time. Henri has been booked there until May 1, 1932. The popularity of this band has grown in leaps and bounds, and Henri will no doubt be a big attraction in this new spot. . . . Maurie Sherman, one of the sweetest orchestra leaders in Chicago, is in seventh heaven lately. The reason is that his pugilistic friend, Tuffy Griffiths (who is also a ten-round "bike" rider) outpointed King Levinsky, the slugger, who, when able to connect with his right hand, puts his opponent in a coma—I might add, puts a period on him for that usually is the end of the fight.

Ann Codee

Ann Codee, whose likeness appears above, is starting out on another RKO vaudeville route with her partner, Frank Orth. Their bookings are for a period of forty weeks in which time they will play all the key cities' deluxe houses. This popular comedy team have recently completed their thirty-sixth Warner Vitaphone "funmaker" short subject in all of which they have been starred. After this tour, which they are starting at the New York RKO Jefferson, they will continue in screen comedies in the East and West Coast studios.

STAGE SHOWS

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending April 17

Belinda, the beautiful boilermaker, has nothing on the painters and bricklayers, interpreted by the Fred Evans Girls in "Paintin' the Town," current Publix Unit. The girls are clad in yellow silk overalls, carry banners and demand eight hours' pay and two hours' work. This is one of the brightest and most colorful flashes yet staged in this Florentine Palace of Splendors (apologies to Pop Estes, gentlemanly agent of the press, for stealing his verbal thunder).

The bill is a humdinger. The stage show, acting as it were as a background for the chorus, was exceptionally good, particular attention being paid to Werner, black-face comedian, in a clever act which brought down the house, clean as a hound's tooth and sharp as a safety razor blade fresh from the factory, followed by Karavaeff, a half pint whose dancing was a marvel.

A bright spot is the vocal and terpsichorean effort of The Four Co-Eds, a quartet, whose voices really blended.

Boyd Senter, musician extraordinary, tooted several instruments of torture, notably the deadly saxaphone, in a manner that received much deserved applause. In fact, the gentleman is an entire brass band in himself, with the exception of the bass drum which was not in evidence.

The Fred Evans Girls, the chorus, come in for their share of praise with a handsome wardrobe which they donned occasionally.

And last but not least, Lou Forbes, master of ceremonies, with his blue satin panties, who, when the members of the stage band struck and refused to play, joined them, for, according to his own statement, he too was a good and true union man, and offered to prove his statement by showing his union suit. They took his word for it and let it go at that.

A unique feature was the overture, which stopped the show. The lights were turned off. Then appeared Saenger Grand Orchestra outlined in garments as white as the driven snow, the Pittsburg brand excepted. It was a pretty effect and elicited much comment.

Herbie at the organ again demonstrated his ability as an organist and a good fellow, as the audience readily joins in with his choruses.

Chicago Oriental

Week ending April 16

"Town Topics," a Paul Oscard production, introduced to Chicago at the Oriental this week, falls short of the average entertainment standard established by recent stage presentations at this theatre. Lacking both an outstanding name attraction and anything original or spectacular in the three acts presented, it appears obvious that Balaban & Katz contented themselves with the thought that local interest in the feature picture, "Three Girls Lost in Chicago" (Fox), would satisfy enough customers to maintain business at its customary level. Which, at the first of the week, it didn't appear to be doing.

"Town Topics" opens with the customary ballet of 12 girls who, garbed in lion skins and with bird song effects by the orchestra, comprise a rather confusing introduction to a presentation of that title. The dance routine gives way to Benny Meroff and his orchestra, on stage for the entire program. A rendition of "Lady, Play Your Mandolin" by this aggregation draws its full measure of approval from the audience.

Grauman, Hesse & Valle follow with dance routines and close with a slow motion fight a la terpsichore which is capably done and earned the enthusiastic applause given it. Broadus Earle, juvenile violinist, played two classical selections with piano accompaniment and, for an encore, played "When Irish Eyes are Smiling," singing the chorus for an exit.

The ballet, seated as an audience in an elevated balcony at the rear of the stage during Earle's act, did a hand-and-arm routine in sitting postures. The stunt depended largely on the color contrasts of black-gloved arms against a background of white evening gowns, and as entertainment was little better than nil.

Meroff picks up the show thereafter with a few stories, incidentally the only attempt at comedy in the entire production. Hap Hazzard, laconic sailor, has a juggling routine and a turn at the tight-rope, interspersed with a few not too wisecracks, and manages to please. The ballet returns for the ensemble.

The production lags because of too much sameness to the acts. It is top heavy with dances, lacks comedy, good songs and originality. Many of the customers were inclined to remember other engagements during the 45 minutes of its tenure on stage and departed to fulfill them. It is the opinion of this reviewer that their judgments were not far amiss.

Philadelphia Earle

Week ending April 3

Teddy Joyce's "Porcelain and Jade" was an artistically staged and colorful presentation. The act opened with the Earle stage band in colorful Chinese costumes grouped about a pagoda, with a grouping of jade trees on each side and huge jade dragons in the foreground. On the steps of the temple a Chinese mandarin and girl sang "Sing Song Girl," accompanied by the band. The Anatole Dancers in striking orange and gold costumes with picturesque hats and great orange fans tripped gaily down from the rear of the stage and gave a graceful toe dance to a Chinese melody.

The acrobatic dancing of Maureen and Sonny drew considerable applause. Larry Adler, youthful harmonica player, demonstrated the possibilities of that insignificant instrument.

Teddy Joyce, master of ceremonies, put the stage band through its paces with "Hit the Bottle." Placing a small bottle on the stage, he danced circles around it. The stage then was darkened and the after effects of hitting the bottle were shown as Joyce and several members of the band were pursued by a ghostly figure.

Douglas Stanbury, of the Roxy Gang, possesses a rare combination of pleasing voice and personality and sang two solos, "I'm Marching Home to You" and "I'd Rather Have You."

Vox and Walters, ventriloquists, past masters of this always interesting though old fashioned type of entertainment, gave very realistic impersonations, particularly Miss Walters' imitation of a sobbing infant.

The Anatole Dancers in groups of four, the first in orange and gold costumes, the second in pale green and silver and the third in lavender and silver, and all with pointed Chinese hats, danced a series of beautiful Oriental dances.

Gene Dennis, the psychic wonder girl who has had such a phenomenal success at the Earle, continued to answer questions on every conceivable subject for her seventh week at this theatre.

Jamaica Valencia

Week ending April 10

This week's stageshow, "Nifties of 1931," produced by Victor Hyde opens to a night-club setting in which Al Wohlman, master of ceremonies, introduces show as a young fellow does a difficult Russian dance routine.

He is followed by John and Mary Jennings who do well with their execution of a modern ballroom waltz. Al had the audience right with him and laughing at some very old jokes and a few new ones. His impersonations, during his singing, of well known characters got him a fine hand.

Cecile Blair, a pretty and athletic young girl, stops the show with her difficult routine of acrobatic dancing, but begs off an encore, though the audience wanted to see her do more.

Felovis, international juggler, proved himself a first rate entertainer and received a well-deserved hand.

Three young ladies (names not caught) worked hard and sold themselves with their good routines of tap, buck, toe and dancing on their hands. They first worked together and then individually.

Fred (Pansy) Sanborn, comedy xylophone artist, held up the comedy end of the bill, nicely. He is a good musician, and a good comedian.

The entire company, all dancing, closed the bill. The show, as a whole is mediocre and though each of the acts, individually were good and did well, the show lacked the finesse of the usual stageshows here.

Newark Branford

Week ending April 16

The stageshow, "Down Came McGinty," featured the new master of ceremonies, Pat Lane, a personable young chap, who is on his second week here and is doing very well. Pat leads the band for the opening act, the Murial Abbott dancers, who offer a well-routined "strut" number to a good reception. Phil Arnold proved to be an entertaining dancer. His singing takes away from his applause and he would do much better to stick strictly to dancing, which he does at a furious pace.

Don Cummings, lariat artist gets good applause for his tricks and dancing with ropes. Bobbe Lee, a nice appearing young lady, assists Don in the performing of a song and dance. Don's twirling of two ropes and dancing in, around and through them gets him his best reception.

Wilton Crawley, colored comedian, clarinetist and acrobat, did well. He plays one of the "hottest" clarinets this reviewer has heard.

Pat Lane, m.c., and nine of the stageband come on for 15 minutes of nonsense and comedy. Pat is making himself popular here with his ready wit, and informal manner of talking and acting. The boys sing and play, also have the audience sing to popular numbers, words of which were flashed on a small screen.

Sugar Marcelle, blues singer, earned an encore with her singing of a very suggestive song called, "You've Gotta Have It in Hollywood." Willie, West and McGinty close the bill with a pantomime comedy act which is a take-off on carpenters building a house. This act gets loads of laughs and rates them. It is one of the funniest acts this house has ever played.

Answer to Question No. 73

BY F. H. RICHARDSON

The question was: Tell us just what arrangement you have made for replacing a burned out or otherwise defective exciting lamp in the least possible time. The answer will, of course, vary with the type of equipment used. Describe the process of adjusting the Western Electric exciting lamp in the spare socket, so that it will be ready for immediate use. What would you do after you had completed the adjustment of a spare exciting lamp in the socket?

The following made excellent answers: Lester Borst, C. Rau and S. Evans, Earl Boyer, Herman Billings, Thomas Sutting, Philip D. Boyce, S. Evans, Wm. Gibson, Andy Richards, G. E. Doe, John Williams, Tom Turk, A. R. Reisman, R. B. Whitnah, Thomas Peters, T. L. Woods, George Thompson, John Doe, P. L. Topeing, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Neut Van Vaulkenburg, James McGuire, Andrew Phillips, Robert Dodson, N. D. Garling, F. T. Jenkins, S. Simms, L. MacArthur, Frank D. Dinsel, S. Kliene, George L. Walker, G. T. Baldy, A. R. Reisman, Claud Addington, D. Dennis, Harry Crowley, Lewis Henderson, F. T. Earneman, Robert S. Hackett and John C. Norris.

There were more than 100 other answers which were correct enough as to answering the various questions, but poorly and rather carelessly composed. All the foregoing were correct and well and carefully composed.

I have selected the answers of Rau and Evans, Earl Boyer and Herman Billings, since they each deal with the matter excellently and from slightly different angles.

First, Messrs. Rau and Evans, Capitol theatre, Victoria, B.C., say:

"(A)—We are working on RCA Photophone, Type C-1, equipment, in which three exciting lamps are mounted on a turret in the sound head. Naturally, only one of the lamps is used at a time, but all are adjusted so that in case of one going bad, either of the other two may be rotated into working position in an instant. The only adjustment necessary when putting the lamps in the sockets, is the up-and-down (or vertical) adjustment. The adjustment must be tested daily, in case the knurled clamping nut has become loosened. The lamps are adjusted to give a perfectly round circle of light on a card placed between the sound gate and photo-cell housing.

"(B) In Western Electric equipment a spare bracket, with exciting lamp already properly adjusted therein, is always kept on hand. in case the exciting lamp in use goes bad. This lamp, in its bracket, is mounted in the sound head and correctly adjusted beforehand. First, the projectionist must make sure that the lamp is so placed in its socket that the filament will be perfectly parallel with the slit when it, the lamp, is tightened in place. Next the vertical adjustment is made so that the light beam is centered vertically on the slit in the lens tube. This adjustment is clamped securely when completed. Next comes the sidewise adjustment, which is accomplished by moving the lamp sidewise until the light beam is centered horizontally upon the slit—that is to say, the light is spread equally at the slit and equally beyond each end of it. This adjustment is then clamped securely.

"Next, the lamp is adjusted so as to secure the sharpest possible focus at the slit, and the adjustment screw is clamped securely in place.

"To check the various adjustments, a white card is placed in front of the sound aperture, on which should appear an evenly illuminated, oval spot of light, free from all shadows and well focused.

"When the lamp has been thus properly adjusted, its supporting bracket may be slipped off its supporting pins and stored where it may be quickly and conveniently reached when needed, and where its globe will accumulate no dirt or dust.

"(C) When the adjustment of the spare lamp has been completed as before set forth, and the white card test has been made, it should then be tested for sidewise adjustment of the slit light beam upon the sound track of the film, to make certain it is neither too far to the right or the left. This may be done by threading negative film into the sound gate, with emulsion side toward the light. With the exciting lamp on, let the light shine upon the stationary film for 10 seconds, then move the film slightly and make another similar exposure. Do this several times. Upon removing the film, tiny lines will be observed upon its surface. If these lines be carefully and accurately matched with the sound band upon a piece of sound film, it may be determined whether or not the slit beam be correctly centered."

There, that is one answer. Now let us hear from brother Boyer, Poteau, Oklahoma, who says: "On account of the number of operations involved in the proper adjustment of an exciting lamp, and the ever present possibility that one may have to be replaced during a show, it is very necessary that there be a lamp at hand which may be instantly slipped into position, with assurance that its performance will be perfect.

"This may be accomplished by correctly adjusting a spare lamp in each spare bracket supplied. To do it, first loosen the lamp socket clamping screws and turn the lamp filament until it is perpendicular to the axis of the lens tube. (What is meant there is that the filament must be so placed that it will be exactly at right angles with the optical axis of the system. Ed.) Next, keeping this adjustment intact, move the lamp up or down until the filament image is centered vertically upon the slit in the lens tube, which latter may, of course, be observed through the window in the side of the tube. Tighten the clamping screw.

"Next, loosen the screw which clamps the lamp socket holder, and so regulate the distance of the lamp from the lens tube that by moving the socket holder endwise, that the sharpest possible focus is obtained at the slit. When this adjustment is properly made the illumination at the slit will be at its brightest. Tighten clamp screw when the adjustment is complete.

"Make sidewise adjustment of the lamp by releasing sidewise adjustment clamp screw and turning the side adjustment knob until the filament image is adjusted centrally upon the slit. In making this adjustment, when trying to move the bracket away from you it will be found necessary to press steadily upon the knob at the same time you turn it, since otherwise the bracket will not move. Tighten the clamp screw when you have done.

"If making one of the adjustments serves to upset any adjustments previously made, it will, of course, be necessary to go back and remake them. When all adjustments have been correctly made the filament image will be bright, sharp and perfectly centered upon the slit. The bracket may then be slipped bodily off its supporting pins, with care not to disturb any of its adjustments, and stored away ready for use. If possible, keep the lamp in the bracket in which it is adjusted. If this cannot for any reason be done, then be sure to mark the lamp for identification, as it would not line up right, save by improbable accident, if used in any other bracket. The bracket and lamp should, of course, be kept where it may be reached instantly, so that in emergency it may be installed in the least possible time."

There, this has strung out longer than I had thought it would, so we must omit the answer of brother Billings after all. Sorry.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 79—Under what condition is it desirable to have two sets of sound projector horns? What should be done when the horns are flown to clear stage? When sound projectors are mounted upon horn towers or dolly trucks, what should be done to insure correct relocation after they have been moved? Why should the theatre manager make periodic inspection of horn location where they are moved about on the stage?

DEMONSTRATE NEW FIRE-PROOF CABINET

RECENTLY your editor was invited to attend what proved to be a very remarkable demonstration. It was a fire test staged by the manufacturers of the "Neumade Fume-Tite Vented Fire Proof Film Cabinet," manufactured by the Nuemade Products Corporation and designed for the storage of films in theatre projection rooms.

The demonstration was staged on a vacant lot. It was attended by interested city officials, supervisors of projection, by several leading New York City projectionists and various prominent people connected with the industry.

First of all a complete cabinet, in which was stored 16,000 feet of inflammable film, was completely covered with a pyramid of boxes and other inflammable material. This pile was drenched with gasoline and ignited. Believe it or not, it certainly did make a roaring and very hot fire.

The film cabinet with its contents was located in the center of a great column of blaze reaching at least 20 feet into the air. The top of the cabinet vent flue was filled with brick. When they became visible in the welter of flame it seemed as though smoke issued from the crevices between them, hence there was much speculation as to what would be found when the cabinet door was finally opened.

When the fire had died down, city firemen stationed nearby with a hose extinguished the fire and cooled the outer surface of the cabinet with water. Your editor made it his business to be right up in the front row when the door was opened, only to view all those eight reels of film in apparently absolutely perfect condition. And it was, too, for I examined the film after its removal. It was not even perceptably warm, though the chill had been taken off the metal rods separating the reels. The rods could not, however, be said to be even warm. Just the chill taken off them.

Next, to prove the film to be really inflammable, the reels were removed, some of the film unwound and the whole eight reels set on fire. Wow, was there a blaze! If you had seen that crowd, including your editor, hastily backing away you would have had a good laugh, and have concluded there really was no doubt as to the inflammability of the film. Some small boys, located in advance of the front row, of course, took their departure at a gallop.

To complete the demonstration a section of vent flue about 6 by 8 inches in size, by maybe 8 feet long, was affixed to the cabinet vent opening. Eight reels, holding approximately 16,000 feet of film, were placed in the cabinet, set on fire and the door closed and locked. This demonstration was remarkable as illustrating the high pressure generated by the gases emited by film burning in a confined space. So great was this pressure that a straight column of fire belched from that vent flue with a loud roar, mounted straight into the air against a rather strong wind, retaining the rectangular form of the flue almost perfectly for at least six feet above the opening. It was estimated, and conservatively, too, I believe, that the pressure inside the cabinet could not have been less than fifty pounds per square inch.

New Fire-Proof Cabinet

Your editor afterward examined the cabinet carefully. No damage had apparently been done to it, except, of course, the discoloration of its interior walls caused by the smoke and gasses.

I can personally testify to the fact that this cabinet certainly is thoroughly fireproof. Moreover, since the vent flue is presumed to lead to the open air outside the theatre walls, or up through the roof, all smoke and gasses, together with a very large percentage of the heat, will be carried away outside the theatre.

The device is made of sheet steel. It is lined with some very effective form of heat resisting, or perhaps I would better say heat insulating material, the same being something like one and one-quarter inches thick, or possibly a little heavier than that. It is supplied with two small steel drawers and three pockets, presumably designed to hold carbons.

Requiem

HOLLYWOOD

Warren Nolan is dead. In a one-paragraph box, at the bottom of one of the smaller local papers, was printed the Associated Press item that "Warren Nolan, one of New York's best liked press agents," had succumbed after a mastoid operation.

Cold, impersonal, in eight-point type, without even a subhead. Warren Nolan is dead. "One of New York's best liked press agents."

Maybe you didn't know the man. He worked for United Artists, a huge, hearty fellow about six feet tall, weighing over 200 pounds. He died at 27 years of age, leaving a widow and a 3-year-old child.

If your business took you to 729 Seventh avenue, New York, you knew Nolan. In a crowded elevator of irritable people there would always be one fellow laughing. That was Nolan. The biggest men in the industry were at his elbow. Executives whose salaries approximated half a million dollars a year would come to New York, rush to Nolan for counsel and friendship, and think nothing of trusting important decisions to a man who was only a press agent.

Only a press agent. How many stars owe their success to 27-year-old Warren Nolan only the movie Lord knows. Insiders need only remember the sensational campaign Nolan launched for an unknown player in "Alibi"—Chester Morris.

If we remember the number right, Warren worked on the twelfth floor, at the end of a loft, in a compartment with one secretary. No assistant, no staff. Whatever was to be done came from Nolan himself. At 9:30 he was at his desk. At 9:30 in the evening he was still at his desk.

Work—work—the man was possessed of the most amozing capacity for sheer labor I have ever seen. All day long his telephones connected him with executives throughout the country; arranging tieups, exploitation campaigns, radio hookups; no one knows exactly how he accomplished the miracles he did. Whenever you entered his office, whether it was noon or 8 o'clock in the evening, you could find Nolan telling whimsical little stories to some gentleman whose name was probably on the front page that day.

Warren Nolan is gone. Brilliant, young, loved by every one with whom he came in contact, a man with a future so glaringly bright there was no post beyond his reach. The man was more than brilliant; he was a genius.

At 27 he had already attended Notre Dame, Fordham, Georgetown Law and Saint Viator. H. L. Mencken wanted him in the Mercury, Sherwood Anderson begged him to write. Collier's, Vanity Fair, the Times Magazine Section, Theatre Arts, the Paris Comet, and many other magazines and newspapers saw his work.

When I was assistant to Quinn Martin on the New York World Nolan's copy would come to the dramatic desk with a distinction no single press agent could approach. If Nolan wrote it, it was worth printing. He was a press agent whose articles were sought after!

This last year, as though sensing a premonition of his fate, Nolan wrote a novel. It will be published posthumously, an ironic finale to a career which should have just begun.

For those who knew him, 729 Seventh avenue will never be the same. Each time the elevator opens at his floor they will see him standing there, his face ruddy and gleaming, a smile and an offer to lunch for every one in the car. Nolan and his quips, his good cheer, his solicitousness over your health; they are gone. Let any man be out of work that he knew, no matter how slightly, and he would manage to catch the fellow alone in a corner and push a 10-dollar bill in his hand.

Which brings to mind the real greatness of Press Agent Nolan. It is fairly simple for a great executive, with power and favors around him which he must disperse in his regular business affairs, to be loved by those whom he benefits. But for a little cog in a great wheel, who could offer you nothing in material gain, for him to be loved—that, indeed, is greatness.

Warren Nolan is dead. The industry is much the poorer. For three weeks I put off writing this for fear the man was not prominent enough. I am sorry now. It was stupid and shortsighted of me. Warren Nolan was an important man in the industry.

Good Program Pictures Satisfying Public

Day of Spectacular Production Seems Fading, and Owners of Super Houses Wonder

By EDWARD CHURCHILL

Hollywood (QP)—While production of program pictures of the better type continues apace, there is and apparently will be a shortage of special class productions destined for premieres in the deluxe two-a-day houses in Los Angeles and along Broadway as well as at other major theatres throughout the country. The result is that exhibitors are wondering what to do with the two-a-day houses.

The situation is unusual, one which the industry has not previously faced, as such a tremendous problem. The truth of the matter seems to be that the public is getting such a good quality of fare at regular rates in program houses that a spectacular production does not draw enough additional money to make that production worth while to the producers.

The day of the spectacular picture—referring to such vehicles as "Quo Vadis," "Ben-Hur," "Intolerance," "Birth of a Nation," "The Big Trail," "Cimarron"—apparently is fading. At any rate, a survey of the production programs of the major studios reveals a dearth of the type. Producers seem satisfied to make program pictures of good qualities—the best in history.

On the Western slope, the condition is particularly acute. Fox West Coast officials admit frankly that they do not know where they will turn for spectacular productions after "Dirigible" has left the Chinese theatre in Hollywood, and "Seed," the Universal sensation, has concluded its run at the Carthay Circle.

CIRCUS

Circus pictures are missing this season, the only one now released being "Mickey's Crusaders," done by Darmour, and featuring Mickey McGuire. Local exhibitors here are exploiting the comedy to the limit, one house staging a tent show in the lobby.

RELEASE

Vera Reynolds, Gwen Lee, Wheeler Oakman and Thomas Jackson are featured players in "The Lawless Woman," a Chesterfield production which just has been completed at Tec-Art Studios. Richard Thorpe directed for immediate release.

BENNETT'S NEXT

"Dangerous to Love," an original story by Charles Behan and Austin Parker, is the next Constance Bennett vehicle for RKO-Pathe. Parker will come west to adapt. It will follow "The Common Law."

MORE AIRPLANES

Speaking of airplanes, this reminds us that Harry Bannister and Ann Harding soon will arrive in Hollywood in their new Bellanca 6-place cabin monoplane which was delivered to them at the Detroit aviation show. They took it to New York for a visit before returning here.

STAR-GAZER

VACATION

Every once in a while Wallace Smith, just at present a scenarist in the employ of Radio Pictures, becomes annoyed at the howling of a night-roaming cat in the neighborhood or at something equally important, and goes to Europe or South America to forget all about the affair. He and his wife have a standing agreement that whenever either becomes dissatisfied with the way the sun settles into the Pacific or the price of grapefruit they will stack all their furniture in the backyard, pour kerosene on it, and take the next boat, train, airplane or tandem bicycle away from here.

Technically, such an exodus is referred to by Mr. Smith as a vacation, but actually life is a perpetual vacation for him. Artist of note and writer of merit, he toils not for profit and cares almost nothing for material possessions other than tickets to some place else. He locks novels he knows will sell in vaults—he has had four published—because he isn't quite ready to have anyone read them. He tears up contracts and turns down jobs. In short, he thumbs his nose at all proverbs, such as the one about the rolling stone which gathers no moss—he wants to know whothell wants moss, anyway—and figuratively thumbs his nose at all the known rules of success.

He has been a newspaper copy boy (at 14), a pinch-hitting sports reporter (at 15) and manager of the Washington offices of a large Chicago newspaper (at 19). He has played a part in several Mexican revolutions, is a semi-professional horseman, rides in the Pendleton roundup (an achievement of note) and designed the famous Pendleton poster of the bucking horse.

DRIFTER

He has been a roving correspondent, contributor to national magazines, and an author of fiction and articles. It cost him $1,000 to spend 18 hours a day illustrating a book written by Ben Hecht. The Federal authorities condemned his art as being less than that. He worked to learn to draw and never learned to draw in school because he and his instructors didn't agree.

He has had five or six careers instead of one. He is willing to discuss some of the incidents in some of the careers and remains silent about the rest. A commentary on one closed chapter of his life is found in the delicate suggestion embodied in a remark made to him by a Mexican diplomat who visited the United States.

"How are conditions in Mexico?" asked Smith. "I'm thinking of visiting the country again."

The Mexican shrugged his shoulders and lifted his eyebrows.

"Need I remind you," he retorted, "that there are people in Mexico who still remember you?"

AMBITIONS

Mr. Smith has done just about everything he has wished to do, to date, except one thing. He always has wanted to be a tap dancer. This singular ambition often haunts him, and is said to be responsible for his desire to travel at times.

In Washington he lasted only a short time because of his penchant for walking through doorways supposed to be closed to the press. His philosophy was that a governmental employee known as a statesman was only a ward heeler with a bigger heel. He wrote satirical stories about life in Washington until there was some question as to whether he could live in Washington and still live.

He is very glad that someone discovered talking pictures because he likes to write dialog. He started his career within the industry before audibility, his first assignment being to write the adaptation of "The Tigress" for Rudolph Valentino for United Artists. Valentino died while he was still working on it.

When not travelling, he has had time to live in Oregon—his home there was on the outskirts of a crowded city containing 70 people. He moved because of the noise.

He has to his credit, filmically, "The Dove," "Two Arabian Nights," "The Gaucho," "Bulldog Drummond," "Framed," "A Lady Refuses" and "The Silver Horde," among others.

"What the motion picture industry needs today," he advises, "—and what the world needs, is bigger and better vacations—"

This from a perpetual vacationist—

Uses Phonograph to Judge Dialogue of "Queer People"

Hollywood — Leo McCarey, directing "Queer People" for Howard Hughes, has devised a valuable aid in testing dialogue. With the assistance of Raymond Schrock and Howard Green, adaptors, all dialogue is recorded and heard on records before being passed.

In this way it is possible to detect flaws before actual rendering by the actors on the set.

Rosita Moreno Will Play in Paramount Spanish Versions

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

ONE of the most interesting phases of intelligent co-operation with the producers of better motion pictures has been developed throughout the country in the public libraries. These usually conservative groups have stepped courageously into the field of promotion and have become important factors in the winning of public support for the worthwhile things of the screen.

The Cleveland Public Library was the first to issue the attractively printed bookmark drawing attention to the best picture of the week playing in that city, and listing the book references that might be consulted if anyone were interested in adding background to the motion picture story. The bookmark idea became popular and is now accepted by forty of the leading public libraries of the country. It is a movement that is gaining surprising momentum. Exhibitors in the cities with the libraries offering this service would do well to capitalize it in their publicity, for the right kind of audiences is impressed by such intelligent endorsement.

In the recent issue of the Retail Bookseller, a trade news handbook for the book buyer, there is an editorial titled "Make Your Tie-Ups." In this article it listed a number of well-known pictures in the past six months with the books from which the pictures were made and other books by the same authors, which proves that there is a growing awareness among thinking people that the screen has become more than a light entertainment factor.

Mother's Day

Every alert theatre man will add some feature to his program appropriate to the spirit of Mother's Day, for that occasion has become a significant family day all over the country. The Van Beuren company offers through its "Holiday Tips" its new song sketch, "Songs of Mother," which would be appropriate on special programs for the week preceding or the week following Mother's Day. The following pictures would also be acceptable for the main part of the program: "Seven Days Leave," Paramount; "Mother's Cry," First National; "Four Sons," Fox; "Tol'able David," Columba; "Mother's Millions," made by Liberty Productions and released by Universal. These, with suitable music, would make a dignified program for a day that should be marked by dignity.

Decoration Day

Decoration Day is celebrated in every community in the United States and exhibitors should seek special novelty attractions for their programs. Because of the demands for the most desirable pictures for this holiday we make our suggestions to you this early in order that you may make your booking in time. Of course, the outstanding picture for the occasion would be "Abraham Lincoln," United Artists' masterpiece of this year. Paramount's "Only the Brave" would also be an acceptable feature. Two good short subjects are "Marching On" (Chic Sales), Fox two reels, and the Van Beuren Song Sketch, "The Trumpeter," produced with this patriotic occasion primarily in mind. The latter relates the story of the suffering and heartbreaks of war with the aftermath of peace earned by the heroes laid to rest. (Distributed through RKO-Pathe.)

Appeal to Children

During the past week Paramount's picture, "Skippy," has been playing in the Paramount theatre, New York, and in that equally famous institution, the Paramount of Brooklyn.

On Tuesday of this week it rained; it was holiday week; the children were free from school and every child in Brooklyn had a desire to see "Skippy." At 12 o'clock on the rainy day the mobs surged about the busy corner on which the theatre is situated. The mounted police were called to give aid. The distracted theatre manager engaged men to stand along the curb grasping each other's hands at arm's length to form a human chain to keep the crowds from being pushed over the curb into the heavy and dangerous traffic. That massed line, 30 to 40 deep, squared itself around the entire block. It was simply that the play was "Skippy" and that every child in the world, hungry for the kind of movie he understands and likes, was bound to see it.

To those of us interested in the reaction of children to the sound picture this has been an extraordinary demonstration. It sounds a keynote for wise theatre managers, for children with the hunger of starvation are stampeding for things that they want to see. Not every week, of course, will bring us a "Skippy," although we have on the brink of release "Huckelberry Finn," "Penrod," "The Connecticut Yankee" and a half dozen others. The Fox West Coast Theatres, in an effort to secure juvenile patronage during the past year, developed plays with youthful characters and stories designed to awaken child interest and, have successfully revived old favorites: "Peter Pan," "Boy Of Mine," and several others, which they dragged out of store rooms to meet wonderful receptions. Many of the mature pictures, such as "With Byrd at the South Pole," "Wild Men of Kalari," "Rango," and others, have been made unusually successful by other theatremen when the initial appeal was directed at children.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Reports on Pictures

HERE ARE REPORTS ON A FEW PICTURES WHICH I HAVE PLAYED RECENTLY: "Royal Family of Broadway." A dandy society drama with the best acting cast put together this season. Story is interesting and pathos and comedy well mixed. Very good entertainment.

"The Right to Love." Ruth Chatterton as good as ever, but also the same as ever, and she has done the same thing so continuously that people are tiring of her.

"Fighting Caravans." This is a talkie version of "The Covered Wagon," and though it be a "reprint," it is close enough to it that it makes a darn good show for those who haven't seen the first picture, and those who have will be suspicious.

"It Pays to Advertise." A clever picture, but one that will create a lot of comment concerning advertising on the screen. I wonder what would happen if Colgate put out a "13 Unlucky for Dirt" brand of soap and then Paramount charged them for the advertising they gave them with this picture. I bet they would estimate the damages up in the hundred thousands, and we, the exhibitors, would have earned it for them. Shouldn't cry before we are hurt, I guess, but they certainly sold soap with this picture.

"Kept Husbands." A clever little picture that you can afford to pay what they ask you for and which will please any one who will come to see a picture with that title.

"The Son of the Gods." A good picture and a good star, but the advertising is misleading. It is hard on a house to put out paper talking about Technicolor, and then have a picture sent without one shot of Technicolor in it.

"Stolen Heaven." Nancy Carrol as lovely as ever, only more so, and the picture is good entertainment.

"The Bat Whispers." The old plot of "The Bat" well done. Those that like this sort of far-fetched mystery stuff will enjoy this as it is exciting.

"Song of the Flame." Dug this up out of the past and found out it wasn't worth the effort. Print in poor shape.

"Headin' North." This is as good as the average Western and that means just fair. Bob Steele may be a hero to some, but he is just a dude cowboy to my crowd.

"Beau Ideal." Tried to follow the plot of "Beau Geste" too close, and it couldn't be as good. It is a big picture and except for the copying would have been very pleasing.

"Scandal Sheet." George Bancroft isn't so hot in this one. Paramount thought it was big, but I didn't and my crowd didn't feel like paying to see it.

"The Stampede" or "The Conquering Horde." This is a rehashing of the "Thunderin Herd" and "North of Thirty-Six," but is good entertainment, and they can't all be original.

"The Third Alarm." This is a good fire melodrama, interesting and well handled and will fill in for a Saturday night program.

"Monte Carlo." Jack Buchanan and Jeannette MacDonald make this good entertainment if you like music.

"No, No, Nanette." Another good old picture that isn't so good when you dig it up and compare it with present-day products.

Every Sunday I run a Vitaphone act. It is usually terrible. The Radio two-reel comedies average about 50-50. The Paramount single reel comedies average the highest entertainment value of the lot. Educational Mack Sennett two reelers are usually good. Tiffany shorts rank up, on a par with their features, not bad, not good. The "Voice of Hollywood" reel has proven quite entertaining. Universal's "Strange As It May Seem" reel is an addition to any program. I like the Paramount News, last year's issue, but then I signed my contract last year so can't expect to get it now.—CHAS. LEE HYDE, Grand theatre, Pierre, S. D.

New Department "A Wham"

YOUR NEW DEPARTMENT "WHEN the Screen Teaches" is a wham. I believe that if the forms have not been destroyed it would be an excellent idea to have a number of reprints made of page 61 of the issue of April 11 and to let each exhibitor have as many as he wants at the actual cost of printing.

If it is too late to do this I intend to have about 100 copies done by a local printer, for distribution among the teachers in the schools throughout the territory that we serve. I would thank you for your permission to do this.—J. E. LOTH, Waynesboro Theatres Corporation, Waynesboro, Va.

New Studios Will Produce RKO Quota Films in London

London—New studios, to be known as Associated Radio Studios, are being constructed at Ealing to make all the British quota productions of Radio Pictures and PDC, English distributors of RKO and RKO-Pathe.

Basil Dean, general European representative of RKO and chairman of Associated Talking Pictures, is on the board of directors of the new British company, ARP Studios, Ltd., which will own and operate the studios. Others on the board of the new company, which will be financed by British capital, are R. P. Baker, S. L. Courtald and R. F. W. Holme. Production on the first of the four planned stages starts in July.

Taboos Gangster Films

John Beggans of Jersey City, director of public safety, has issued orders to check showing of gangster films and other pictures which might be considered objectionable.

"Birth of Nation" Banned

Columbus—A permanent injunction issued in the state against showing of "Birth of a Nation," 15 years ago, is still in force.

A Big-Little Yarn!

Omaha—When Ike Rose's troupe of 20 midgets recently played the Columbus at Columbus, Neb., Manager C. P. Rose found himself sadly in need of dressing rooms to accommodate the "big-little" cast. Then he got a bright idea: he draped curtains over the bottom of his Western Electric horns and crowded several of the midgets into each bell.

Ad Shorts Are Of Great Value, Says F. Lawton

Francis Lawton, Jr., president of General Business Films, Inc., defining the function of sponsored shorts before the Advertising Study Club recently, stated that they combine the value of magazines, newspapers, outdoor advertising and radio.

He said: "It speeds up consumer acceptance and makes the whole campaign more powerful by multiplying word-of-mouth advertising and personal observation, the two greatest forces for moving merchandise."

Lawton said production cost has ranged from $5,000 to 15,000, with a distribution cost of $5 per thousand circulation, or $5,000 per million. There are also minor costs for prints, transportation and repairs, which add about 10 per cent. The entire cost of reaching 5,000,000 people, with a talking picture running about 10 minutes, would be about $35,000, or about three-fourths of a cent for each.

He said advertising talkies are not attempting to displace other forms of advertising, but it is claimed they gain strength from other advertising and add to the power of other mediums.

"Exhibitors include advertising pictures on their programs because of the revenue derived and for the money saved in rentals for the theatrical pictures displaced by sponsored films," explained Lawton.

"Some theatres will not run advertising, while others are willing but have no means of getting it. There is, however, more circulation and coverage available than any one advertiser will buy."

Lawton named a long list of advertisers who have utilized advertising talkies thus far, including the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., Lehn & Fink, the Texas Company, Fleers Chewing Gum Co., India Tea Bureau, Olds Motor Works, Studebaker Corporation, Lambert Pharmacal Co., American Gas Association, and others.

Berlin Tax Off Last 9 Months

Berlin—Official tax returns from April 1 to December 31, 1930, show previous estimates as too high. The average difference was 10%, with estimated entertainment figures 455,000 marks higher than the actual of 12,945,000 marks. Actual returns for the period were 8,875,000 marks.

It is expected the decrease in the first quarter of 1931 will be more noticeable than during the nine months of 1930. Increased unemployment and a more acute economic crisis are held responsible. This is pointed out as a good indication of the critical situation of the entertainment business in Berlin.

There were 27 films censored in Germany in February, 1931, of which 13 were German and 14 foreign-made (9 from America), as compared with 15 German and 12 foreign in January, 1931, and 14 German and 9 foreign in December, 1930.

Reviewing the Show!

UNQUESTIONABLY the advent of sound improved the general run of picture product, but it lent itself to some mighty bad stuff as well. Extreme caution must therefore be employed to avoid ruining a whole show through the use of a particularly poor subject. As near as we can judge the only way to play safe is to personally review the first performance of every change of program.

"Real" managers, long before the arrival of sound, made it a practice to do so. In fact, this was an established custom dating 'way back to the days when vaudeville was first taken seriously. And while many managers can be considered capable, they fall down on this most important task.

When disc prints were first furnished it was absolutely necessary that every theatre preview their show to make sure that it was in synchronization. Then followed sound-on-film and that worry was eliminated, but the smart manager continued to review his show as a matter of principle. Those who did showed excellent judgment.

Many a good show has been ruined because it contained either a rotten subject, lacked in entertainment value or was not well-balanced. If each and every manager made it a point to sit through the first performance he could soon determine, by his own and the audience's reaction, whether his was a good, poor or bad show.

Supposing you had a fine feature and good surrounding subjects with the exception of a particular comedy. You know the kind we mean. One of these things which start the audience whistling and clapping and end up with a grand "hurrah" when it is over? Would you permit that one subject to ruin your entire show or would you shelve it? No doubt you would pull it out. But you will never know when to do so if you never sit through the first show yourself.

Another decided advantage in sitting through the first show, is, the slant it gives you as to the type of pictures your audience likes. Make this a regular practice and you will soon note just what interests your patrons or makes them restless. As an aid to future booking suggestions this one angle alone makes it more than worth while.

Reviewing your pictures will also show whether the running order of the various units are O.K. Possibly you can improve the show by switching a subject here and there. Perhaps it is lacking in comedy values. Maybe you have a talking act too many, or there may be two subjects alike.

All of these angles have been encountered by the writer. Only the other night we went to see "The Royal Family" and our whole evening was spoiled because they put on a real "cluck" comedy which was so utterly absurd that it is beyond our understanding why the producers ever released the reel.

The manager of that house, in our estimation, was at fault for permitting it to be used throughout the run of this particular show. And if you had sat with us and heard the booing and cat-calls from an audience of real "uptown" New Yorkers you would have been dumbfounded at the lack of judgment used in exhibiting such a rank piece of junk.

On another occasion we had two travel subjects handed out on one show. The mistake was not in the booking, we were told, but through the reel being dropped off at the house in error. The manager, in need of an extra reel to get his "breaks," used it despite the fact that he already had a travel reel on his program. He showed poor judgment. His excuse about spotting them far apart did not eliminate his spoiling a good show with two subjects of the same kind.

Make reviewing the show an important part of your job. Don't leave it to anyone else.

The Dancing School!

It's been quite a time since we last suggested that you capitalize on a co-operative tie-up with your local dancing school, but if ever a suggestion was worth while, here is one.

Aside from the entertainment value to your theatre, through dancing school tie-ups, you have the added advantage of attracting a mint of extra business and new patrons by reason of the many friends and relatives of the youngsters who want to see the kiddies perform.

We have yet to hear about one of these schools turning a deaf ear to a recital in a local theatre. As a matter of fact, they solicit such performances themselves and if YOU have not cashed in on this angle, WHY NOT?

Suppose, if only for the sake of curiosity, you talk it over with the dancing school in your town or neighborhood and see what sort of a plan you can work out for your mutual benefit.

Spring Fashion Show Clicked Again In Philly For Resnick

Each year A. D. Resnick pulls a Spring Fashion show at the house he manages, the Hamilton Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa.; and each year he manages to inject a little novelty into the occasion. We don't have to tell you that the shows always click for him. If you recall past stories on Resnick's fashion show, you'll know that he has never chalked up a failure. It has always been an entry on the winning side of the ledger for him.

This year, Resnick effected his usual tie-up with the store he has always done business with, and put the show over in great style. His special feature this time was a couple of acts: a singer and a dancer who went on right after the models had displayed the latest in gowns, coats and wraps. It was necessary for Resnick to have a special feature as he planned a surprise for the crowds. When the acts had finished, the surprise was pulled. It consisted of having all of the models, making up a bridal party, parade down the center aisle of the theatre to the tune of the Wedding March played by the organist and up on the stage. The gag had never been worked before, and came as a complete surprise to the patrons jamming the theatre. They were certainly generous in their applause. And again Resnick had clicked. Incidentally, the co-operating shop gave away two dresses nightly to lucky women, during the run of the fashion show (two nights).

Always active at the Hamilton, Resnick has found another stunt that clicks for him. Two nights weekly he gives away gift order for merchandise from local dealers who are co-operating in the plan. Tickets are given with every purchase at theatre and store which allow persons to participate for the prizes. On the back of the genuine gift certificates the merchant marks in the amount of the gift given. The person holding the certificate may, if wished, purchase something in excess of the certificate privilege by paying the difference in price. In this manner, the merchant makes a sale and gains a customer. The stunt has been so successful that many other merchants are clamoring to get in. But there's no room. Good work, "A. D."

Duplication Of News-Paper Office In The Stanley Lobby A Hit

A knockout lobby display that went over to excellent results was used not so long ago at the Stanley Theatre in Jersey City, N. J., when "The Finger Points" was sent through for a week's booking.

The story of the picture revolves around the central figure, a newspaperman. Knowing this theme to be of interest to the patrons, the showman handling the selling of the picture (we believe it was Charlie Carroll, director of publicity for the house) set up in the lobby a a display that had them talking for days. It consisted of a duplicate of a newspaper office, complete in as many details.

The Stanley boasts a very large lobby, so it was an easy matter to construct, in a portioned off space, a cross section of a city room. We are showing the entire display in the photograph; just as it appeared to the patrons of the theatre. The typewriters were promoted from a local dealer, as was the office furniture, desks, etc. The ticker was promoted from Western Union. To further enhance the effectiveness of the stunt "reporters" were placed on duty during the busy hours when the maximum crowds were at the theatre. And how they looked at the display! Is it any wonder, in the face of the word-of-mouth comment that preceded it, that the picture went over to good results?

And now, in the photo can be seen Charlie Carroll, in familiar pose, tapping away at the typewriter in front of the ticker; while others in the newspaper office are Eli Ives Collins, of the staff of the Jersey Journal, and Lou S. Hart, assistant director of publicity for the Stanley. Looking on are Larry Conley, managing director of the Stanley, and Johnny Perkins, master of ceremonies.

Great work, Charlie, let's have more like it!

Fashion Show Publicity!

Here we present a few examples of the free advertising gained through fashion shows by showmen tying up the local merchants. These ads were used in Taft, California, and Atchison, Kansas, and show how the co-operating stores were more than willing to plug the fashion show. Look these ads over carefully, as they may contain one or two slants that you'd like to use in your own work, should you be planning a style show for the future. When ace ads such as these can be obtained without cost to the theatre, it proves the value of tie-ups

Johnny Farrell Film, Golf Short, Plugged By Tucker At Byrd

As we have said, and shown, before, Stewart B. Tucker, manager of the Byrd Theatre in Richmond, Va., never misses an opportunity to plug his short subjects. And when he received booking dates on the Johnny Farrell golf reels from RKO Pathe, he went after them—hook, line and sinker.

He set out to sell these shorts with the same enthusiastic work that is bestowed upon his feature film. And maybe it didn't go over great! Aside from the one-sheets and window cards that he secured from the exchanges, Tucker had a hundred additional cards printed up in heavy black on a white background. The cards were placed in advantageous spots all over Richmond.

Next were tied-up the sporting goods stores. In all the windows was placed one-sheet cut-outs and stills from the popular golf series. By this time all Richmond was aware that lessons on pellet pushing were being given by Johnny Farrell on the screen of the Byrd.

But Tucker was still not satisfied. He went out and contacted all the golf clubs in the vicinity, and placed notices of the series in a conspicuous spot on the bulletin boards. The newspaper layouts, too, mentioned the series. This, though, is not unusual in the case of Tucker's advertising, as he has found it to his advantage to give his shorts plugs that they deserve—when they merit them. And so will you. So keep your eye on them and see what special advantage you can take of them.

MacLevy's Front For "East Lynne" Went Over In Hempstead

The whole staff pitched in and helped Monty MacLevy when the manager of the Fox Hempstead Theatre, Hempstead, Long Island, set out to construct an eye-arresting front display that would sustain interest throughout the entire showing of "East Lynne," which had been booked in for a week instead of the customary two or three days. And if you think, you don't have to sell them hard when they are booked in for a week, try running a house in a Long Island town.

Well, there was Monty with a lot of compoboard and a group of willing assistants. The entire crew set to work, and before long the front effect that we are showing in the photo was achieved. Look it over, and see if you don't agree with us that it's an ace piece of work in any town or city. The store fronts, as can be noted, were utilized to place parts of the selling copy. A specially made valance gave to the marquee border an unusual effect. The center portion of the display was constructed from a 24-sheet cut-out, MacLevy utilizing the head of the star, and the title letters. It is interesting to note that MacLevy, instead of plugging the stars often by name, has used their pictures, as the valance shows.

Very little money was expended in the construction of the front. Indeed, the results more than paid up for the expenditures. Hempstead has never seen so complete a front as this on "East Lynne"; the exploitation for the picture being on a larger scale than usual. In addition to the front, 8,000 heralds were distributed in a house-to-house canvass. Still another effective medium was a sandwich man who canvassed the nearby towns. This, too, was an innovation in Hempstead, as seldom has a sandwich man been used as a street ballyhoo. Results, however, proved the stunt's value and it will probably be used again.

Some Suggestions for Warm Weather

Before long you will find yourself right in the midst of real hot summer weather; streets will be sizzling; air will be stuffy and uncomfortable; and, of course, people will be thinking more about beaches and automobile rides than of theatres. It will then become a tough battle to get those much needed and sought-for crowds into the theatres.

Therefore, it should behoove each and every one of us to give more than a little thought to the question of combating this annual killer of b.o. receipts.

In response to numerous requests we have incorporated into this timely article some practical suggestions for building up business during the summer season.

The progressive showman of today is not inclined to let his theatre suffer because af hot weather; at least, he will put forth every possible effort to combat it through intelligent activity and tie-ups which lend themselves to this time of the year.

Much worth-while propaganda has been circulated throughout the industry and the various circuits pertaining to this much-discussed topic. It is, therefore, only natural that the Round Table Club pages should take up the subject and give it proper emphasis at a time when we should all be thinking about ways and means of holding up the box office receipts during this usual dull period.

"CHICK"

Equipment in Shape

As a preliminary step in your plans for summer trade, let us harp back on a subject we have been calling your attention to for the last five or six weeks; namely, the ventilating or cooling plant of your theatre.

Give it a thorough inspection. Make certain that it is working perfectly and that all parts are in good shape. If any attention whatsoever is needed don't wait too long. Delays are dangerous. If you are part of a chain organization, it is your duty to immediately notify the proper parties that repairs or replacements are necessary. Do so at once. If it is entirely up to yourself, get busy now.

Clean Up the House

Clean up the house from front to back and from top to bottom. This is another angle we have been "preaching" along with cooling plant repairs. Try one of those good, old-fashioned spring cleaning ideas. Put every one of your staff onto the job and make it so thorough that not a single detail will be overlooked. Get on to a ladder and go after those ledges above the doors, the coves where dust and dirt accumulate in quantities, try making those drapes and valances look a bit more inviting instead of antique.

Mop up the cement floors which are without carpet or other covering. Maybe such surfaces are sadly in need of a coat of cement paint. Organize the job so that it will really mean a "clean-up" when you tackle it.

Get your lighting changed around a bit; inject a cool appearance into those side bracket lights, into your dome or cove lighting. Keep away from reds or other warm colors. Change your lobby frame mats and backgrounds to lighter and more spring-like shades, such as greys, blues, straw or green.

A Florist Tie-Up

Plants, such as ferns, various kinds of greens, flowers, hanging baskets, foliage of all sorts. This lends a distinctly spring appearance to any theatre or foyer. But see that you keep such trimmings in good shape all the time. If not you will spoil the effect by letting it take on a seedy look. Try your salesmanship on the largest florist in town; see if you can't sell him on the idea of keeping your foyers and lounge rooms supplied with flowers and greens. A neat credit card or program mention is well worth such a tie-up.

The Publicity Angle

Publicity is a valuable medium in the selling of a cool theatre to the public and in this connection we cannot stress too strongly the importance of a well-planned campaign. You should know enough about the cooling or ventilating equipment in your theatre to be able to make up some fine newspaper readers. Tell them, through such stories, how often the air is changed; how much lower the temperature is; how much more comfortable it is inside the theatre as compared with the sidewalk temperature.

But don't exaggerate. You have had this warning in connection with most of your regular merchandising activities. Well, it's just as important in connection with your cooling plant propaganda. You may succeed in fooling them once but that will be all.

Through Your Ads

See that your newspaper ads convey the cool "thought" such as borders of various types all designed for this purpose. The same applies to your lobby signs and frames. A hanging frame under your marquee will also help emphasize this thought. Create many catch lines which will lend themselves to your consistent campaign to sell the comfort and coolness of your theatre. Use them sensibly. Incorporate them into your ads, onto your various displays and signs.

Trailers Are Important

In those pre-hot days, especially at this time in most parts of the country where real summer has not arrived as yet, you should capitalize on your screen through the use of well-worded trailers. Get that "cool and comfortable" thought right under their skins so that with the coming of the hot days they will have your theatre in mind.

Possibly a series of trailers, changed weekly, will prove less monotonous than the same one for several weeks. The cost is really trivial compared to the amount of good it can do for you. If your imagination just won't function for text that carries a punch, communicate with one of the trailer companies, they'll be tickled pink to help you out with many worth-while suggestions. Let them work out a campaign of this sort. And besides, they are equipped to make up all sorts of trailers with a cool background or border. There is no medium more powerful than your screen, so use it to good advantage.

Business Stimulators

Then we should all be thinking about some of those old, but nevertheless worthy stunts to stimulate business during the summer. A series of bathing beauty contests in which a cup can be offered for the various classes, such as most beautiful girl, best form, most original suit, etc., etc. These gags may be frowned upon by some of the larger circuits, but they have brought business in the past and we'll venture the guess that they will bring plenty of business in the future to those houses being run by managers who know their onions.

Tie-up with swimming pools, soda fountains, drug stores, candy shops, restaurants, etc. See if you can promote a tie-up for the serving of iced tea or other cool drinks free to your patrons. Perhaps the cost is much less than you think even if you must pay the freight yourself. The cost will never amount to a heck of a lot if it is instrumental in making a crowd of patrons feel kindly towards you and your theatre.

Another worth-while tie-up is that with a local ice cream concern for the free distribution of ice cream bricks. This has been worked to good returns in the past and is an ideal summer gag. Get in touch with your local company and see if you can work it out. It's worth a try anyway.

Cakes of Real Ice

Still another good gag is the cake of ice stunt, whereby you place a two hundred pound cake of ice in your lobby with appropriate card to read along the lines that this cake would melt in the street in three hours while in the theatre it would last for three days. The very sight of the cake of ice suggests coolness, and since the power of suggestion is an important angle in the selling of coolness in your theatre, then this idea is a good one.

Is it possible to erect a fountain in the center of your lobby or foyer? If so, it will make a peach of an entrance fixed up in a good showmanlike way. Picture one of those fountains, shooting a thin spray into the air, banked with cool greens and ferns and carefully lit by baby spots. If that don't cool the brow of the most heated patron then you had better try a cake of ice under each and every seat.

Avoid the word "hot" in connection with any of your copy for summer. Do not use the word at all, for just as the cake of ice suggests coolness, so will the word "hot" suggest heat.

Tons of cool fresh air are pouring into the FOX PALACE . . . $60,000 worth of machinery working to keep you cool and comfortable . . . tons of steel turning heat and humidity into summer resort weather . . . come to the PALACE and laugh in the face of the weather man.

To Stimulate Your Box Office Receipts

Flower Show Idea

Aside from the usual florist tie-up for the furnishing of greens, etc., an excellent spring or summer stunt would be a Flower Show held at the theatre. In discussing a show of this kind we must impress upon you the importance of making it an outstanding event from every angle.

Naturally, one of the first requisites for such a Show is that the theatre have some place to display the flowers. A large lobby, a good sized foyer, the mezzanine or promenade, are all suggested spots.

In arranging such a tie-up, try to go a little further than just the one or two local florists; through them, get to the growers who furnish them with the plants and cut flowers. There must be some greenhouses not too far away from your town or city.

Surround the whole affair with the dignity it deserves and work in every angle that lends itself to such a Show. This refers to decorations, stands to hold the flowers and displays, lighting effects, cooling devices, etc., etc. You should have little difficulty in promoting a special section in your newspaper because there are sufficient novel slants to this idea to warrant such a special section. The Flower Show itself, the appeal to those folks who find great delight in making their front lawns or back yards little or big flower gardens, the class of people who, for lack of any other place, get a kick out of flower boxes on their windows and porches.

Then, most every community harbors one or more organizations coming under the title of Horticulturists. Get them, not only interested, but right behind the idea so that they will work with you. Line up the stores who are selling garden hardware, lawn seeds, landscape nursery-men, and all those others we cannot think of at the moment. They are all worth-while tie-ups and will help make your Flower Show a huge success.

Play for the Kiddies

Encourage displays from individuals. Every town has it's quota of flower fans. People (mostly the women-folk) who spend hours in their gardens petting and fussing over their favorite rose bush, etc. Get to them somehow or other and make them display their flowers. Offer special blue ribbons for numerous classes, ranging from the experienced amateur flower grower to the kiddies. Yet, they too are great flower fans, in fact you will find one of your best slants on the entire show through the youngsters, providing they are encouraged to take part, either individually or through the local school where the study and love of growing plants and flowers have always been stressed.

If space permits, set aside a special portion of the exhibits of the children and award appropriate honors to further encourage their interest in such things.

Selecting the Judges

The judges should, of course, consist of those who are authorities on the matter of flowers and plants. If you have one of those Horticultural Societies, they can furnish the best judges. If not, get them from out of town if necessary, but make sure they know their business. Don't step on Mrs. Jones' pride by ignoring her "priceless" geranium. The sensible use of "honorary mention" ribbons will cover a multitude of sins. And how much better it makes those hard working contributors feel.

We could go on for a half a dozen pages extolling the virtues of the Flower Show angle as applied to theatres, but we feel that the suggestion, plus the few ideas injected for your guidance should be quite sufficient.

In concluding the subject of the Flower Show we need only say that if properly handled an event of this kind can become one of the outstanding activities in the entire community. The theatre can capitalize tremendously, but use good judgment and make your plans so fool-proof that there will be little or no room for hard feelings anywhere along the line. And, especially since this is an article on summer business, don't forget to stress the cool angle of your theatre by employing any and every slant that will make the space devoted to the Flower Show as cool and comfortable as is possible.

And, incidentally, if we haven't stressed the slant sufficiently, do not lose sight of the tremendous interest you focus upon your theatre by reason of this sort of a Show. It is needless to repeat too often that your house will become a household topic for conversation during, and for long after, you put an idea like this across.

If YOU have a worth-while suggestion to make regarding warm weather business you ought to send it in at the earliest possible moment. The Club pages are the recognized clearing house for ideas and we can all benefit by the exchange of such thoughts.

Material dealing with theatre fronts, lobby displays, tie-ups, newspaper advertising, etc., is what we want right now. If you will send it along it may prove a "life-saver" to your brother showmen, just as their suggestions have come in handy to you.

Resourceful showmen will surely find ways and means of stimulating business this summer. It is typical of them to do so. Perhaps you have already started to work on this important angle. If so, send along the details of your activities and let us incorporate them into other stories about business-building.

If you have followed our advice in the past, then your tickler file will designate the issue and page of each issue which carried such material last spring and summer. If you never started such a file, begin now.

Institutional Advt.

The four ad cuts reproduced with this story were used last year to sell cooling plants in many of the Fox West Coast theatres. Fashion some along the same lines in connection with your own "cool" institutional copy and see if it don't attract attention. And while on the subject of institutional advertising; don't overlook the use of such material at the time of the year when you can sell more than "just another picture." Cut down, if necessary, on your regular ad allowance so as to leave you at least one two-column by five or six inches once a week for an institutional ad about the comfort and coolness of your theatre. Make no attempt to tie it in with any pictures, just devote that much space OFF THE THEATRE PAGE for the sole purpose of selling the theatre's comfort.

Theatres possessing air-washing equipment might find it worth while to investigate the use of ice cakes in the washer so that it will cool, not only the air, but the water as well. This has been done successfully in several theatres on the coast and in the west. Consult the people who installed your equipment and ask their advice or suggestions.

Show Them How

We recall, from last year, how a smart showman, Richard B. Tucker by name, of Richmond, Va., worked out a most unusual campaign dealing with the refrigeration apparatus in the theatre under his direction, whereby several half page ads were used showing pictures and describing in detail the way the machinery worked. Those who file their copies of the publication each week will find it on page 74 of the issue of May 17th, 1930 (Motion Picture News). It was a smart angle and can be used to just as good advantage by showmen with less pretentious equipment in their houses.

Stuff of this kind directs attention to the angle we are always striving to get across, namely: that the theatre is Cool, and if you can emphasize this thought by letting the patrons know how you keep it cool then it helps get your point across. See if you can work out something along similar lines. Your ventilating company will gladly send you drawings, etc., if you ask for them.

Start It Right Now

There is so much to be said about this subject of building business during the hot weather, plus the selling of your theatre as being the most comfortable and coolest place in town, that it would probably take up more pages than the entire issue uses. But we are only trying to "sell YOU an idea" and from that point you must shift for yourself. Reading about the successful warm weather campaigns during the summer on these Club pages will not help you if your house is in a typical hot weather slump due to your letting the business and house fall into a rut. During the summer it will be too late to help yourself, NOW is the time to get set. If business is good this summer you will be able to enjoy it yourself. A swim down at the beach or in the pool, or those little side trips, and maybe (here's hoping) during that vacation with the family. All the way down the line you will be a happier manager if you know that you gave your house a good send-off and sold the patrons on its coolness.

Our mammoth cooling plant is hitting on all six . . bringing cool comfort to fevered brows the FOX GRANADA is oozing over with "coolth" . . . come and soak up your share!

JACK FROST
Is Working for Us!

We've put him on the staff . . . he's a gent you can love better in July than January . . . with Jack on the job the FOX CRITERION turns "heat waves" into cool waves. Meet him today. He's a comforting chap.

Rundell's School Tie-Up

In Montpelier, Ohio, the school year closes rather early; and about this time the junior class bids farewell to the seniors with a banquet and parties. Knowing this, John C. Rundell, manager of the local Kaufman Theatre, managed to bring some extra money into the theatre's box-office by sending letters to the various classes apprising them of the fact that special rates can be obtained for theatre parties. The classes, to date, have had several parties; and the outlook is still bright.

Broadcasting From Music Store Window Stopped Town Traffic

The town stopped the show recently in Fort Smith, Arkansas. But the show we have reference too, was not one run in a theatre, but one pulled by J. P. Thompson, manager of the Temple Theatre, and Bill Flocks, who handles the exploitation for the house, right on the main street.

The picture being sold was "Remote Control" the theme of which, if you have played the picture, is fashioned against a radio station background. Having a favorable contact with a local radio station, the showmen managed to secure an old panel, several dials and instruments, and a mike. A local music store donated its window for the stunt. The background of the window was trimmed with various cards, photos, streamers, etc., all plugging "Remote Control." A large grand piano was placed in the center of the window. A loud speaker was mounted on the sidewalk entrance. The mike was hooked onto the speaker and everything was in readiness for the display of local talent, talent that flocked to participate in the stunt.

What a show! As the programs got warmed up, it became necessary, for a time, to quit broadcasting, so heavily did the press of people become. Crowds jammed the sidewalks and flowed over on to the streets. With programs being given during the busiest hours, it was a sure thing that the reaction would be valuable. The announcer of the programs interpolated his notices with comments on the picture. Listen "J. P.," with such activity being turned out, we want to see some more.

Robison's Program Used Monthly Is An Aid To Showselling

A showman who makes sure that his monthly program is ready by his patrons is Robert O. Robison of the Rigney Theatre, Albany, Mo., a showman active as they make 'em in his community.

Each month Robison makes up a program of his attractions. In the upper left hand corner he places a small current month calendar. The rest of the program is made up by use of midget mats and copy. And here's how Robison makes sure that his programs are held and read. He states in the lower right hand corner of the upright program that the program, when accompanied by a paid admission, serves as a ticket. If you'd like to look at one of these cards, drop a line to Robison at his house and we're sure he'll oblige.

Thanks, Robert for passing this one along to us. Let's have some more of your work, too so that we can let the rest of the Club see what you're doing.

Novelty Ballyhoo That Lowery Used Set Town Laughing

Persons in the vicinity of the Majestic Theatre in Wichita Falls, Texas, when "Half Shot at Sunrise" played the house, certainly got a laugh when they saw the unique ballyhoo that Victor B. Lowery was using to sell the Wheeler and Woolsey film to the theatre-goers of Wichita Falls.

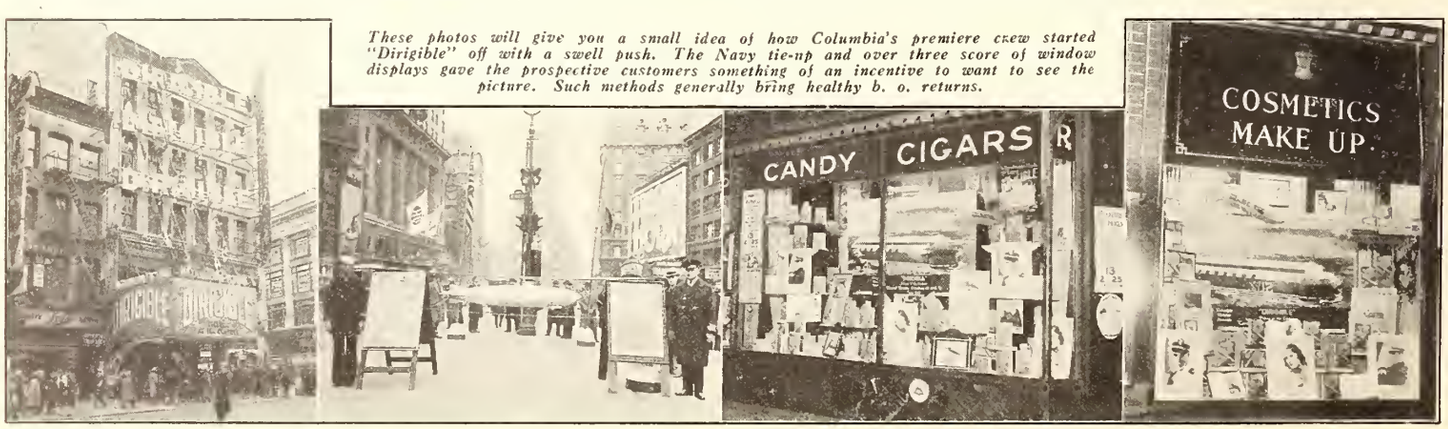
A man was sitting on a chair with an umbrella over his head directly in front of the box office for three days in advance and the morning the picture opened. He also held a sign, "I'm going to be the first in line to see those 'Cuckoos,' Wheeler and Woolsey, in 'Half Shot at Sunrise.'"

The lobby stunt stopped many a person and was undoubtedly one of the best lobby stunts used in a long while, as it certainly created comment aplenty and was productive of lots of word-of-mouth talk going around on the picture. All of which helped put the film across. Listen, Victor! We'd like to hear some more from you on your show-selling, as we are sure that the rest of the Club will be more than interested in looking it over. How about letting us see some more samples?

Merchandising on Times Square!

Just to prove that exploitation is not dead on the famous Gay White Way, Columbia's crack exploiteers come through with a great campaign for that mighty monarch of the air, "Dirigible," and anyone around the vicinity of Broadway and Times Square in New York who failed to learn that this attraction was playing the Central Theatre must have been deaf, dumb and blind.

The picture on the left (in the group below) shows some of the gala dress of the theatre prior to the premiere. The second one shows the Navy tie-up with a special recruiting station organized for Times Square and plugging the airship and the picture like nobody's business. The third and fourth pictures will give you an idea of how some of the sixty odd drug store windows were dressed throughout the city. Unlike a lot of other window tie-ups, these give the production the better of the break, so it is safe to assume that everyone seeing these windows knew immediately what picture all the shouting was about.



Yeah, verily, whomsoever will say that exploitation is dead on Times Square need only gaze upon these four photos if they want such a thought abolished from their minds.

Anyway, boys, while on the subject of "Dirigible," we'll tell you that you have some busy box office days ahead when you play this baby. Exploitationally speaking, it has everything a real showman desires. Title, stars, story and a million and one angles to sell it with.

A navy recruiting tie-up is possible everywhere. Book-stores will go for a window and special display toot-sweet. A dirigible building contest for the younger generation ought to prove money making and besides provide you with many good looking ships to dress your lobby and front. Numerous other national tie-ups lend themselves to this attraction and we feel safe in predicting one of the biggest box-office smashes wherever smart exploitation is employed. Who said we haven't anything to look forward to?

The men who put so much hard work into this campaign consisted of A. L. Selig, J. H. Gallagher, Jack Thoma, Bob Horter, H. D. Emerson and George Morris.

These photos will give you a small idea of how Columbia's premiere crew started "Dirigible" off with a swell push. The Navy tie-up and over three score of window displays gave the prospective customers something of an incentive to want to see the picture. Such methods generally bring healthy b. o. returns.

Dempsey - McAuliffe, Ace Idea Combine, Let Us Have Some More

When Jim Dempsey, manager of the Publix Strand Theatre in Lowell, Mass., sets out to plug a picture by means of pictures, he has only to mention to Jack McAuliffe, the staff artist, the type of work he wishes done. McAuliffe always pleases. And just to show you, glance at the photos we are presenting of some recent work.

The left photo for "Stolen Heaven," consisted of cut-out figures of the stars placed against a background of stars, pinned on to a black drop. The larger of the stars were equipped with a blinker effect. One either side of the film player was placed their names. The title of the picture was spotted in the foreground.

And now on the right can be seen another effective display, this time for "Dance, Fools, Dance." Some excellent showmanship is seen in that the figure selected is one that is certain to command attention. Realizing the value of the pose, Dempsey selected the still showing it, and had McAuliffe blow it up to its present size. The result, as you can see, is a striking and selling display. The colors were in complete harmony with the setting.

Before we sign off, we'd like to say that Jim's program continues to be one of the features of the Strand. In case you don't recall it, we'll tell you that it is a four-page booklet, attractively printed in black and white. It is devoted solely to plugs on the Publix Theatres and the coming attractions. On the second page, Dempsey runs his chat column, containing informative, newsy bits on the theatre, its coming attractions, and the features it offers to the public. It's a good program, and that's why it goes over. Am I right, Jim?

Louis Lamm's Show Portraying Fashion For Spring A Corker

The Lamm name has become one of the regular features of the Managers' Round Table pages. In fact, we suspect that Julius and Louis Lamm have gotten together and both showmen, as a result, hatched a plot to make sure that their family was always before the showmen. And so, when Julius Lamm isn't passing along his interesting activities, you'll find that Louis Lamm, brother of Julius and manager of the Palace Theatre in Lorain, Ohio, is represented with some ace work.

And you should have seen what Louis did recently with a Fashion Show he held at his theatre. The house was mobbed! A great break was obtained by Lamm inasmuch as a new fashion shop—or rather a well established shop in Lorain was opening a new store. The shop, the Style Center, was established 26 years ago. Louis tied them in on his show.

The local newspaper ran a special section devoted to the opening of the Style Center. In the section were many ads from the various New York merchants from whom the shop purchases its finery in wear apparel. The style show received plenty of plugging from this medium; the most effective medium that could have been chosen, to be sure. And the theatre received a lot of mention. On the full-page ad that graced the back page of the special section was placed a large announcement stating that living models would display the latest in woman's fashion at the theatre.

To still further boost up the affair, Lamm promoted a local—and very popular—orchestra of 10 pieces. Next he promoted a number of local talent acts, and these acts, when drilled, performed like professionals. The show proved to be one of the most sensational events ever held at the theatre. Everybody interested—Style Center, newspaper and theatre profits. The results were so good that Lamm planned another special event for the next week—a Fashion and Flower Show. We'll have something to say about this in an early issue. And we can promise that it will be interesting.

"Fresh Air"

It won't be long before fresh air and good ventilation will be of paramount importance to your theatre. But what are you doing about it now?

Especially must you be certain that your equipment is not noisy or apt to cause you trouble in connection with your sound apparatus.

No sense waiting until the last minute to find that attention or repairs are needed. Once your patrons are compelled to sit through a show in a stuffy, smelly atmosphere, you will have a heck of a time dispelling the impression that your house is poorly ventilated.

As for theatre with wall fans, you will have to get them in shape and adjust them to a speed that will not cause a "hum" to conflict with your talkies. You can only arrive at the happy medium on these matters by getting busy now. And DON'T leave it to some one else, even though the maintenance of ventilating equipment comes under one of your staff.

Charity Show For Bronx Orphans Gave Silverman Publicity

More good will was chalked up by David Silverman, manager of the Fox Belmont Theatre in the Bronx, New York City, recently when he staged a charity show for the Bronx orphans of all creeds. The show was put on as a Sunday morning performance and as a special feature.

The transportation question was solved by the Department of Plant and Structures and the 3rd Avenue Railroad Company, for when both the city and the private corporations heard that Silverman was running a special show they immediately agreed to furnish buses and trolley cars. Fourteen hundred kiddies were present to see "Tom Sawyer," the feature picture which was furnished gratis by Paramount. The Projectionists' Union furnished operators at no cost.

The show started at 9:30 P. M. and didn't break up until 1:00 A. M. Two hours of the time was devoted to a vaudeville show put on by the kiddies whose pictures we are showing here. Incidentally, if you'll look close you can see Silverman hidden away in the left background. It was unanimously voted that the charity show was one of the biggest and one of the most successful ever staged in the Bronx. Let's hear some more about

M. H. WILHEIT Says:

"I have enjoyed reading the Round Table and have received quite a few ideas which we have used here much to our advantage."

Manager, Strand Theatre, Colon, R. P. Canal Zone.

Showmanship—Fifteen Years Ago!

Entering upon the third episode (sounds like a serial) of showmen activities fifteen years ago brings to light many more interesting slants. . . . We have already revealed some of the gags which were pulled that long ago and now the interesting comment in our mail concerning this new feature shows that the field is finding much to smile over . . . but to get back to earth again . . . it seems that H. A. Chenoweth, peppy manager of the Opera House in Westfield, Mass., earned a "rep" for himself by the many unusual circulars and programs he turned out . . . not only were they interesting to his patrons, but they were much in demand among other showmen here in the east. . . . The "give-away" gag as applied to stars' photos proved to be a money-making stunt for theatres throughout Colorado in connection with theatre tie-ups all over that state. . . . Julien Loeb had a tough battle on his hands when he built and opened the Sumner Theatre in Brooklyn, but he came out on top because he was a great believer in "advertising" . . . some of the pertinent remarks he passed fifteen years ago would do a lot of good right now . . . but the important point in this incident is the fact that he had to overcome opposition giving six acts of vaudeville plus a feature and shorts, as against his straight picture and music policy . . . but he succeeded. . . . Bill Graves of the Mirror Theatre in Springfield, Mass., inaugurated a twelve o'clock matinee for the benefit of the many factory employees who had a chance to "kill" some of the lunch time in the theatre. . . . Homer, Ellison, manager of the Empress Theatre of Salt Lake City, Utah, successfully engineered one of the finest style shows ever attempted in any theatre . . . the details of his live-wire activities in connection with this Style Show proves that he covered many of the details used to this day for making these shows a success . . . and it is no surprise to learn that the Empress played to capacity business throughout the run . . . and now we find out that Manager W. L. Whitehead of the Republic in Jacksonville, Fla., gained a lot of good-will through his offer to admit members of the state guardsmen to his theatre anytime they wanted to attend . . . not bad at all. . . . Only recently we passed along, on the Club pages, a list of the stars and their birthplace and birthdays . . . this was done for the purpose of tying up a star with some local angles . . . if that star happened to come from your town . . . and now we have definite proof that Manager Megahan of the New Strand Theatre in Denver, Colo., played up the fact that Marguerite Snow was a Denver girl, in connection with that star's picture "The Half Million Bribe" then current at the New Strand. . . . J. B. Cronk of the Allen Theatre in Calgary, Canada, (Pete Egan please note) gave away ice cream to the kiddies as a business stunt in that city . . . and incidentally the Saturday (ice cream) matinees are going well. . . . W. J. Citron of San Francisco, Cal., pulled a funny one when he announced a "Double Header" program, said program being made up of two screens in the same theatre with a comedy on one and a drama on the other . . . needless to say the amusement, bewilderment or distraction of the audience was sufficient to prove that the idea, while absolutely novel, could never revolutionize the industry, so just charge up the gag to "experiments" and let it go at that. . . . A. H. Hilton of Lewiston, Ia., started the "midnight matinee" idea and found it so profitable that he advised his brother exhibitors to do the same thing . . . he used some mighty novel gags in connection with his "matinees" by dressing the ushers in pajamas, passing out rattles to the customers and letting them keep time to the music being played by his orchestra . . . all in all, a great time was had by all, and, according to Hilton, they turned away hundreds every time and many are quite willing to pay two-bits just to stand in the back. . . . Frank L. Newman of the Royal Theatre in Kansas City tried a new one when he held over one of the Mary Pickford attractions for a week . . . this despite his set rule that no picture would be kept over the regular theatre-run policy. . . . Following out the idea of the "Children's Hour," Howard S. Clemmer of the Clemmer Theatre in Spokane, Wash., has inaugurated a series of unique and attractive means to please the youngsters who attend his kiddie performances . . . he made up a special booklet called "Klemmer Klink Book," consisting of twelve pages and a cover, attractively designed and filled with poetry for the youngsters . . . the kids secure the book by attending the matinees, they get a page each time they attend until the book is complete . . . this gag has many worth-while slants for use right now and we are going to try and get hold of one of them. . . . Introducing big front displays to the west coast seemed to have been the achievement of Manager R. W. Woodley for his Woodley Theatre in Los Angeles, Cal., when he startled the customers with a mighty novel front display for "Hulda From Holland." . . . C. C. Boyes of the Elite Theatre, Hebron, Neb., advertised the first episode of "Peg of the Circus" by arranging a regular circus parade down the main street of the town . . . and now we'll start a parade right off the page . . . until next week. . . . !

NOTE: If our members and readers find this new feature interesting we would appreciate a line or two regarding same in their next communication to Club headquarters. Unless we get some definite word it is hard to determine whether these new angles are worth the time or space used. Please express yourself regarding "Showmanship—Fifteen Years Ago."

"Big Money" Helped Lavoy Hit High B.O. On Grand Campaign

Here's yet another showman who ties in talk on the public's lips with his showmanship. See how cleverly Eugene Lavoy, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Grand Forks, N. D., sold "Big Money" recently for a full-page co-operative ad in conjunction with the local dealers as an effort to chase away the then prevalent "hard times" bugaboo that threatened to put not a few merchants out of business, unless said business picked up (which it did quickly in Grand Forks).

Every Friday and Saturday the merchants make a practice of offering bargains. On this special occasion, Lavoy engineered his ad. Since the merchants also broadcast, notice of the picture was made in the sales talks given over the radio.

To carry out further the "Big Money" value idea, the merchants used special displays in their stores and also in the windows. Two of the largest stores featured a full window display showing cut-outs of the stars, with large panels alongside announcing the attraction. In his tie-up Lavoy took especial care to sell the picture as a comedy and not as having a gangster and gambling theme. His move was excellent. Another fine move was the placing of a large $ cut-out in the local banks, with the copy tying in the value of saving, etc. The novel cut-outs were gladly received by the banks.

Lavoy also pulled the dollar bill stunt, starting the bill in circulation two weeks in advance. A sheet containing copy on the picture and a place for names was attached. To persons whose names were listed in certain designated numbers, guest tickets to the theatre were given. This gag went over to wonderful results. So, too, did the street ballyhoo, which consisted of two boys carrying a large cut-out representative of a paper dollar, on which copy stated: "If You Don't Think This Is 'BIG MONEY' ask these boys and they'll tell you to go to the ORPHEUM and see for yourself."

As a result of all this activity, you may be sure that business was good; in fact, since we are aware that Eugene constantly strives to put over campaigns of value on every picture, we think his business is always good. Let's see what else you are doing along the show-selling line, Eugene.

Teaser Ads Had Town Laughing; Proved Good Plug For Film

An excellent teaser ad campaign was run recently by Robert L. Jonasson, manager of the Mayfair Theatre, Asbury Park, N. J., when he played "The Bat Whispers." The campaign was productive of lots of laughs, too.

The series of classified ads, prior to the opening of the picture, asked for information regarding "bat extermination." These ads were run prior to the start of the regular display ad campaign. The wording of the ads was changed over a period of four or five days. For instance, one said "Troubled with bats," another asked for aid in the extermination of bats, etc.

The name and address of the poster artist for the local Publix theatres was given in the ads (I. S. Kay). Mr. Kay reported the receipt of many replies and inquiries. This resulted in a story in the Asbury Park Press.

We don't know but that they're still laughing at the stunt in Asbury Park. Some of the newspaper readers more than took it seriously. In addition to grabbing off space for the picture, Jonasson also landed some excellent word-of-mouth comment, which resulted in additional dough at the box-office. How about some more, Bob?

One Column Advertising!

On the opposite page we are again reproducing a group of newspaper ads selected from towns all over the country. But there is an "odd" twist to this group, in that we have confined them exclusively to single column ads.

We have received much comment regarding the various ad layouts in the past, and many of our members and readers, while expressing themselves favorably on the layouts, have called our attention to the limited space they must use due to existing local conditions. Small budgets, high rates and numerous other reasons were given.

So we decided to make a wide selection with a view of showing just how much can be accomplished despite limited space used. Look them over closely and see how wide a range is covered by showmen who must keep their advertising space down to a minimum.

Future groups will again show a wide assortment of various size ads, with particular emphasis on the smaller towns and cities. If you have any ads which you are proud of we would appreciate receiving them for possible reproduction on the Club pages.

Pet Parade Proved A Valuable Feature Of Wright's Showselling

A pet parade in conjunction with the selling of "Cimarron" in La Grande, Ore., was productive of plenty of publicity and good-will for J. E. (Jack) Wright, manager of the Liberty Theatre.

Jack got a great break in La Grande for "Cimarron" by running a "Cimarron Day" (something on the order of Frank Hill's ace stunt in Walla Walla, Wash.). All of the merchants co-operated on Wright's plan. He secured the city band and the American Legion Drum Corps, a double truck advertising spread, cards and handbills. This feature of the campaign went over to fine results. But what we want to talk about is the pet parade.

What a feature this was. Over 150 kiddies and their pets took part in the stunt. They formed a parade eight blocks long. We are showing some photos of this parade, and they, more than words, will serve to show you how much interest the kids took in the affair. One of the photos shows a few laughlights that were featured by Wright. You can see how two men served to make up a fake horse. The kids certainly got a big kick out of this one. Every one in town, and the nearby communities, was on hand for the parade. The stores were decked out in gala array and featured telegrams from the various stars in "Cimarron."

The pet parade is a stunt that has often hit our pages. It always seems to click, and we would suggest that if local conditions permit, you use it. We want to thank Jack for passing along this account of his work.

Look Over This Gag McSweeney Uses; An You Make Use Of It?

In Needham, Mass., David C. McSweeney sells shows for Publix at the Paramount Theatre, and does a corking job of it. This can be seen if you should ever visit Needham and see how well known is McSweeney and the theatre.

Some time ago, we told you something about the kiddie klub that this showman organized, and gave you a little dope on it. The klub, we are glad to report, has grown steadily and has now enrolled pretty nearly every kid in Needham and the surrounding vicinities. The klub has any number of talented members, so the Saturday meetings are never at a loss for entertainment. At different times, McSweeney endeavors to obtain various artists to entertain the kids. Just recently he secured the services of a cowboy, who delighted the youngsters with exhibitions of cowboy work.

To keep the klub informed on various doings, McSweeney runs a column in the weekly newspaper, devoted to an account of the last week's meeting, and also carrying notices on the next week's session. This column alone has been instrumental in boosting the circulation of the paper quite a large amount. And talking about the local paper, we'd like to say a word or two about the stunt McSweeney pulled in it weekly that has resulted in considerable publicity and advertising for the theatre, to say nothing of good-will.

Recently, McSweeney celebrated the fifth anniversary of the theatre. One of his campaign features was a large co-operative ad from the dealers, all of whom extended their congratulations to the theatre. It was through the co-operative ad that McSweeney hit upon a novel idea, which was immediately taken and sold to the editor of the local newspaper. The idea was this: Instead of breaking up the co-operative ad after it had appeared in the paper, the ad could be taken from the page and used to run off a bunch of heralds. We are showing the one that was used during the anniversary. There have been many since then. Each week McSweeney sells the dealer space in the local newspaper for $5.00. The money allows the dealer to appear in "The Needham Bulletin," the circular that is run off at the paper's plant. The stunt is sensational in the town. The dealers, well realizing that they can hardly hope to secure such value as is given them by the paper and the plan, clamor for space. The heralds are distributed from house to house. The theatre weekly receives, free of charge, the add at the top of the layout. This advantageous spot is given McSweeney for taking care of the space selling. Since his town is not large, it's but a matter of a few hours or so a week to collect copy for the ads.

Singer's Midgets Had Fine Campaign Given Them By F. Johnson

Singers Midgets, to make a long story short, certainly took Oil City, Pa., by storm. And so, too, did the campaign that Fred E. Johnson turned out to put the midgets' engagement at the Latonia Theatre across to big box-office receipts. The midgets were booked in as an added attraction to help celebrate the second anniversary of the Latonia.

The first move on Fred's anniversary campaign was a theatre party held by the South Side Business Men's Association. This out of the way, Fred then cleared the decks for the arrival of the midgets, and on Monday, the day of the opening, he featured a parade with three elephants and all the midgets. The midgets rode in five autos which were promoted from a local dealer. The procession pulled up at the city hall at noon, where the Mayor was on hand to give the key to the city to one of the women of the troupe. We are showing a photo of the presentation. After making the presentation speech, the Mayor then appointed the tiniest of the midgets honorary chief of police for the week. The chief stood beside the midget while the presentation was made (and he can be seen in the photo), his 6 feet 2 inches stature towering over the 28-inch height of the midget. (Fred is second midget from the left, in the photo.)

On Tuesday, the auto caravan went to a neighboring town, attracting plenty of persons in no time. Streets were lined with curious persons all anxious to see the midgets. It was a big event for the residents as the midgets had never been in town before, having played the Big Time for many years. Wednesday, a few of the midgets were taken to the Kiwanis luncheon, which had been designated "Farmers' Day." One of the midgets spoke on native life. This speech went over to enthusiastic acclamation. After the show on Wednesday evening, the midgets were taken to the Elks' Club as guests. They certainly had a fine time, especially so did the little man who had been appointed honorary chief of police, for on the occasion of the evening's show Mayor Blair of Oil City attended the performance and pinned a huge police badge on the smallest chief in the city. A special Wednesday matinee was also given after school and it played to 800 kiddies and 300 adults. Saturday, though, was the day! The house was opened a half hour before time, and at 2:30 in the afternoon it was jammed to the doors, with the crowd waiting in line for two blocks. It became necessary to announce that no tickets would be sold until the second show. A half hour was necessary to get the crowds out and in. It was certainly a record day.

Every one in town knew about the midgets. The surrounding towns were well informed, too. Every informative medium was used. The newspaper campaign was especially valuable and well worked out. We are showing a double truck co-operative spread. Fred sums the whole campaign up in these words:

"This was virgin territory and I never saw the country folks and people from nearby towns and villages flock so strong to a theatre as last week. It was "in the air," and nothing could have stopped them."

Great work, Fred. And remember, we want to hear some more from you about your future activities in Oil City because we know that your work always contains slants of value that will prove interesting to your fellow Club members.

Daransoll Landed Free Ads In Paper; They Plugged Sound

Plenty of free advertising came George Daransoll's way recently when he installed a new sound equipment in the house he manages, the Feeley Theatre, Hazelton, Pa.

Daransoll hustled about town and contacted some merchants for space in a co-operative page. The merchants more than agreed. Still not satisfied, Daransoll decided that the local branches of labor unions should be represented, so he broached them on the subject. They were more than willing to take space on the page and announce that union men took part in the installation and would operate the new sound equipment.

The page was attractively made up and carried a number of congratulatory plugs, along with an ad from the other Publix houses in the city. Since the stunt was so capably handled, it is only reasonable to state that it went over to excellent results. Didn't it, George?

"What Would You Do?" Contest Helped Sell Show For Jones

An interesting contest was used as the basis of the exploitation campaign used by H. A. Jones, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Rockford, Ill., to help put over his showing of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "The Great Meadow," starring John Mack Brown.

Jones arranged for the Register-Gazette to run this novel contest, which ran for two days, previous to the opening of the picture, and was captioned "She married another—then her husband came back! What would you do in a case like that?" Readers were requested to write an interesting solution in not more than one hundred words, and free tickets to see "The Great Meadow" were offered as prizes.

Another interesting stunt arranged by Jones was with the co-operation of the local school board. Jones obtained permission to distribute cards bearing illustrations of the various Indian tribes, to the children at the schools. Each card carried the illustrations of three tribes and the children were asked to identify them and from which states they originated. Prizes of one hundred free tickets to see "The Great Meadow" were offered.

The stunt went over very well and showed Jones that he knew just the type of gag that the public would perk up and pay attention to. We'd like to hear from your section again, "H. A.," so we can pass along an account of your work. What do you say?

If you plan a teaser campaign, allow enough teaser insertions to make a real build-up. A week to ten days might be considered a safe stretch—long enough to build something, yet short enough to avoid irritating your readers or causing them to lose interest. . . . Be sure that each advertisement carries some mark of identification—so that you get full value for all your money. . . . Be equally sure that your eventual unveiling will not cause disappointment.—Aesop Glim, in Printers' Ink.

Belkofer & Williams Selling Shows In Ace Style In Marion, O.

In Marion, Ohio, the showmanship displayed there continues to measure up to the same high calibre that featured it in the past, And so we pass along a word or two about the work being turned out at the Palace Theatre by Carl Belkofer and F. A. Williams, manager of the Marion Theatre.

We are showing here two photos of the fronts of the Palace Theatre (on the left), and the Marion Theatre (on the right). Look the fronts over and see how these showmen make their play for patronage from the Marion theatregoers. Not only on front displays are these showmen active. They know their stuff along the exploitation line, too, as was seen when "Cimarron" played the town, and the two showmen handling the Publix houses co-operated to the extent of stringing a banner across the main street plugging the epic picture.

Belkofer had an excellent stunt recently that netted him a lot of publicity. He hired five men to carry a banner stating that they were hired by the Palace Theatre in an effort to aid the unemployed of Marion. The stunt was productive of lots of good-will for the theatre, too. Since the showmanship in the town of Marion is always of the progressive sort, we hope that in the near future we'll have some more of it to present on the Club pages, so that we can let the rest of the showmen see what th Publix live-wires are doing.

Stonebrook's Stunts For Western Picture Helped Attraction

In addition to his regular merchandising activities on the Paramount feature picture, "Fighting Caravans," Rollin K. Stonebrook, manager of the Publix Paramount Theatre in Asbury Park, N. J., worked the following stunts:

Special heralds were distributed at schools announcing the opening of "Finger Prints," a detective serial picture which is to run for 10 weeks at the Asbury Park Paramount. The kid patronage was increased materially over Saturday and Sunday, undoubtedly due to the special plug at the schools.

The Asbury Park Press newsboys were entertained Saturday, the opening day of "Fighting Caravans." Much good will resulted. Stories and photos appeared in the paper, which directly benefited the gross on "Fighting Caravans."

The newsboys also thought lots of the serial, too, which came in for a play in the story. This stunt of inciting local newspapers has always been productive for showmen of stories and pictures in the local newspaper. If you can pull a gag of this sort in your town, we suggest that you give it a break every now and then. The Club pages have often carried accounts of the good-will and publicity showmen have received as a result of this stunt, which always seems to break for the showman.

Thanks for keeping us posted on your work, Rollin. Give our regards to "Bunny" Bryan, Ray Puckett, Tommy Phelan, and the rest of the live-wire Round Table members for the Publix New Jersey Division when you see them. Oke?

A Thought!

In the New Orleans Morning Tribune there appeared recently this item:

"Wonder why the movie palaces don't fix their show schedules so as to show a newsreel after the stage show and give the outgoing audience a chance to get out before the feature picture starts? As most of them do it now, the feature picture comes on immediately and as there is from two to five minutes or more of confusion, a lot of the first of the picture is lost to those remaining."

The exasperated patrons have often wondered too!

It Must Be the Weather!

Dear "Chick":

Read yours of the latest issue, and was charmed into a state of gentle revery by your vivid description of the view of Central Park from your office window. And as I gaze out MY window, at the alley below, with its garbage cans, foraging tom-cats, "Post-no-bills" signs and general atmosphere of fetid decay, I, too, can see that glorious expanse of parkland, bursting into the first aspects of spring. Which is better, your view or mine? I would say mine, for spring is here, and with it those periods of unconscious day-dreaming, and when I dream, those sordid details outside my window melt away and are replaced by sparkling pictures of "what might be," pictures of the life I'd like to live, whether in this business or some other, a life where I can earn enough to save some, pictures of a job with a little scrap of time to myself, a day or an evening at home with a wife starved for my company, a job steady and sure, with a future that can be looked forward to as something definite. Ho-hum! Such is life, in the show business."

Kids Lined Up At Ed Selette's House Two Hours Before Start

Seven hundred kids lined up two hours before the door opened! That's what Edward Selette, former manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., experienced when he started the serial, "Phantom of the West."

Selette announced that the first 50 kids in line would be admitted free. And that started all of the rushing to the theatre by the youngsters. Since he has been located at the theatre, Selette has concentrated in a great measure on the kid businss. That he has succeeded in an even greater measure is seen by the immense weekly turnout that is on hand long before the house opens. You can get a line on the crowd of kids by looking over the photo we are showing.

The other photo is one of the many tie-ups that Selette has effected in the town. It shows, rather blurred, though, the one-sheet oil cloth signs plugging the house policy that are carried on the back of 10 buses, that go through 15 towns. He landed this tie-up at no cost to the theatre. Incidentally, the drivers of the buses also sell tickets for the theatre at a discount to the house and a corresponding discount in the fare price. The bus company also advertises in the theatre program.

Which, you have no doubt deduced by now, means that Selette steps out with a vengeance to obtain business for his house. He's now at the Strand, Palmer, Mass., and we think that he'll duplicate, if not outrival his success, while at Portsmouth.

Singerman Featured Fine Window Display For "Third Alarm"

With a corking window display forming one of the features of his campaign, Isser Singerman, manager of the Passe Temps Theatre in Joliette, Quebec, Canada, put "The Third Alarm" over to excellent results.

Being well known in the town, it was an easy matter for Singerman to promote a window on the main street. He next contacted the fire brigade and secured from them helmets, axes, rubber boots, and all of the other paraphernalia that goes into the fire-fighting life of a fireman. The window was then decorated with red tissue paper, red bulbs and flashers. Into the space was then deposited the fire fighter's regalia. The completed effect was one certain to attract the eye. It was practically impossible to go by the window without stopping to look at the streamers of red crepe paper and the display.

We are here taking this opportunity of introducing to you via his photo Isser Singerman, who really needs no other introduction at this time outside of his photo, as we have told you about him and his work before. Oke, Isser? We are glad to see that you are keeping up the showmanship that has so long characterized your activity in Joliette. Remember, we are always glad to hear from you.

Caldwell's Campaign On "City Lights" Was Good Box-Office Work

The city lights burned brighter when Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, set out to plug "City Lights." And when Wally was finished selling the show, the Chaplin film certainly had received fine treatment of the kind that helps the box-office.

A stunt that attracted lots of attention was the placing of window cards on the stands of apple sellers hawking their wares from the street corners. Each man using one of the cards was daily paid a dime, payment being made by means of a card system in which at noon the card was presented at the theatre, punched by the cashier, and a dime given the apple man.

Several important downtown corner windows were exclusively tied up for the display of a novel life size cut-out of Chaplin standing against actual sized cut-out lamp posts. Stills were banked about the cut-outs.

For a special picture, a life sized cut-out placed against a traffic policeman's semaphore in the heart of the downtown district was photographed by the Toledo News-Bee and run as a story. Other exploitations included: 100 taxicabs labeled front and back with streamers; 4,000 Chaplin door hangers distributed in residential sections; 1,000 Chaplin doorhangers placed on cars throughout the downtown district; 5,000 10 x 12 Chaplin circus heralds distributed to homes in Polish and German residential districts; thousands of hand heralds distributed at the theatre and at local stores; window cards, streamers, and posters, all over town; flags, and twenty special window displays. The newspapers were, of course, well covered, the theatre front display a wow, pennants and streamers strung from the marquee, with a valance pepping up the effect, and every billboard location was taken.

Is it any wonder that Wally's campaign proved a knockout? He's always turning out this live work, so we are sure that we'll have some more to pass along in the near future. Keep us in touch with your work, will you Wally?

Dick Moss Joins The Ranks Of Columnist-Showmen; Great Gag

Should you ever happen to pick up a paper from Orange, Cal., called "Orange Daily News," and find contained therein a column headed "Screen Snapshots" and signed by one R. L. M., we would advise that you read it carefully, for you can never tell when you, too, might want to run a column similar to it. R. L. M., we are going to reveal, is none other than Richard L. Moss, manager of the Orange Theatre, Orange, Cal., for the Hughes-Franklin combine.

Dick is the latest showman to promote for himself a column in his local newspaper. Like his fellow showmen-columnists, he knows well the folly of permitting too much of his theatre in the column; therefore, he tempers his writing with opinions on the stars and their latest films. Of course, it is reasonable to suspect—and rightly, too—that every picture about which Dick talks, and every star about whom he divulges information will sooner or later flash across the silver sheet. What's the use of being a showman-columnist if not to plug the movie product?

We don't have to ask Dick whether he considers the column to be valuable to him and his house. We can tell by the way it is written that he takes a great deal of pride and interest in it, and so it must be reacting favorably towards his house and the box-office. It might be a good plan for every showman having a paper in his town to make the most of it. As is being done by hundreds of showmen today.

Harry Crull Is Doing His Bit To Put Over Local Popularity Gag

They are certainly excited up around the vicinity of the Audubon Theatre in New York City. And who is excited, asks you. Harry Crull? No, it's not Harry who's excited, but the patrons of the theatre. Harry is to blame, though. You see, he manages the house and in his official capacity also sells its shows. So when a popularity contest was started at the house recently, Harry set out to plug it.

He used a number of special mediums, but one of them was certainly valuable. This was a well written letter sent through the mailing list informing the patrons of the theatre of the details of the stunt. The letter—we have one on hand—states that any lady or gentleman is eligible to enter the contest, the winning of which entitles the most popular persons to a trip to Bermuda, with all expenses paid, including a week's stay at an exclusive hotel. Persons competing are judged by the number of votes they receive. Crull offers additional votes for theatre parties (which is smart showmanship, we say). Incidentally, the winner of the contest has the privilege of inviting a relative or friend on the trip. In addition, Crull, on behalf of the theatre, offers fifty dollars to cover incidental expenses, etc.

That is why they are all excited up around the vicinity of the Audubon Theatre. And if a popularity contest will do good business for Crull, what's to prevent it doing good business for you? Right, Harry?

WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?

Round Table Biographies!

Nat Holt

He thought that he'd become an artist, but instead, he became a showman. The interest that he manifested in the amusement field warranted his entering the profession. And so, at the age of 17, Nat Holt became associated with the show game as manager in a nickelodeon—one of those early places of amusement where the manager was a combination operator, sign painter, reel boy, errand boy, billposter, janitor, and any other job that happened along.

But experience that proved valuable in later years was obtained in the nickelodeon, for after that spot followed jobs with tab shows, stock companies, and de luxe picture theatres. On all of these jobs, Holt was a success. One thing especially stood out in his work—advertising. This was only natural. Early in the game, Holt had studied to be an artist, and his talents along this line were devoted to advertising layouts.

Holt today, after many years in show business, is city manager for Fox Theatre in Wichita, Kansas. He has turned out some remarkable work along the advertising lines. As a matter of fact, he first came before the public and industrial eye by his methods for plugging short subjects, by his honesty in ads, and through his novel lay-outs. Many of his ads have been reproduced and presented on the Managers' Round Table Club pages of Motion Picture Herald.

Born in California, Holt was educated in the Golden State's Public and High Schools. He studied art while in high school. He entered the show business because he desired to do so. The circuits he has been connected with are: Ackerman and Harris, Turner and Dahnken, Loew's, Publix, Fox. He has handled many theatres of various types and sizes. His lodge affiliations number the Shriners and the Rotary Club. Holt is married and has two children. He hopes to keep on in the show game.

Fred Perry

To enter show business, Fred Perry quit the stage. He was eighteen years old at the time, and working in a vaudeville act. His being a performer was a gratification of an early desire; and his decision to go on the stage because he believed he possessed at least enough talent to get by showed him to be a person with a determined will.

Then Perry decided that he had had enough of vaudeville, and he set out to learn something about handling a show from out front. He hung around the theatres for a time and finally landed a job as assistant exploitation man to George Edwards of Daly's, London, England. Next, he became assistant manager of Sir Walter Melville's company at the Drury Lane in London. Then the war.

After five years of service in the Navy—during which time Fred fought, put on shows on ships and in the barracks—he returned to civilian life, going to America and joining the Robbins Company in Utica, New York, as manager and exploiteer. In 1927 he became associated with Messrs. Kornblite, Comerford and Cohen at the Capitol Theatre, Binghamton, N. Y. He can be found there today.

Perry was born in London, England, and educated in Raines Foundation and College. Since entering the show game, he has handled theatres abroad and in America. He has appeared on the variety stages abroad. He entered the show game, first, because he liked the stage; secondly, because he wanted to carve out a career. He is now married. His lodge affiliations numbering: the American Legion, Elks, Red Men, and K. of P., attest his popularity. If given an opportunity to choose a profession again, he would pick the show game, not that part which constitutes entertaining a public, but that part which consists of selling amusement to the public for after all these years in theatre operation, Fred doesn't want anything but that.

Earle McArthur Tate

He started in the show game by bicycling film from the old Princess Theatre in Meridian, Miss., to the Alamo of the same city. That was his first job, given him at the age of twelve. Then, step by step, he climbed up the ladder. From film messenger he became an usher; meanwhile he studied in the local public and high schools. Ushering resolved itself into a job for doorman, and from there to chief of service.

Acting in the capacity of chief of service, Tate was given numerous opportunities to study conditions both back and out front of the house. He studied hard and diligently and learned the many operations connected with the work of a successful showman. He didn't learn it all in a day, either; years passed before he won for himself a promotion as assistant manager of the, at the time, newly erected $750,000 Saenger Theatre. Here Tate learned still more. Bit by bit he acquired knowledge that would stand him in good stead when he was ready to take over a house on his own hook. Then came promotion. Tate was made manager of the Strand Theatre in Meridian, Miss., and he's there today. And more than being just there, he's doing some fine work and more than selling his shows.

He has always lived in Meridian. He was born and educated there; and it was in the town that he received his first show education, and is still receiving information and instruction on the show game. The town saw him rise from a reel boy to a manager. He is known to everyone in the town, and is well liked. He belongs to no clubs or lodges. The circuits he has worked with are Saenger and Publix. He is married. About his liking for the show game, he says: "I'd choose it again in a big way—instead of beginning at twelve years old, I'd start at the age of six."

David Silverman

At the age of 8, Silverman began to be interested in the show game. He couldn't help but show some interest in it, as his father then owned a string of theatres in New York. But it wasn't until Silverman left school that he really took a business interest in the management of the theatre, though often after schools and on days off he would work around the houses and pick up various pointers that stood him in good stead.

And they did! Just a short time after he got out of college, Silverman, instead of becoming a bond salesman, decided that he'd rather throw his lot in with the show game, and become an independent exhibitor. He did. Before long he owned the Windsor, Malbin and Royal theatres in lower Manhattan; the New Art Theatre in upper Manhattan; and the Colonial and Bay theatres in Brooklyn, N. Y. He was active in all theatre operation.

Then competition became too hot, and Silverman decided to dispose of the theatres and take a job with some large circuit.

Connecting with a circuit was an easy matter for Silverman, and it was while on a nationally known chain that he learned still more about the intricacies of theatre operation. At the present time he is managing the Belmont Theatre in New York City, and from all reports doing a fine job of it. He knows the local public very well, having been born in New York and worked in practically every part of it. He was educated in the public and high schools of Manhattan, and graduated from New York University. He is a member of the Bronx Chamber of Commerce, Bronx Young Men's Association, and the Masons. He is married and has one child. That he will stay in show business he is pretty certain about. And if he was given an opportunity to choose again, show business would win.

THE RELEASE CHART

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

HAMPTON, IOWA

We saw "FIFTY MILLION FRENCHMEN," all born in America. Some were Hoosiers, some Suckers, some Hawkeyes, a few Badgers and one from Kalamazoo.

The billing said there were fifty million of 'em but we could only count thirty-six all told, not including Olsen and Johnson, who do the funny chores in the picture and help warm things up in spots where it might otherwise become somewhat draggy.

From his name we would take Olsen to be a Swede, but he may be one of the Frenchmen for all we know, and like most Swedes, he is easily tickled, anything will make him laugh. An appendicitis operation or pulling a ten-penny nail out of his foot would tickle Olsen, and when he gets tickled the whole audience gets tickled. Olsen's laugh is not only contagious but it is infectious, and you mix Olsen and Johnson, a Swede and Norwegian, with Fifty Million Frenchmen and you've got SOME mixture.

As a basis for the story a Frenchman bets an American ten thousand francs (that's French money) that he couldn't marry a certain girl within a specified time. The Yank wins the bet, but, after looking the girl over, if it had been us we would have bet him double the amount that we wouldn't marry her during this generation or the one to come, for we couldn't see any plausible reason for marrying her at any time. But it made a good story and it made a good picture and the picture pleased a well filled house at Algona, Iowa, on its second night showing, which would indicate that "FIFTY MILLION FRENCHMEN" is a good picture if you don't care about too many Frenchmen, and there are not too many Frenchmen in this one. We would rate it 70 per cent entertainment.

Capone's Twin

"LITTLE CAESAR." We never knew until we saw this picture that Al Capone had a twin brother and that he had gone into the movies. If Edward G. Robinson, as Rico in "LITTLE CAESAR" isn't a twin brother of Al's then there's no such thing as a twin brother. No sir, they don't have 'em any more in this generation. We wouldn't want to say that the director of "LITTLE CAESAR" had at one time been a racketeer in Chicago, but it's a cinch that he knows too much about thugs and gunmen to make a good Sunday school superintendent, and when he picked Edward G. Robinson to play the part of Rico he must have had a picture of Al Capone on his desk.

As an underworld picture we doubt if "LITTLE CAESAR" has an equal in theme, cast and direction, and we will leave it to you to determine just what effect this type of picture will have on the juvenile mind. We don't know.

What pleased us as much as anything else about this picture was that Rico got shot in the end. That is, we mean he got shot, just where we don't know except that it was by the end of a building and at the end of the picture which made a good ending for the audience and for Rico, and that ought to make a good ending for this rambling description with the addition of this postscript. "LITTLE CAESAR" was 80 per cent entertainment for us, and with the further addition that we saw this picture in the Windsor theatre at Hampton, Iowa, after we had spent a delightful two hours and enjoyed a sumptuous dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Peterson, whose guest we were for the evening, and when you are a guest of these delightful folks you will know what a pleasure it is to be living in Iowa, "Where the Tall Corn Grows."

Nebraskan for Him

"THREE GIRLS LOST." One from Somerville, Missouri, one from Clamith Falls, Oregon, and one from Fremont, Nebraska. We liked the Fremont girl the best because she was the nearest one to our home town and she played just like all of our Nebraska girls play, which is plenty good enough for anybody.

The three girls went to Chicago. The Oregon girl got work in a photo shop posing for pictures for fashion plates. The Missouri girl couldn't find work because they weren't able to show her, and the Nebraska girl got a job in the office of a packing plant at the Union Stock Yards, presumably because she wanted to be close to the cows. The girls all lived together in an apartment house and they all had different ideas about city life. The Oregon girl got sweet on John Wayne, an architect, and then got to stepping out with Lew Cody, which didn't meet with the approval of Wayne, for when they step out with Lew they are going some. The Missouri girl got homesick and wanted to go back where she could see the mules, and the Nebraska girl had left a sweetie in Fremont and thoughts of him didn't dovetail very well with the aroma from the stock yards.

Well, anyhow, it is the same old story of the country girl going to the city, but it is done rather better than common in matters of direction, and the cast is all it should be in pictures of this kind, and, while we never blow on our home state (as you probably have observed), we believe the Fremont girl rather put it over the other two as a finished actress, although we will have to admit that the Oregon girl wasn't so slow herself.

The picture held our interest to the finish, which is proof that it was 60 per cent entertainment or better, for we never stick if it is less.

Kissed the Babies

We don't know what will become of the Universal Film Company now since Bob Greenblat has quit that organization and gone to selling film for Pathe. Bob has been with Universal so long that he is beginning to look like Grandpa Carl. Bob has been kissing the exhibitor babies in the Omaha territory so long that they all cry for him instead of their milk bottle, and if there is a film salesman who can tell bigger fish stories selling film than Bob we would like his picture for our Colyum. Bob is so well known throughout the Omaha territory that our guess is that Universal made a mistake when they let him go, but that's some more of Universal's business.

Dolling Up

We found an exhibitor the other day who was working so hard that the perspiration stood out all over the janitor's face; it was Harry Day of the King theatre at Ida Grove. Harry was installing a washed air cooling system and otherwise dolling the King up to look like a million dollars. Harry recently sold his theatre at Tekamah, Nebraska, and bought the King at Ida Grove from R. M. Bernau. Bernau then bought the Iowa theatre at Lake City and is giving Harry a run for first place among first-class theatres in Northwest Iowa. Both of these boys are showmen, we'll bet money on that.

Golfing as Is

Unless you are a Bobby Jones, don't ever tackle J. Bauma of the Rialto theatre at Pocahontas to play golf. We tied into him the other day at Rolf for a couple of rounds and we have got to tell the truth about it because W. M. Obrecht of the Ritz theatre at Rolf kept the score and he threatened to write the facts to the Herald.

This course has trees scattered all over it and we played every tree there was, except those behind us, and when we finished, every tree looked like a skinned rabbit, and the caretaker threatened to sue us for damage.

S O S from Montana

And now comes an S O S from Montana. A letter from Ed Lake, of the Lake theatre at Baker, Montana, urging us to come and visit him, and when one gets an invitation of that kind from a man he never saw, you can tell 'em, Mabel, that it makes life seem worth living. He warns us that when we get there we are not to register at a hotel. Are we going to Montana? Well, you tell 'em, Abner, you tell 'em. Montana is the state to excite poetic sentiment. Her gorgeous mountains, her peaceful valleys, her babbling brooks, her magnificent scenery and her Senator Walsh (who ought to be a Republican but isn't), not to mention her people. Out there is where they have the REAL folks. Ed, you got yourself into something when you wrote that letter.

Ed says he enjoys reading our colyum. There is one exhibitor who is not afraid to tell the truth (the rest of 'em belong to the oyster family) and when we get out there we are going to catch Ed a mess of rainbow trout just to prove to him that what we say about fishing is no bull. We have been ashamed of ourself for not going into Montana before this, but Ed's letter settles it, and from this on our slogan will be "Ho For Montana."

EXHIBITOR PROFITS

¶ After all, you judge the success of your theatres by how much money they put in the bank for you. You judge producing companies by how much profit their pictures bring you. ¶ This season more than ever the PARAMOUNT exhibitor has been conspicuous by the amounts of profits he has banked. His prosperity has stood out among all the merchants in his town. Everywhere business men in all lines are talking about it. ¶ In the next few weeks and in the coming season of 1931-2 exhibitors need PARAMOUNT'S consistent quality more vitally than in any other season in history. Thinking showmen know that and are acting upon it.

The handling is different in that Jones gets over his instructional stuff against a comedy background supplied by Joe Brown and Frank Craven, with Richard Barthelmess introducing Jones in a logical narrative sequence. This treatment is to prevail throughout the remaining 11 in the series, thereby giving star value as well as Jones' name and the instructive value of the world's greatest golfer. PARAMOUNT guaranteed the success of "CITY STREETS" at box offices by loading its cast with five of the livest, most up-and-coming names in show business today. Personalities that no film fan can pass up. In addition, PARAMOUNT picked the livest picture subject available today, brought one of America's best authors (Dashiell Hammett) to Hollywood to write the story and assigned a truly great showman mind, Rouben Mamoulian, to the directorial job. Thus the raving praise that greeted "CITY STREETS" at its Coast previews was earned and expected. "CITY STREETS" stands out head and shoulders above the spring product today and will get smash-hit grosses because PARAMOUNT, the industry's leading producer, lavished its very best on it!

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 103, No. 4 — April 25, 1931

Guess Work and Statistics

ONE of the most earnest endeavors of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD is to achieve for the industry a sound background of substantial statistics. A lack of adequate data of a basic character has been the subject of comment by every banker and business man who has come newly into the business in the last quarter of a century. More recently the HERALD has been successful in the collection and presentation of figures and material never previously available. Response and appreciation from many and varied interests have been most gratifying.

Probably no other industry has meanwhile been to such a degree subject to the whimsies and fancies of promoters and other persons inclined to manufacture statistics to suit their special purposes of the immediate moment, regardless of general consequence. The result has been that many, and perhaps most, of the figures concerning the industry which have gained wide circulation and acceptance have been at the best merely educated guess and at the worst they have been sheer fictions.

One such figure has in the last year gained considerable circulation and apparent acceptance—that is the statement, generally accredited to Professor Irving Fisher of Yale, that there are 115,000,000 box-office patrons of the motion picture in the United States. It is most obvious that in a population of say 125,000,000 persons there are enough of the infantile and the extreme aged, to say nothing about those to whom the motion picture is geographically inaccessible, to make that figure preposterous. A research expert of the Harvard business school the other day took a set of currently circulated figures and proved, if the figures were correct, that the average admission price for motion picture theatres was $0.1301. If you can believe that then the figures are good enough for you.

As to the 115,000,000 patrons in the United States, it is obvious that if the able Professor Fisher did quote such a figure he got it from some source he thought authoritative, but it is equally obvious that he did not bring to bear on the item his usually keen analytical mind.

In pursuit of a better basis of guess the HERALD interrogated a number of well informed motion picture executives and received a series of answers estimating the real supporting audience of the motion picture for this country at from 45,000,000 to 75,000,000. Those figures are presented here for precisely what they are, guesses. Anyone who purports to know better should be asked for the basis of his data. The fact is that the motion picture is not yet one hundred per cent sold to its potential audience. That is no indictment of the screen, it is a fact of experience and development. The art of publication from type with five centuries behind it is, even yet, through the daring and enterprise of new publishers, finding previously unknown markets and audiences in these intensively exploited United States.

A Genius of Broadway

THE passing of Joseph Leblang and the remarkable homage paid to his success by the amusement industry brings one to consideration of the significant fact that he was outstandingly the greatest merchandiser of entertainment on Broadway. His twenty millions were made in a business of which the major components were location, price and volume. Thousands were sold the idea that at Joe Leblang's they could get the most show for the least money—always. His golden opportunity was a service alike to the dramatic producers and to the public, for which there was no prior mechanism. He gleaned the reward of successful pioneering. He served mightily in maintaining the institution which we call Broadway, the most valuable element of which is the intangible, the public habit.

The Nickelodeon Notion

MR. COURTLAND SMITH declares that the motion picture which started in a store is going to return to a store. This is taken to reflect Mr. Smith's opinion that the mechanicized theatre proposition which he is promoting is going to supplant the imposing institution which is the modern motion picture theatre.

Making due allowance for promotional enthusiasm, it still remains something of a shock to encounter such an opinion. The record, as we read it, indicates rather plainly that an important influence in the development of the motion picture itself has been the development of better theatres—theatres which progressively have become more comfortable, more luxurious and more beautiful.

It seems to us a very elemental principle in mob psychology that a great and imposing theatre possesses the faculty of assisting materially in creating that spirit of illusion which is indispensable to successful theatrical entertainment. That the small, mechanical store-show can do but little in transporting the patron from the oppressions of commonplace life seems obvious indeed.

The mechanicized theatre may take its place—and a proper one—alongside the orange-drink stand and other nickel-catching devices along populous thoroughfares, but that it is at all likely to exert an appreciable influence against the modern motion picture theatre is something of which even the sonorous voice of Mr. Smith shall not convince us.

We Like It Straight

RECORD a new cultural invasion by the motion picture. Hollywood coiffures, spread to the world by the screen, made a market for an American girl who toured the Orient with a permanent wave machine, curling the hair of the slant-eyed beauties of many lands, including a princess of Thibet and the daughter of a Sultan in Java. We deplore and view with alarm. Curly hair on a geisha would affect us in the same manner as a bell-crown plug hat on a blanketed Indian.

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

MARK LARKIN, director of publicity for the Hollywood office of the Hays organization, has just had a narrow escape from becoming one of the most important—and overworked—person in the picture industry.

A few days ago Mr. Hays called all the studio publicity heads together at luncheon and lectured on the Code. He had many words to say about salacious advertising and exploitation and told the publicity men it was up to them to guard the fair name of the industry and keep it unsullied. At the close of his address he told them that if, at any time, any of them were in doubt as to what action should be taken, they could consult Mark Larkin, "who," the general said, "is here for that purpose." Mr. Hays left to address another gathering and one of the heavyweight publicity heads was on his feet immediately.

"I move," he said, "that this gathering resolve that all publicity stories and stills and all exploitation ideas be submitted to Mr. Larkin before being sent out. I feel that this will protect us and ensure strict adherence to General Hays' ideas."

Everyone immediately got the gag except Larkin and one other. This other raised an objection.

"It sometimes takes me three hours to read all the stories and inspect all stills submitted in a day on my one lot," he said seriously, "and I don't believe Mr. Larkin would have time to do this."

"That has nothing to do with the question," interposed another. "The main thing is to do as the General desires. He has said that Mr. Larkin is here for that purpose. If he cannot find the time, the General of course will provide him with assistance."

There was some discussion, pro and con, until finally it was suggested that the matter be tabled until the next meeting. The originator of the brilliant idea was on his feet again.

"I object to any delay," he orated. "This is a vital matter. It concerns not only the personal wishes of General Hays, but also the fair name of the third—or fourth or fifth—greatest industry in the world. We should take action at once."

However, cooler heads prevailed and it was decided to withhold final action for a week. Larkin's face had almost regained its usual healthy color when the meeting broke up.

Big Word Crop Forecast

The literary output on the country promises to be vastly increased in the next year, curiously as an evident consequence of the business depression and unemployment. A considerable portion of the population of New York, having little else to do, has decided to take up writing in a big way. The situation is reflected in the influx of students to the classes in story writing conducted by Thomas H. Uzzell, formerly of Colliers and sundry motion picture connections, now running a fiction academy in the Canadian Pacific Building. Last year there was a thin trickle of novice writers, but now business has picked up with a bang and the plant runs night and day with enrollments running into the hundreds. Lecturing before one of Mr. Uzzell's classes the other night Dr. Walter B. Pitkin, of Columbia University and former story editor for Universal pictures remarked that the first essential of successful fiction writing is "a desire to tell the world." If that is correct the screen industry contains more potential writers than the payroll classifications indicate.

THE publication of the annual report of a motion picture company of important rank was delayed for two days recently by a debate between the management and a banking house in Wall Street as to whether the signature of the responsible officer should follow the subscription of "Yours sincerely," or "Yours truly."

For the assistance of puzzled industrial diplomats faced with this problem in the future, it will perhaps be of service to offer some suggestions gleaned from history.

Woodrow Wilson started his letters with "May I not," and concluded them: "With renewed assurances of continued high esteem." General U. S. Grant also had a good last line, which no one believed, when he signed "Your Obedient Servant."

Possibly the best signature from a chief executive on an annual report to stockholders would be that line so dear to our grandfathers who used to write: "Hoping this finds you as well as it leaves us at present."

ONCE upon a time there was a New York motion picture purchasing agent who was a born chisler of high degree. He bought everything cheaper and he fought over counts and breakage claims and such items in a tempo of sheer dseperation. His pet economy was cheaper printing. He waved the temptation of bigger jobs in the future ahead of the whole array of struggling little printers and for a time bought at something close to less than cost. But the big prfitable jobs never came through.

Then came the day when after sending away the plates for a half a million run of two color heralds he found the picture held up and the literature appropriation cancelled. He called the printer who regretfully said: "Sorry, but I cannot cancel the order for you, Mr. ————, because the job has been run. It came off the press an hour ago."

The fact was the job had not been put on the press. But in the next hour the printer put the plates on a hand press and ran off six copies of the job.

With the six copies in hand he called on the purchasing agent with his bill. "Too bad," said the tough buyer, as he OK'd the invoice, "Just junk the heralds."

In this manner the printer made a sufficient net profit to cover his prior losses. He since has refused to bid for work from that purchasing agent.

Roast Underdone

A thousand or so men and women, most of them connected in some way with the motion pictures of Hollywood, thronged to the Salle de Oro of the Hotel Biltmore last Saturday night to the first Wampas-Writers roast dinner. Every face bore a joyfully expectant look. It was not to be, perhaps, a "feast of reason and a flow of soul," but certainly it would be a feast of roasting and a flow of wit. And why not? Wasn't the program prepared by the brightest minds among the screen writers and publicity men? Were not all the scintillating skits and blackouts written by the keenest minds, the cleverest wits in the business? Were not grudges to be paid off in such a way that no one could take offense? Surely. Therefore, the expectant looks. The program started, continued, finished. The work of the brilliant writers and press agents was spread before the audience which—most of the time—yawned. And the payoff came when a big executive, leaving the hall, said drily: "Now I know what's the matter with the pictures."

Gallup Plans Nine Contact Men on Merchandising

A new plan of "simplified merchandising" in the field will be a part of next season's selling plans of United Artists.

The plan, developed by Bruce Gallup, U. A. publicity and ad chief, will place nine contact men in strategically located spots throughout the country who will seek to simplify and reduce costs of present company methods of merchandising as it affects exploitation, publicity and sales promotion.

Each contact will work in with division and branch managers on sales promotion, and with exhibitors in simplifying their merchandising problem and creating new methods of putting the show over. The assignment also will place the contact men in close touch with newspapers and critics in the respective territories.

In addition, Gallup will place in the West Coast studio two additional contacts, one to have a roving assignment creating features for the contact men for use in newspapers, and the second to come from an advertising agency. The latter will watch for merchandising possibilities from the start of production. The system in use in studios at present calls for advertising agency help after the picture has been completed. It is Gallup's plan to have that work accomplished simultaneously with release.

Film Bank Scheme, a Failure Last Year, Revived in London

London—The creation of a loans corporation to assist independent British producers, which fell through last year because of lack of prestige behind it, has been revived with the arrival of a Colonial banker.

It is proposed to form a co-operative bank to advance credits against good contracts, now refused by British banks. It is understood important names are behind the idea.

British Await Word of RKO Chain as Plunkett Arrives

Publix Division Chiefs Called To New York for Conferences

Product requirements and operating policies at Publix houses for the coming season will be discussed in New York by division managers, who have been ordered to the home office for conferences late this month with company executives. Date of the conference has not been set.

JOHN C. FLINN came to the motion picture industry from the New York Herald and a newspaper career of capable performance. He went into the publicity and advertising department of Famous-Players-Lasky and became the successor of Ben Schulberg as the head of that department when Mr. Schulberg moved on into other executive capacities. At Famous Players, Mr. Flinn's influences appeared in many notable screen campaigns, conspicuously in the exploitation of "The Covered Wagon." He joined the P. D. C. organization at its founding in charge of its advertising and publicity affairs and became shortly its general manager and a vice president. He went over with the Pathe-P. D. C. merger as a vice president and presently became concerned largely with production affairs.

Exhibitors Plan World Meeting May 18, in Rome

Rome—A conference of the International Federation of Cinematograph Exhibitors is being organized by the National Fascisti Fideration of the Entertainment Trades. The confab will take place at Rome from May 18 to 22.

The Fascisti Federation is a branch of the General Fascisti Federation of Italian Industries, headed by Prof. Giovanni Dettori, chief of political economy at Genoa University.

European exhibitor bodies will be represented at the international convention in Rome, with little likelihood of American theatre owners sending delegates.

Not Remotely Responsible Yet Faces Trial May 6

Witch Burners in Full Cry Demanding Sacrifice—First Political Sniping at Bureau of Standards

By LIN BONNER

Fate placed John C. Flinn in the Pathe Sound Studios in New York City, the morning of December, 1929, when four dancing girls and six men were burned to death.

Some other influence put Flinn "on the spot" to "take the rap" for the disaster.

May 6, he is docketed to go on trial charged with second degree manslaughter. If found guilty, he may be sentenced to fifteen years in prison.

Everyone in the know of the motion picture industry is aware that John C. Flinn was not remotely responsible for the deaths of that unfortunate half-score of men and young women.

No Official Exoneration

Ever since his arrest, a day or so after the tragedy, Flinn seemingly has been left on the spot.

No official word of exoneration, so far as I have been able to discover, has been offered for him by any of his superiors or associates.

From a robust, virile personality whose straightforward challenge in any situation made him a decided figure in the picture business, John Flinn has become a man seriously harassed and worn.

Flinn is even, at the moment, without a position, so far as the corporation to which he gave service is concerned, having been eliminated when Pathe sold out recently. No provision, apparently, was made for him; the fact that he must go on trial for a responsibility that was not his seems to have been forgotten.

Meanwhile Flinn has gone into an agency enterprise, through a connection of his own making.

Unfortunately for John Flinn, he was "put on the spot" at a moment when political sharpshooters were looking for something to snipe at in the administration of New York City.

A hint that there had been connivance between someone who was supposed to represent Pathe, in the matter of a sprinkler system at the studio and the Board of Standards and Appeals in New York provided the snipers with a target. They began to shoot at the Board of Standards and Appeals.

SCREEN'S 35th ANNIVERSARY

The first season's announcement from the archives of Quigley Publications tells how industry was born on Broadway thirty-five years ago this week

THIRTY-FIVE years ago this week the motion picture screen had its premiere for the amusement world at Koster & Bial's Music Hall in Herald Square on Broadway. The motion picture, which first came to Broadway in a peep show parlor opened in May the year before, was then just eleven months old in commercial experience. The pressure of showmanship, insisting on combining the peep show films with the magic lantern so that instead of a single file trickle of customers whole audiences could be entertained in theatres, had borne fruit swiftly.

The enterprise was in the hands of the late Norman Charles Raff of Canton, Ohio, who had come to New York and West Orange in 1893 to try out the marvel of the living picture machine, the Kinetoscope, which had been accumulating dust in the corner of Thomas A. Edison's laboratory ever since the day of its completion in 1889.

For two or three years the firm of Raff & Gammon prospered in the new industry, but with the coming of competitors, infringers and interlopers a wildcatting period set in, so much to the annoyance of Mr. Raff that he sold out, taking a profit of something close to a hundred thousand dollars, and returned to Canton.

Along with the return of Mr. Raff went a set of filing cases which contained all the records of his pioneering of the motion picture's commercial career. He set up an estate of many acres adjacent to the city of Canton and the records went into the loft of his barn, where his team of dappled bays was stabled and the silver mounted harness hung in neatly sparkling rows. Those old records stayed there many and many a year, among them a little purple covered booklet written by Mr. Raff to announce the coming of the projection machine and the screen to the world market.

The world rolled along and was remade by electricity and the motor car and the motion picture. The old Raff farm and estate grew into an imposing section of the city of Canton and Mr. Raff became much more wealthy perhaps than if he had remained in the hectic motion picture industry through its outlaw years. The old barn with its treasure trove of early documents became a handsome garage with a fleet of cars down where the bays had been stabled in luxury, but the papers remained in the loft above.

One day in 1925 when Terry Ramsaye, now editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, was accumulating material for his "A Million and One Nights," the history of the motion picture, Norman C. Raff came to New York on a visit to look at the motion picture Broadway which was born in his office, and to stop once again at the Waldorf Astoria, which had been his home in those early days. Mr. Raff, attending a show on Broadway, discovered a motion picture prologue of historical character, carrying Ramsaye's name as producer. He communicated with the writer of screen history and subsequently presented him with the accumulation of records in the garage at Canton. Thus the little purple booklet which is the screen's Book of Genesis has come into the archives of Quigley Publications. It is the only copy known to have survived the three and a half decades.

Amusingly enough, along with the file copy of the booklet came the printer's proofs with many revisions and a file of correspondence of controversy with the printer. In sequel there was a lawsuit over the printer's bill, revealing that the literature which announced this industry, with its quarter billion dollars of working capital today, cost less than five hundred dollars.

Back of this introduction of the projection machine is a story of complex controversy. While showmen demanded such a machine of Raff & Gammon, and while Mr. Raff continued to demand it of Mr. Edison, the wizard of Orange declined to deliver it. He had in fact a half perfected projection device and sent it over to Raff & Gammon's office in the Postal Telegraph

THE LATEST MARVEL

THE "Vitascope"

A NEW MACHINE is now ready to be exhibited to the public, which is probably the most remarkable and startling in its results of any that the world has ever seen. Several marvels of inventive genius have, in past years, gone forth from the Edison Works, located at Orange, New Jersey. "The Wizard of Menlo Park" has conceived and in due course perfected the Phonograph, the Kinetoscope and the Kinetophone, each of which in turn, has excited the wonder and amazement of the public and, from a practical standpoint, opened up opportunities for exhibition enterprises, many of which are paying handsomely to this day.

THE NEW MACHINE

which is now to be launched upon the waye of public curiosity, promises to be a greater marvel and to bring larger material results to exhibitors than any of its predecessors which have been constructed at the Edison Works . . . . . This latest scientific wonder has been named the "VITASCOPE," as it projects apparently living figures and scenes upon a screen or canvas before an audience. In bringing this machine to its present state of perfection, many months of experiment and expert labor, as well as large outlays of money have been devoted to the work . . . . . The new machine will be made by the Edison Manufacturing Company, where the Phonograph and Kinetoscope are made. Several years ago Mr. Edison conceived the idea of projecting moving figures and scenes upon a canvas or screen, before an audience . . . . .

The problem of forecast for the destiny of the new born art of the screen was admirably met by Mr. Raff in the words which he put on these pages 'way back in that spring of 1896 when hardly more than a dozen persons in the world had yet seen a motion picture projected.

FROM THE BOOK OF GENESIS

HERE ARE FACSIMILE reproductions of the presentation with which Norman C. Raff, exploiting Edison's picture devices, went before the amusement world with the machine which founded today's great industry of the motion picture

OWING to pressure of his extensive business, he could not fully develop his inventive ideas at the time. However, he put his experts to work upon a machine which should reproduce moving figures upon a small scale, and the Kinetoscope was the result . . . .

After perfecting the Kinetoscope, Mr. Edison turned his attention to his original plan of inventing a machine capable of showing the moving figures and scenes, life-size, and before a large audience. His ideas soon took practical form, and as long ago as last summer a very creditable result had been obtained; but Mr. Edison was unwilling to give his unqualified approval until the highest practicable success had been achieved. Since then, Mr. Edison's experts have been putting his ideas and suggestions to practical test and execution and, in addition, some of the original ideas and inventive skill of Mr. Thomas Armat (the rising inventor, of Washington, D. C.) have been embodied in the "Vitascope," the final result being that to-day it can almost be said that the impossible has been accomplished, and a machine has been constructed which transforms dead pictures into living moving realities . . . .

A Subject can be shown for ten or fifteen minutes if desired, although four or five minutes is better

THEREFORE

It is apparent that the field covered by the "Vitascope" is vastly greater than that of the Kinetoscope, in which the length of exhibition of a subject is practically limited to about one minute. Almost any happening or occurrence; any subject having motion of living beings or other objects, singly or in groups, in city or country, in-doors or out, and in any part of the world, will, in our judgment, be within the scope of the new machine, and can be reproduced, true to life in size, movement and every detail, before an audience, however large. We need not dilate upon the tremendous possibilities which these facts involve, although they may be even more far-reaching, scientific and advantageous to mankind than any of us now imagine, to say nothing of their practical benefit and their . .

promise of large profit to those who control the exhibition of the "Vitascope"

Musical Accompaniments

MUSIC CAN BE VERY APPROPRIATELY AND EFFECTIVELY RENDERED SIMULTANEOUSLY WITH THE EXHIBITION OF MANY VITASCOPE SUBJECTS.

ALL SUBJECTS MADE UP OF DANCING, MARCHING, OR OTHER ACTS AND SCENES WHERE MUSICAL SELECTIONS IN TIME WITH THE MOVEMENT ARE IN PLACE, CAN BE MADE MORE INTERESTING AND REMARKABLE BY THE ADDITION OF MUSIC.

THE EDISON . . . . PHONOGRAPH

CAN THUS BE UTILIZED TO RENDER BAND AND ORCHESTRA SELECTIONS. A PIANO; A GROUPE OF MANDOLINS OR GUITARS; A COMBINATION OF VIOLINS AND WIND INSTRUMENTS, OR EVEN AN ORCHESTRA OR BAND (WHERE THE EXHIBITION IS GIVEN IN A THEATRE OR LARGE HALL) WILL, IN EITHER CASE, ADD MATERIALLY TO THE NOVELTY AND ATTRACTIVENESS OF THE VITASCOPE.

building in New York along with a mechanic to tinker with it and keep his agents amused. He had no intention of putting the picture on the screen for the trade so long as the market was absorbing the peep show Kinetoscope machines by the hundred. Mr. Edison, somewhat like some of the newer figures in the sound picture of today, thought of the motion picture industry as a machine business. Mr. Edison was a maker of machines, not a maker of pictures. Conversing with Mr. Raff one day at West Orange, he said: "I am afraid that if we put the picture on the screen there will be use for about ten projectors in the United States and with that many we could show the motion picture to everybody in the country in a few months and destroy all its novelty."

Amusing as that viewpoint may seem today, it had its elements of logic then when all the motion picture's precedents and experience were ahead of it.

But while the mechanic tinkered about the Raff & Gammon offices with the Edison projector which was not fated to perform satisfactorily, down in Washington, D. C., young Thomas Armat, inventor of the Vitascope, first publicly demonstrated at Atlanta in 1895, succeeded in getting the attention of Raff & Gammon. They made a deal with Armat and brought the machine to New York. Here they intrigued Mr. Edison and William E. Gilmore, his general manager, into a deal to manufacture the Vitascope and permit its exploitation as an Edison machine of "Armat design." They demanded and insisted upon the Edison name for merchandising reasons.

Here in these old pages one discovers the forecast of the sound picture, recalling the while that Mr. Edison first conceived the motion picture as an accessory to the phonograph. Today the sound machine is the accessory to the picture, but so dominant an accessory it has remade the picture art.

Eighty Vitascope machines were made and sold before differences arose between Edison and Armat, resulting in a cancellation of the deal and the launching of the Edison Projecting Kinetoscope. The Vitascope was sold on a state's rights basis with a contract which is remarkably like the better state's rights contracts of today. Several of the surviving motion picture enterprises of today can trace their genealogy to Vitascope contracts. One of the most conspicuous successes of the early day was in the motion picture career of William T. Rock, a founder of Vitagraph, now absorbed into Warner Brothers. Mr. Rock took the Vitascope to New Orleans and opened a store show in Canal street in 1896.

Thomas Armat, the inventor of the Vitascope, prospered considerably for that day and in the first decade of the motion picture prevailed with his patents and added some $350,000 in royalties to his already substantial fortune. He now lives in Washington, D. C., enjoying a philosophic view of the screen as the world institution that it has become today.

Lays Television Disappointment to Impatience

That television thus far has been "somewhat of a disappointment" is the feeling in many quarters, "despite the many advances made during recent years," says Hugo Gernsback, pioneer in the field.

In explanation Gernsback states that the principal reason is probably "to be found in the impatience of the radio industry, which has been accustomed to sudden advances in its own technique and because the general public has not jumped immediately with both feet into television."

At the same time Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, the inventor, says he does not believe television "will either compare or compete with the film" but predicts it "may take some unexpected turn," adding that "perhaps visual broadcasting combined with sound will furnish a mode of self expression of local talent for local consumption."

EDUCATIONAL RULES TIFFANY SALES FORCE

Tiffany Records Ordered Turned Over to Educational Branch Managers—One Set of Exchanges

Educational dominance of Tiffany assumed definite shape this week when orders were dispatched to the Tiffany sales force to turn over exchange records and accounts data to Educational managers in each territory, and for Tiffany men to take orders hereafter from the Educational branch heads. The order, which automatically submerges the majority of the Tiffany sales personnel, is understood to have resulted in numerous resignations in the Tiffany staff, while at other spots Tiffany personnel was discontinued.

One set of exchanges will be maintained, with actual physical merging of branches commencing at once.

The present Tiffany home office in New York will be discontinued, with exception of the contract approval department, which Carl Goe will direct. The remainder of the Tiffany home office staff will be moved to Educational's headquarters in the Paramount building.

E. W. Hammons, Educational president, will be the big chief of the combined Educational-Tiffany-World Wide unit, with L. A. Young, former Tiffany head, remaining only as a board member. Grant L. Cook, Tiffany executive vice-president, will continue, it is learned from authoritative sources, while Stanley Hatch and Budd Rogers will handle Tiffany sales under A. S. Kirkpatrick, Educational sales head. Gordon White is slated to head the combined advertising and publicity unit, with feature promotional work continuing in charge of Manfred Lee and Joe Rivkin, of Tiffany, and Michael Simmons, of World Wide.

The production lineup still remains a

Fox West Coast Rumors Branded "Vicious, Stupid"

Fox West Coast Theatres vigorously denies "all reports which in any manner foster doubt about the future of this organization." In a message to its managers, who are urged to have "courage and confidence," company executives brand a current crop of rumors as "either baseless, stupid or vicious —or are all three of these."

"Show business is a body of men completely surrounded by rumors," says the message, which states: "It is rumored that all of our executives will retire; that none of them will retire; that we will all get salary cuts; that salaries will be increased; that we are changing our managerial policies; that we contemplate no change in our policies; that the former management is coming back; that the new management is going to continue; that we are selling some of our theatres; that we are selling all of our theatres; that we are going to buy more theatres and build more; that we aren't going to expand any further; that we will absorb another chain; that another chain will absorb us; that we will merge, emerge and submerge."

This message to Fox West Coast managers follows a similar statement issued to other Fox house managers last month from the New York home office.

Paramount 1930 Earnings Exceed Bond Conditions

Earnings of Paramount for 1930 were well ahead of the conditions required in the indenture agreement of the company's bond issues, Ralph Kohn, treasurer, reported this week.

A preliminary audit, Kohn reported, showed consolidated tangible assets, were double indebtedness and bond interest was earned at least 5.25 times. Quick asset ratio was estimated as not less than 2.35 to 1 in relation to current liabilities.

Indenture agreement on the company's bonds rules no dividends shall be paid on the common stock when consolidated earnings before interest are not twice consolidated interest, when tangible assets are not at least one and a half times consolidated indebtedness or when quick assets are not at least double quick liabilities.

An official audit of the company's earnings under the indenture agreement is being prepared by Price, Waterhouse & Co.

Increase 36 Millions Over 1928 and Four Millions Above 1929 —Eight Advance

Despite setbacks in individual units and recent unfavorable earnings trends, the motion picture business as a whole is currently in the strongest working capital position in its history, according to a compilation by MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The film industry now is operating with a net working capital of approximately $214,174,710, the compilation shows. This is an increase of $4,487,836 over 1929 working capital and $36,400,144 above the figures for 1928, when capitalization of most units first started taking on major proportions.

The compilation, based on the latest balance sheets of fifteen motion picture producing, distributing and exhibiting companies, shows four of the units increased their working capital in both years, while two showed successive declines in this all-important item on the balance sheet.

Eight Show Gains Over 1929

Eight of the companies in their latest reports showed gains over 1929 and an equal number had larger net working capital in 1930 than in 1928. Four companies' working capital decreased from 1928 to 1929 but subsequently picked up in substantial volume.

Warner Bros., which in 1928 reported net current liabilities of $1,525,827, had net working capital of $11,323,401 in 1929 and $12,507,630 in 1930. Eastman Kodak's working increased $27,862,000 from 1928 to 1929, showing the largest individual gain in the compilation, but fell off in the following year.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum, whose working capital in 1928 amounted to only $2,015, showed $3,618,674 in 1929 and $9,498,134 in the latest report. Net working capital of Loew's, Inc., dropped $9,294,913 from 1928 to 1929, but gained $3,110,185 in the subsequent year.

MGM and Paramount Increased

Another company whose working capital increased in 1930 was Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which lost from 1928 to 1929 but in the next year increased $4,942,964 to $3,497,337 above the 1928 figures. Paramount Publix increased its working capital from $22,092,712 in 1929 to $23,497,831 at the end of 1930, where it closely approximated the 1928 total.

Fox's working capital successively declined, amounting to $18,465,861 in the latest balance sheet, compared with $22,909,917 in 1928. Figures for General Theatres Equipment showed a decline of $3,259,204 from 1929 to 1930.

Decision on Film Probe in Canada Expected in Week

Ottawa—The Federal investigation into the picture business in Canada under the Combines Act cost $100,000. Expenses were largely legal fees, witness fees, travelling expenditures and court costs. An array of brilliant Canadian lawyers was present throughout the hearings. Witnesses were brought from many Canadian centers with all expenses paid.

Practically every film exchange in Canada was represented by at least one lawyer because of possibility of becoming involved in the discussion.

The probe was authorized by the Department of Labor, Ottawa, last September, shortly after the Conservative Government came into power. Books of various companies were privately examined over a period of several months under the watchful eye of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and public sittings occupied the greater part of February and March at Toronto. The findings have not yet been reported to the government by Peter White, K. C., commissioner appointed to conduct the probe, but it is intimated that the report will be in the hands of the Canadian Cabinet for action before the end of April.

Despite the fact that the outlay for the probe has largely been borne by the Federal Department of Labor, if a big fine is imposed, proceeds of the conviction will go to the Ontario Provincial Government. There is a possibility of one large fine, it is hinted.

Toronto—With the smoke of the Federal probe into the Canadian film business having cleared away, N. L. Nathanson, former managing director of Famous Players Canadian, has returned to Toronto from a lengthy vacation in Florida.

WARNER-FN OFFERS 66 STARS TO "PROTECT EXHIBITORS' INVESTMENT"

Each Company Will Make 35 Features

Thirteen Series Coming From Vitaphone; Morris Elected to Board, Convention Is Told

By CHARLES S. AARONSON

Atlantic City (QP)—Warner-First National is focusing its production policy on stars, "because we believe that star values are the only definite assurance the exhibitor can have to protect his investment," Sam E. Morris, vice president and general manager, declared at the close of the Eastern division's three-day sales meeting which ended April 22 at the Hotel Traymore.

In line with this policy Morris announced the featuring of 66 players during the 1931-32 season, including 70 pictures, of which 35 will be Warner product and 35 First National. Fourteen Vitaphone shorts series will be produced, for the most part at the Brooklyn studio, with a negligible number of individual shorts on the schedule.

Morris refused to either affirm or deny reports current at the convention that "seventy-or-none" will be the sales policy of the two companies.

10 Warner Star Series

Ten star series are on the feature schednle for Warners, including one with Constance Bennett, and in addition 18 designated as "all star" productions, while First National will offer ten star series, and 10 of the "all star" films.

In the Warner group are three with Kay Francis, three with William Powell, one John Barrymore, one Dolores Costello, two with George Arliss, three with Winnie Lightner and one with Constance Bennett, titled "Bought." Marion Marsh, the Trilby of "Svengali," will also be featured, as will Barbara Stanwyck, probably in three love stories.

Heading the First National list is the European stage star of renown, Lil Dagover, just signed to a long term contract after months of search and many tests, as First National's foreign star. Due in this country within a month or two, Dagover will first appear in "I Spy," from the novel by Baroness Carla von Jensen, a story of espionage and intrigue, telling the story of a famous European spy. Wilhelm Dieterle, now directing the Richard Barthelmess starring vehicle, "Spent Heroes," for new season release, will direct "I Spy." "Spent Heroes" is the new title of the Barthelmess film, previously called "Spent Bullets."

Other stars on the Warner list for the new season are Reginald Owen, Ben Lyon, Joan Blondell, Warren William, of the New York stage, Robert Elliott, James Cagney, H. B. Warner, Doris Kenyon, Frank Fay, Anthony Bushell, Charles Butterworth,

Mr. Exhibitor!

A fascinating series of short subjects is headed your way. Under the general title of "The Magic Carpet of Movietone," Fox is now making plans to release travel subjects in natural sound, perhaps 26 all told. The number depends on selling plans yet to be formulated.

The first eight seen yesterday are as varied as they are interesting and unusual. They are "The King's Armada," showing manoeuvres of England's Mediterranean Fleet; "Happy Days in the Tyrol," which concerns itself with yodeling and Bavarian dances; "Giants of the Jungle," in which elephants at Assame prove to be very good actors; "The World at Prayer," which gives an idea how different religions are observed in different corners of the earth; "The Pageant of Siam"; "Wild Life on the Veldt," a miniature "Trader Horn" unusually well turned out; "The Wild West of Today," photographed in etching-like fashion by Charles W. Herbert, one of Fox Movietone News' ace cameramen and "Down to Damascus," colorful and picturesque close-up in one of the oldest cities in the world.

The idea is Truman H. Talley's and the editing job Louis de Rochemont's. Both deserve a lot of credit for what has the earmarks of a fine series of short subjects.

Kent Analyzes New Films as Paramount Opens Coast Meet

San Francisco (QP)—The first day of the Paramount convention opened with following telegram received from Governor Rolph:

"I welcome executives of Paramount Publix Corporation to California in San Francisco for an international convention. These makers of world entertainment are celebrating the twentieth birthday of their company. In that time Adolph Zukor, Jesse Lasky, S. R. Kent, Sam Katz and their colleagues have brought to us hundreds of famous stars and hundreds of fine pictures. I congratulate them and wish them continuous prosperity. I know that the State of California is glad that Paramount has again come to this state. Their industry is the largest of the state, and we are very proud of all they do for the welfare of our people."

Principal business the first day, Wednesday, was official announcement of Paramount product, which concurred with product as published exclusively in Motion Picture Herald. S. R. Kent directed the detailed discussion of the new features.

In an interview, George E. Akerson announced that he will go to Europe with Kent in September for a survey of the film industry there. He says his job is that of general public relationship.

Kent declared that sex and gangster emphasis in films is a thing of the past.

International Educational Film Conference Set for Vienna

Vienna—It is planned to hold an international conference on educational films in Vienna May 26 to 31, under the patronage of the Federal Minister of Education and the mayor of Vienna. Prominent experts and men of science will attend to discuss the use of instructive and cultural films in schools and centers of public education.

Nine commissions will be appointed to deal with the individual aspects of visual instruction such as pedagogics and psychology of the educational film, the film in the service of science, comparative value of 16 and 35 millimeter films, film testing, training of teachers, and the film as a factor in adult instruction. A special committee will be appointed to study film problems of the day, such as sound films.

New Vaude Policy Fails to Click

Lima, O.—Combination musical tabs and pictures policy inaugurated three weeks ago by George Ritzler, at the Lyric, has been discontinued, and the house has resumed its old policy of straight pictures. Business under the new arrangement was nothing to rave about, due partially, it is believed, to the union having had the house spotted as unfair in the past.

FILM SHARES MAKE SHARP BREAK; $3,500,000 DROP IN PATHE ASSETS

Shrinkage from Deal and 1930 Operating Losses Offset by $4,000,000 Interest in Dupont-Pathe

The picture of the effect on Pathe Exchange, Inc., of the RKO deal is revealed in a comparison of the pro forma consolidated balance sheet of that company as of December 27, 1928, with the balance sheet of December 28, 1929.

The deal plus operating losses during 1930 shrunk the company's assets about $3,500,000 as indicated by the following comparative table. This has been offset in the balance sheet by an appraisal of $4,000,000 for the interest in DuPont-Pathe.

	1930	1929
Cash, Notes, Accounts Receivable, Advances	$1,442,961	$ 2,204,949
Inventories less Production Loans	2,186,728	6,360,461
Fixed Assets less Studio Mortgage	379,283	1,983,388
	$4,008,972	$10,548,798
Investments	6,244	106,950
	$4,015,216	$10,655,748
RKO Notes	2,486,073	... .
	$6,501,289	$10,655,748
Liabilities except Debentures and stock	1,227,628	1,736,387
	$5,273,661	$ 8,919,361
DuPont Stock	4,000,000
	$1,273,661

One important revelation of the pro forma balance sheet of December 27, 1930, is that the RKO notes held as of that date by the company amounted to $2,486,073. This figure is interesting in the light of the fact that the notice to the stockholders, in which approval of the deal was asked, stated that the price to be paid by RKO was $4,630,789, of which $500,000 would be in cash.

Win "Weenie" Wurst

"Side Show," a coming Warner picture, is to have an honest-to-goodness all-star cast. Roy Del Ruth, who will direct, raided Downey's Side Shows at Sherman, Cal., and took with him "Weenie" Wurst, the living skeleton; "Maggie," the fat girl; "Friend Barbara," the bearded lady; "Chip," the tattooed man; and "Poison" Warren, the barker, whose props are a long black mustache and a ditto whip.

Frederick Mercy Buys Yakima Valley Theatres

Yakima, Wash.—Frederick Mercy, Sr., has bought the stock of Yakima Valley Theatres, Inc., owned by Jensen and von Herberg interests. The deal also gives him control of Yakima Valley Poster Company and the Empire theatre building, leased to Hughes-Franklin.

Wallace May Leave Paramount

Hollywood—Richard Wallace, a veteran on Paramount's directorial staff, will not renew his contract upon expiration in June, it is understood. Wallace is said to have closed with another studio on a long-term agreement.

Prices Below 1930 Lows Despite Closing Up on Late Rally After General Decline

By THE ANALYST

"Downtown"—spurred by rumors and speculation—went off at a tangent on amusement shares as the general market broke sharply during the early days of the past week, and although individual issues closed up on a Thursday afternoon rally, prices closed below the 1930 lows.

Paramount, Fox, Loew's and General Theatre Equipment were hit hardest. "Downtown" telephoned frantically "uptown" to find out what the reasons were, and "uptown" tried to find out "downtown." There were evidences of some speculative hysteria in what happened.

Adolph Zukor's conservative statement to the Paramount stockholders should have had a reassuring effect on the market, and there was no apparent development in the week's news to account for the drops. In fact, from a strictly trade point of view, amusements shares should have held against a declining market. Instead, they were knocked for greater losses than almost any other class of security.

RKO demonstrated strength by resisting the reactionary influences of a general decline and special weakness in amusements and, although it sold off more than a point, the stock encountered strong support at the low.

A rally of more than a point from its low of the week was made by Eastman

CONTRACT BATTLE BETWEEN HOYTS, UNION, EXCHANGES DEADLOCKED

RKO Will Maintain Separate Radio, Pathe Units in London

Bernstein and Evans Understood Sponsoring British International Expansion to Fight Gaumont

By W. H. MOORING

London—Since RKO secured control of Pathe, there has been much speculation in England concerning the future of Producers' Distributing Corp., the Pathe British unit.

In view of the fact that Radio Pictures, the RKO British unit, had been built up to one of the strongest distributing organizations operating in England, it was felt that P. D. C. might cease to function.

Now, Reginald Smith, managing director of P. D. C., has announced formation of a new concern—P. D. C., Ltd.—which will operate entirely independently of Radio, with separate staff and headquarters at Great Newport street, London.

P. D. C., Ltd., will distribute all Hollywood product of RKO-Pathe.

Directors of the new company are Reginald Smith, managing director; Thomas S. Delehanty, and Randle Holmes, with Jack Kennedy as alternate director for Delehanty.

In addition, P. D. C. will have eight British pictures, of which a few will come from the new British production unit, A. R. P., Ltd. (Associated Radio Pathe, Ltd.), formed with Basil Dean and R. Holmes on the board with the express object of keeping Radio and P. D. C. supplied with quota films.

The new plant is now in advanced stage of erection and will be modeled as a miniature of the RKO lot in Hollywood.

Production will begin there in July, but meantime Basil Dean is working at the British Lion studios at Beaconsfield. First is nearing completion with Gracie Fields, Lancashire comedienne, starring. Titled "Sally in Our Alley," it is based on the stage comedy, "The Likes of 'er."

Maxwell's Theatre Activity

Considerable interest was created in London as a result of the acquisition by Associated British Cinemas (John Maxwell, B. I. P. circuit) of several of the key Bernstein theatres.

The Lewisham Hippodrome is the latest to pass over, and in well informed circles it is said that Bernstein and Will Evans (late of Gaumont-British theatres) are working hand in hand, and that they are to form the nucleus of a larger British International theatre scheme. Maxwell is understood to be out to beat the Gaumont group.

Actors' Equity Sets Officers for '31-33

The "regular ticket" selected by the nominating committee, which will be offered to the membership of Actors' Equity Association, is ready for presentation. This year, for the first time, the election of all officers will be for three-year terms, instead of for one year.

The ticket is headed by Frank Gillmore, for president; for first vice-president, Arthur Byron; for second vice-president, Florence Reed; for third vice-president, George Fawcett; for fourth vice-president, Harley Sadler; for treasurer, Paul Dullzell; for recording secretary, Charles Dow Clarke. Without the necessity of further elections, Francis Wilson remains president emeritus, and John Emerson, honorary president.

For members of the council, to serve five-year terms, the nominating committee selected: Phoebe Foster, R. Paul Harvey, Josephine Hull, Jerome Lawler, Ralph Morgan, Osgood Perkins, Maida Reade, Sir Guy Standing, Henry Travers and Charles Trowbridge. As a replacement, to serve until the annual meeting of 1935, Priestley Morrison; as a replacement to serve until the annual meeting of 1934, Walter Connolly.

Monogram Closes for Sound; Signs Nosler, Totman, Bridge

Hollywood—Lloyd Nosler will direct for Monogram, new independent unit. Trem Carr also signed Wellyn Totman and Al Bridge as writers.

Monogram has closed with Balsley and Phillips, Western Electric recorders, to record Monogram product on a five-year agreement.

Monogram Starts Drive On 28 Features May 1

One hundred salesmen in 24 key city independent exchanges having Monogram franchises start out for the highways and byways May 1 to open the campaign for the 28 pictures of the co-operative company's new product. Jim Alexander, Pittsburgh manager, jumped the gun by signing the State at Huntington, W. Va., and the Nelson at Fairmont, W. Va.

Mason on World Tour

Sydney, Australia—Cecil Mason, sales manager of Greater Australia Films, distributors of Columbia and B. & D., has left for a round-the-world tour.

Fox, MGM Take Opposite Sides in Product Tilt

MGM Pictures Withdrawn from All Hoyts Theatres Until a Truce Has Been Reached

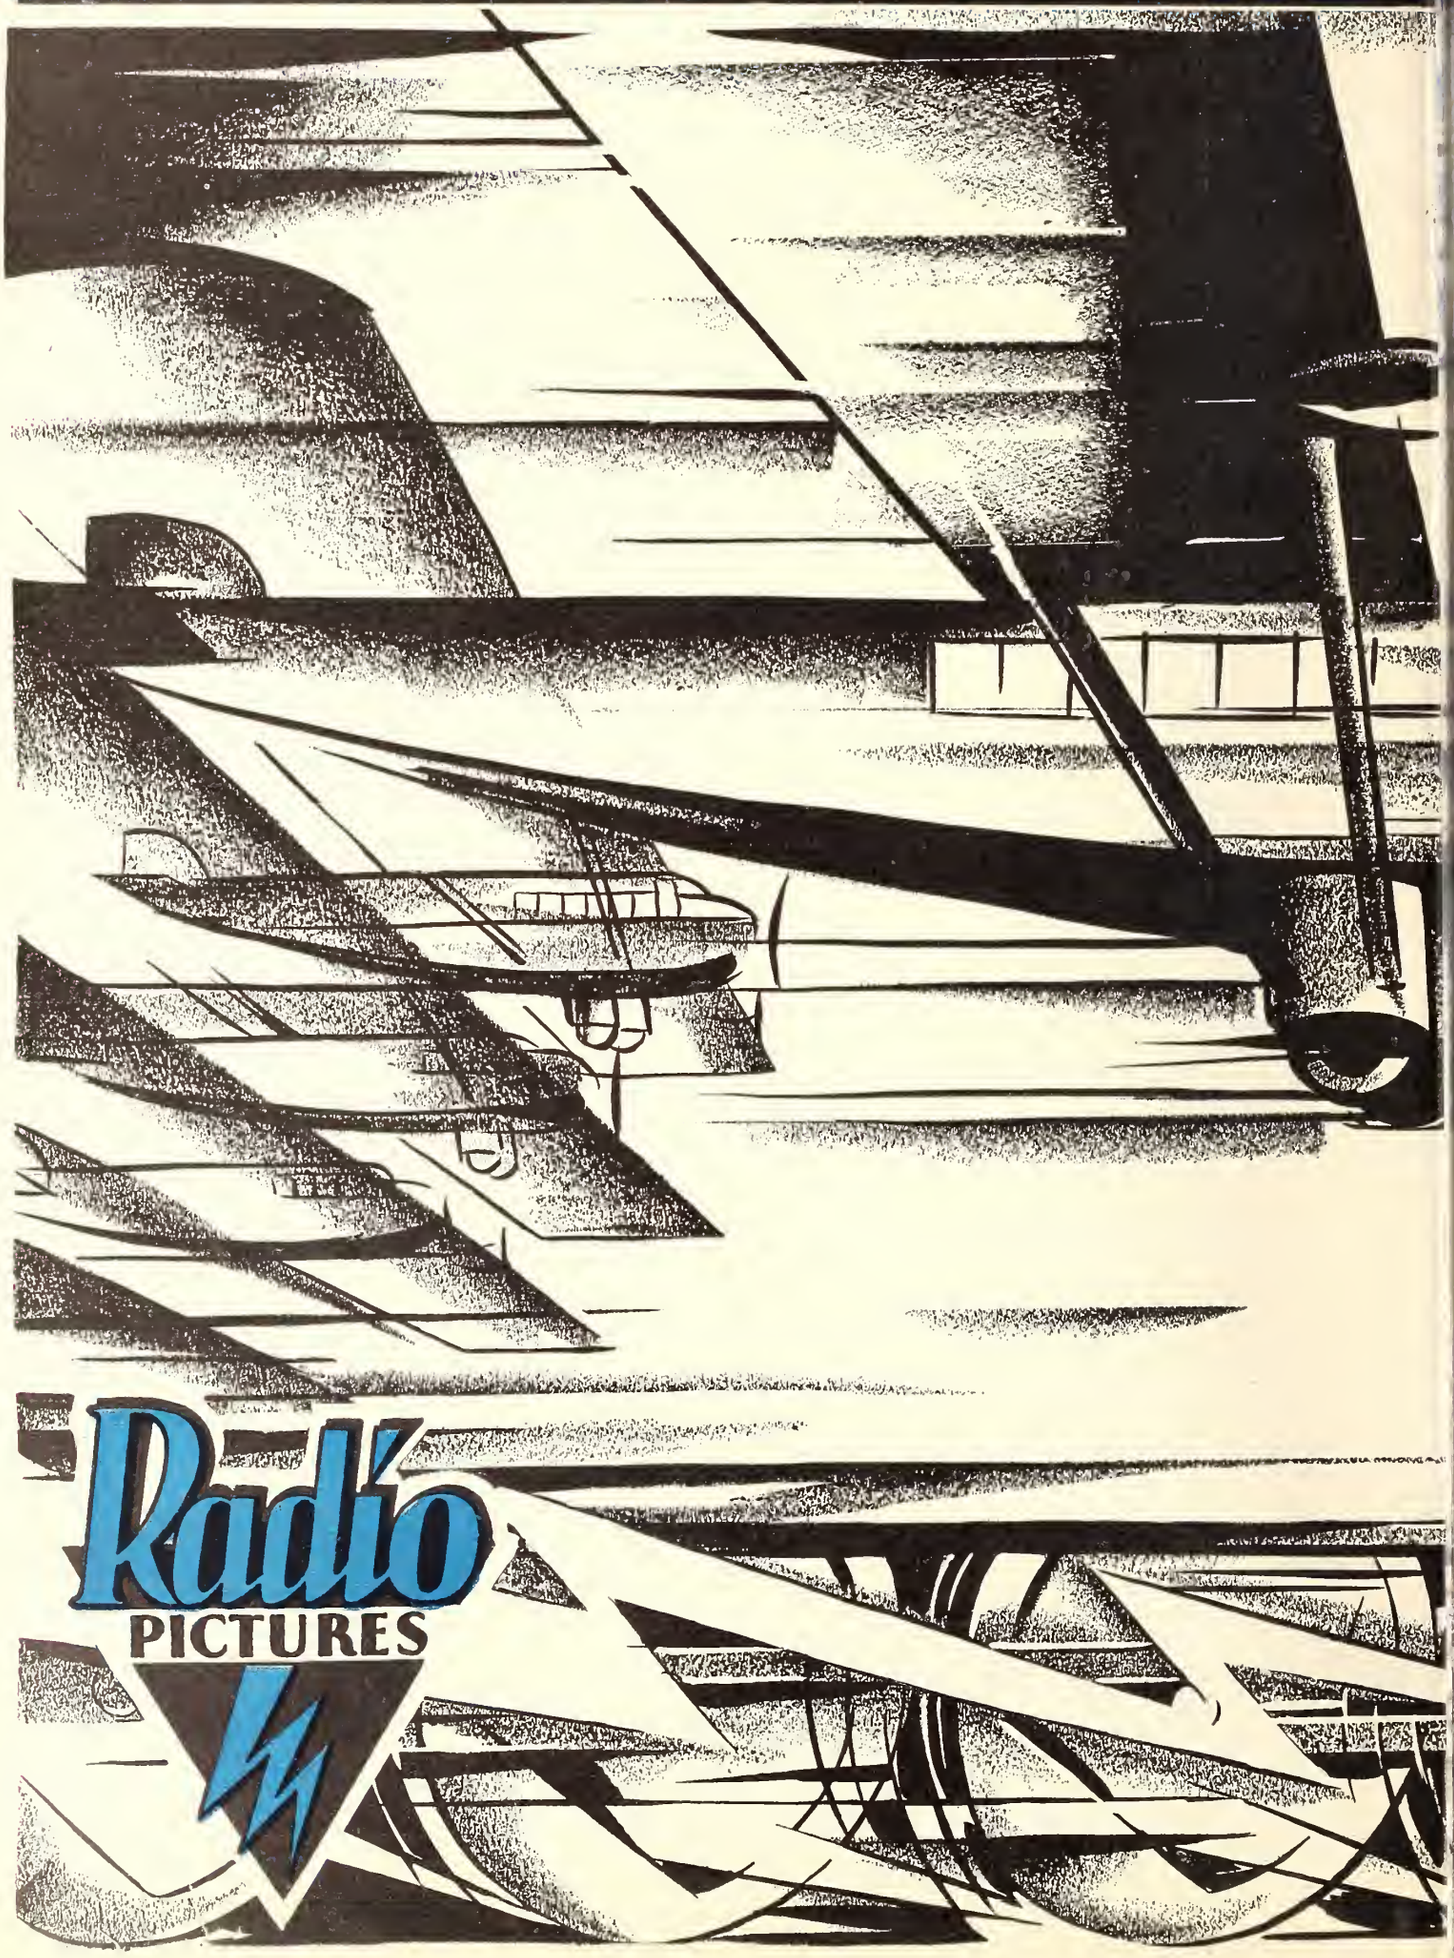
Sydney, Australia—There's a fight going on here between the principal circuits, Union Theatres and Hoyts, and those exchanges whose new product has not yet been signed for. It may or may not take long to decide, but whatever way it ends, it will involve a considerable amount of money, and will exert a very important bearing on the independent exhibitor in Australia.

The deadlock arises out of the U.T.-Hoyts buying committee's refusal to agree to certain clauses in the new uniform contract, virtually adopted by the M.P.D.A. Fox and M-G-M are the companies most directly concerned in the selling transaction with the two chains; and while Fox is apparently agreeable to discuss renewed terms in its desire to place its product, M-G-M refuses to capitulate, taking the stand that no differentiation should be drawn between large circuits and small exhibitors. Meanwhile, M-G-M product has been withdrawn from all Hoyts houses, and will be kept out until a truce has been reached.

M-G-M and Fox are affiliated financially, and Fox has the controlling interest in Hoyts. As M-G-M's product under ordinary circumstances shares Hoyts' bills with Fox, the strife is actually between Fox-Hoyts and M-G-M, not forgetting the financial relationships of the three companies.

Insiders wonder if M-G-M will be able to stand up in opposition, and for how long?

The nature of the uniform contract has not been disclosed; but the individual theatre owner is wondering, if the circuits object to its demands, what about him? and what about distributors in the event of his refusals to attach his signature?



Also concerned in the war is Warner-First National, though to a leser extent. This company is closing the sale of six features to the U.T.-Hoyts buyers, and the basis of the sale possibly involves some modification of the contract to which M-G-M is determined to adhere. As all distributors must eventually agree to the contract, or none at all, Warners' deal will be delayed, unless the M.P.D.A. scraps the new agreement. But that action is unlikely. If the contract were scrapped, it would give rise to a farcical situation unprecedented—every section of the industry, for three years, has been talking its head off in an endeavor to strike uniformity.

Hoyts and Union in New Deal

Despite the fact that both circuits are strong competitors, Union Theatres and Hoyts have jointly taken over the eight theatres embraced in the Dan Clifford circuit of South Australia. The new acquisition will be operated as an independent unit under the control of both companies.

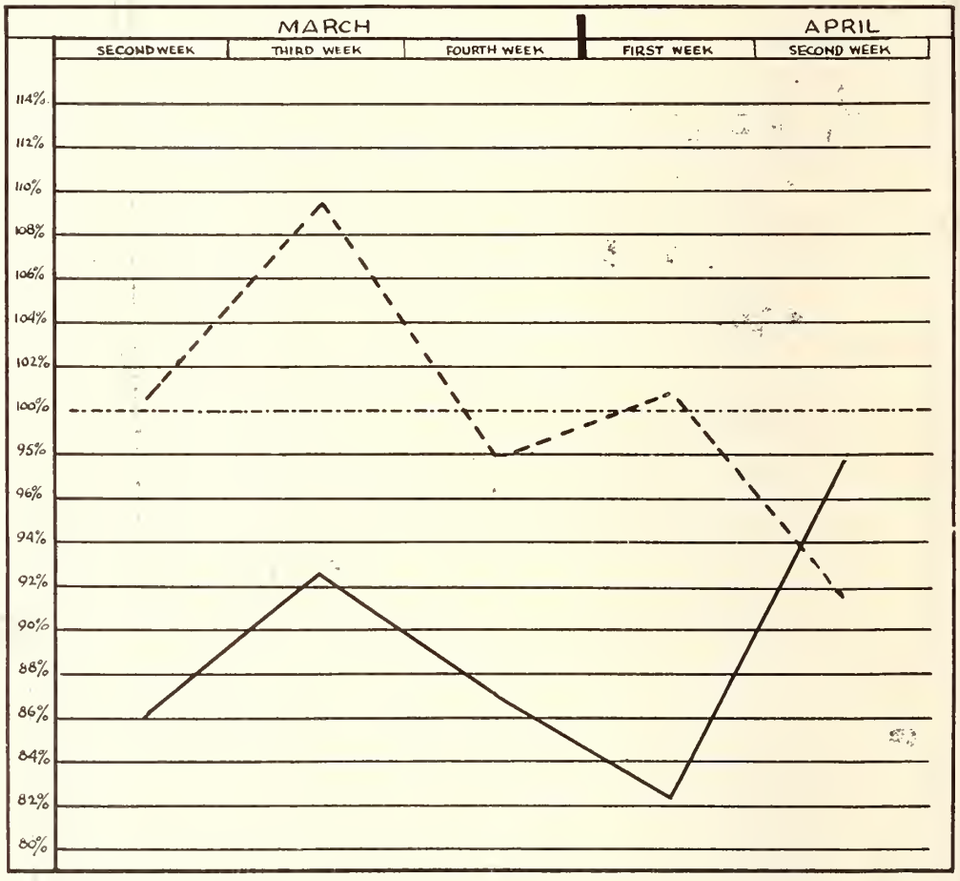
NEW L. A. PRICE ZONING PLAN NOW UP TO THE INDEPENDENTS

Effort May Be Made to Test Legality of System



Michigan Exhibitors Are Expected To Refuse to Renew Their Zoning Agreement

Los Angeles (QP)—Whether independents here will accept the price zoning plan drafted for this territory, following their withdrawal from the zoning committee, is being awaited here. The independents, who participated in the original zoning plan, withdrew after Allied States Association's anti-zoning stand.

With the independents not participating on the continuing committee, there may be effort made to test the legality of the zoning agreement. The matter already has been called to the attention of the Department of Justice, it is understood.

The price scale zoning plan in Los Angeles gives downtown stands first play, with suburban houses having a 50 cents admission getting product 21 days after. Other runs secure product according to their admission prices.

Michigan exhibitors, consistent with the Allied platform, are expected to refuse to renew their zoning agreement when it expires on May 31. The Detroit schedules have been in effect for several years, having been drafted before country-wide zoning was attempted by distributors.

THEATRE BUSINESS in April has taken a very decided turn for the better, as is illustrated by the comparative grosses charted herewith. The dot and dash line at 100 per cent represents the average 1930 gross. The weekly gross in nine cities is represented by the broken line. The variable black line is the actual gross in the same nine cities for 1931. While business took a slump the second week in April, 1930, the same period this year sees a decided trend upward.

Fox Enlarging Movietone Activities in Great Britain

London—Extension and intensification of Fox Movietone News activities in Great Britain has been started, with the establishment of a special department of the editorial staff under Norman Hulbert to make up newsreel theatre programs. Leslie Landau is to edit the national editions of both the News and the Gazette.

Staff personnel has been increased all down the line, including that of T. Scales, production manager. D. Lean, formerly of the Gaumont organization, has joined the staff of Chief Cutter Sidney Wiggins.

Colorado Owners Meet May 13

Al Szekler, general manager of Universal, sails Saturday for Berlin, where the Reichstag has rescinded its ban on "All Quiet on the Western Front."

Australian Exhibitors Seek Reduction of Service Charges

Sydney, Australia—Exhibitors here have lodged complaints against service charges, which they call excessive, with equipment companies; and the Exhibitors' Association is drafting measures of attack to bring about reductions. It is suggested in some quarters that political inquiry will be invited.

More than $15,000 a week is going to sound concerns for service.

Fire Danger Causes French To Bar Traveling Cinemas

Paris—Traveling cinema shows and cinema performances in country cafes are no longer to be tolerated in France, because of the danger of fire. Only exceptions are the Pathe-Rural and Cinelux.

The first concern sells projectors and rents films to country cinema proprietors, who, in turn, establish "rural posts" around their town, particularly where lines of communication are scarce. The projectors used are fire-proof, and the films are printed on non-flam stock.

175 Features May Be Imported In Germany After Kontingent

Berlin—Expiration of the present quota law in Germany, on July 1, will result in a jump in imports of from 90 features annually to 105 talker features and 70 silents, divided as follows: 60 for local renters, 30 for companies exporting product and 15 for reserve.

STARS MAKE PRODUCERS DIG DEEP FOR STORIES PREVIOUSLY IGNORED

Brings Checks Ten Times Amount First Asked

Cite Case of $100,000 Paid for "Greeks Had a Word For It," Yet It's Neglected

By AILEEN ST. JOHN-BRENON

Publishers are perplexed. One of them asked some days ago: "Are picture producers crazy? All season long we have been offering them valuable stories, and they've ignored them, haven't even troubled to read them half the time, and now they come besieging our doors for the self-same stories, paying us ten times the amount of money we asked some months ago, and moreover demanding that contracts be signed within twenty-four hours!"

But so it goes, and by way of dilating on the idiosyncrasies of story buying for talking pictures, Homer Croy in his report to the Author's League has divulged some of the transactions in frenzied finance which make publishers raise their supercilious eyebrows in wonderment on the one hand, while discreetly pocketing huge checks with the other.

Star Decides It

Nine times out of ten it is the star who makes the producer dig deep into his jeans for a hitherto neglected piece of property. Zoe Akins received $100,000 because Norma Talmadge coveted "The Greeks Had a Word for It," the current stage play. Miss Talmadge decided she didn't care to portray the vagaries of New York's most practiced little gold-digger, so it lies neglected like the face on the barroom floor. When bidding was high Universal paid $225,000 for the rights to the stage success, "Broadway," and $30,000 additional was forthcoming for the dialogue rights, but despite the spirited bidding the grand coup proved to be a box-office flop whereas $25,000 was the sum received by Remarque for "All Quiet on the Western Front," which startled the world.

Arthur Hopkins received $50,000 for "Holiday," which proved so highly successful, putting Ann Harding on the celluloid map despite the fact that it was against her will and judgment that she appeared on the screen as the guiding genius of the highly romantic and idealistic Johnnie of Philip Barry's play. "Rebound," in which Ina Claire will return to the screen, brought Hopkins $35,000 with every promise of success whereas an equal sum was paid for Kenyon Nicholson's "Torch Song" for Joan Crawford, which shows every promise of being shelved. Its theme of spiritual regeneration and downfall with its Salvation Army background is something that censors find intolerant.

But to return to Mr. Croy's price list which shows that an author often receives less money for one of his best stories than he does for some of his more insignificant yarns. Judge for yourself, and draw your own conclusions.

$75,000 for "Ladies' Man"

Rupert Hughes' "Ladies' Man," deemed to be the very thing by Paramount for William Powell, brought $75,000 whereas "No One Man" fetched $50,000. In Croy's own experience "West of the Water Tower" was bought for $25,000 and "They Had to See Paris," a far more potent story from the author's point of view, evoked a mere $5,000. One glance at "The Impatient Virgin" in the galley proofs and Universal has just planked out $25,000, and "Little Caesar," in which all producers showed a timely interest at some point or another, was finally acquired from its author, W. R. Burnett, for $15,000. And to continue the revelations as to what Hollywood is paying: "Journey's End," $80,000; "The Big Pond," $22,500; "Strictly Dishonorable," $125,000 (Chevalier turned it down as too risque); "An American Tragedy," $90,000; "Five Star Final," $50,000; "Street Scene," $150,000; "The Front Page," $125,000; "The Criminal Code," $27,500; "Cimarron," $125,000; "Behind That Curtain," $37,000; "Philippa," $25,000.

As for other material to be found on the new program, Universal has acquired such a puzzling piece of property as "Waterloo Bridge," Robert E. Sherwood's play all about a little London streetwalker during the war. For some equally strange reason Benn W. Levy, the author of that charming bit of fantastic delicacy, "Mrs. Moonlight," has been nominated to adapt it. Ben Lucien Burman's novel, "Mississippi," (to be disguised for some unknown reason as "Heaven on Earth" when it comes to the screen), "Lilies of Broadway," written by that fashioner of many plays, William Hurlbut, and "A Lady of Resource" by Arthur Somers Roche have also been acquired for Universal's forthcoming list.

Watch Ray-Miner Ventures

Paramount is watching with eager, interested eyes the first ventures of the Ray-Miner Corporation, the first fruits of which are coming forth this spring.

The first of these, "Blessed Event," built about the personality of a New York columnist (three guesses who, and you are right the first time) is by Forrest Wilson, whose short stories have been appearing in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, and Manuel Seff whose pieces come out of the Shubert press department. It is preparing for its spring tryout, with a view for New York production in the autumn.

The second is "The Trip Pressburg," by Leo Perutz, Viennese novelist and playwright. This was produced by Reinhardt abroad. The latter, it is frankly admitted, is in its present form utterly unsuited for transcription to the screen, but inasmuch as a box office success on Broadway is traditionally good material and a logical buy by the film companies, film companies can be counted upon to buy it anyway, so argue the producers, but inasmuch as the Ray-Miner Corporation is being depended upon to feed material for the films, this seems as if everyone connected with the story end of things is still running around in circles anyway.

However, it's a very clever and expensive idea, and good box office material can be relied upon from such accomplished men of the theatre as Whittaker Ray, erstwhile general manager for Jed Harris and for a long time associated with the Erlanger enterprises, and Worthington Miner, who had his adept editorial finger in "Up Pops the Devil," now the property of Paramount, Channing Pollock's successful play now enjoying a long Broadway run, and "Five Star Final," bought by Warner Bros.

Pink versus the Red!

Cincinnati—Just a shade of color but what a difference it meant!

It seems that the breathless cub covering a story on general business conditions went to a neighborhood exhibitor and his query brought this reply: "I am always in the pink of condition."

Whereupon the paper appeared the following day with this exhibitor quoted as saying he always was "in the red."

RADIO TO MAKE ADVERTISING DRIVES ON FILMS WITH PERCENTAGE HOUSES

Will Share Extra Outlay With the Theatre

Equal Split If Booking Deal Is On 50-50 Basis — Tests Bring Additional Business

Hollywood (QP)—Special merchandising of Radio Pictures next year through cooperative newspaper advertising with theatres playing that company's product on percentage, will provide one of the important highlights of the RKO Radio sales convention which gets underway in Hollywood next Monday.

Cooperation with theatres playing Radio product on percentage, through specially laid out newspaper campaigns for each individual booking, is only one of the media Radio will use to boost theatres grosses on its pictures next season. Other plans, now kept under cover by the heads of the company, will be explained in detail to the sales gathering.

Tests Bring Results

Radio's decision to participate in the cost of extra newspaper advertising with every theatre that plays one of the company's productions on percentage, comes after a thorough demonstration that such a procedure is extremely profitable to both the theatre and the distributor. The plan has been tried out for more than a year, with Radio cooperating with various exhibitors in participating newspaper campaigns for every big production the company has released since, and including "Rio Rita." Exhibitors who have played Radio pictures with the special advertising campaigns have enthusiastically praised the company's cooperation to the limit, agreeing that the newspaper form of advertising, following the Radio plan, resulted in sensational business in practically every instance.

Radio's cooperative advertising campaign for theatres gives both participants the lowest possible advertising rates in every newspaper in the country. Lord and Thomas and Logan, nationally known advertising agency, prepares all advertising copy for the theatre-company cooperative plan besides handling the contracts with newspapers for each individual booking.

No Strings Attached

However, if a theatre manager in any locality is able, through his personal contacts with the newspapers, to obtain a lower space scale than can be obtained by the Lord and Thomas and Logan agency, the cost of the special advertising goes through at the exhibitor's scale. In this manner, both the theatre and distributor take advantage of the lowest advertising rates that can be had in any locality. As a general rule, however, it is found that the agency rates, because of the tremendous space-buying power enjoyed by the agency, are lower than those quoted to the theatres; and the latter will benefit materially through the agency placement of Radio pictures advertising.

It is the aim of Radio to have every exhibitor playing that company's percentage product next season participate in the cooperative newspaper campaign on each individual picture. No strings are attached to the plan insofar as Radio Pictures is concerned. The company offers to stand its share of the extra newspaper expense on each campaign in direct proportion to its percentage split with the theatre. If the booking deal is on a 50-50 basis, both the theatre and exchange split equally on the extra cost of the advertising campaign. If the exchange "cut" is 25 per cent of a picture's gross, it stands that proportion of the extra advertising outlay.

Radio figures, through demonstration of the system after a most thorough trial the last 15 months, that the extra advertising will boost the take on any picture in every theatre, thereby eventually returning a larger profit to both the theatre and exchange.

When a theatre arranges for the special advertising deal, no restrictions are placed by Radio on the papers to be used for the specific campaign. Selection of one, two or more dailies for placement of the advertising is left entirely to the exhibitor, as the company feels the latter is best qualified to decide what newspapers will accomplish the best results.

The cooperative newspaper campaigns are in addition to the general amount of advertising space that a theatre uses in various local papers on each production.

Los Angeles is going to join Radio studio in welcoming delegates to the convention on Sunday, at the Santa Fe station, when the "California Limited" rolls in at 8:15 a. m., pulling the "Radio Special," and 150 convention visitors.

Radio Invades Top-Notch Art Ranks

Ten of the greatest artists and illustrators in the United States are engaged today in designing Radio Pictures' Titanic sales book and insert graphically describing the company's 1931-32 program of releases.

This year the "salesman's bible," reputed to be one of the most lavish of its kind published, will contain fifty pages garbed in gold, scarlet, blue, yellow and magenta, and a front cover of metallic gold paper imported especially from Heidelberg, Germany.

The artists working on the book under the supervision of Hy Daab, Radio's director of advertising and David Strumpf, art chief, are:

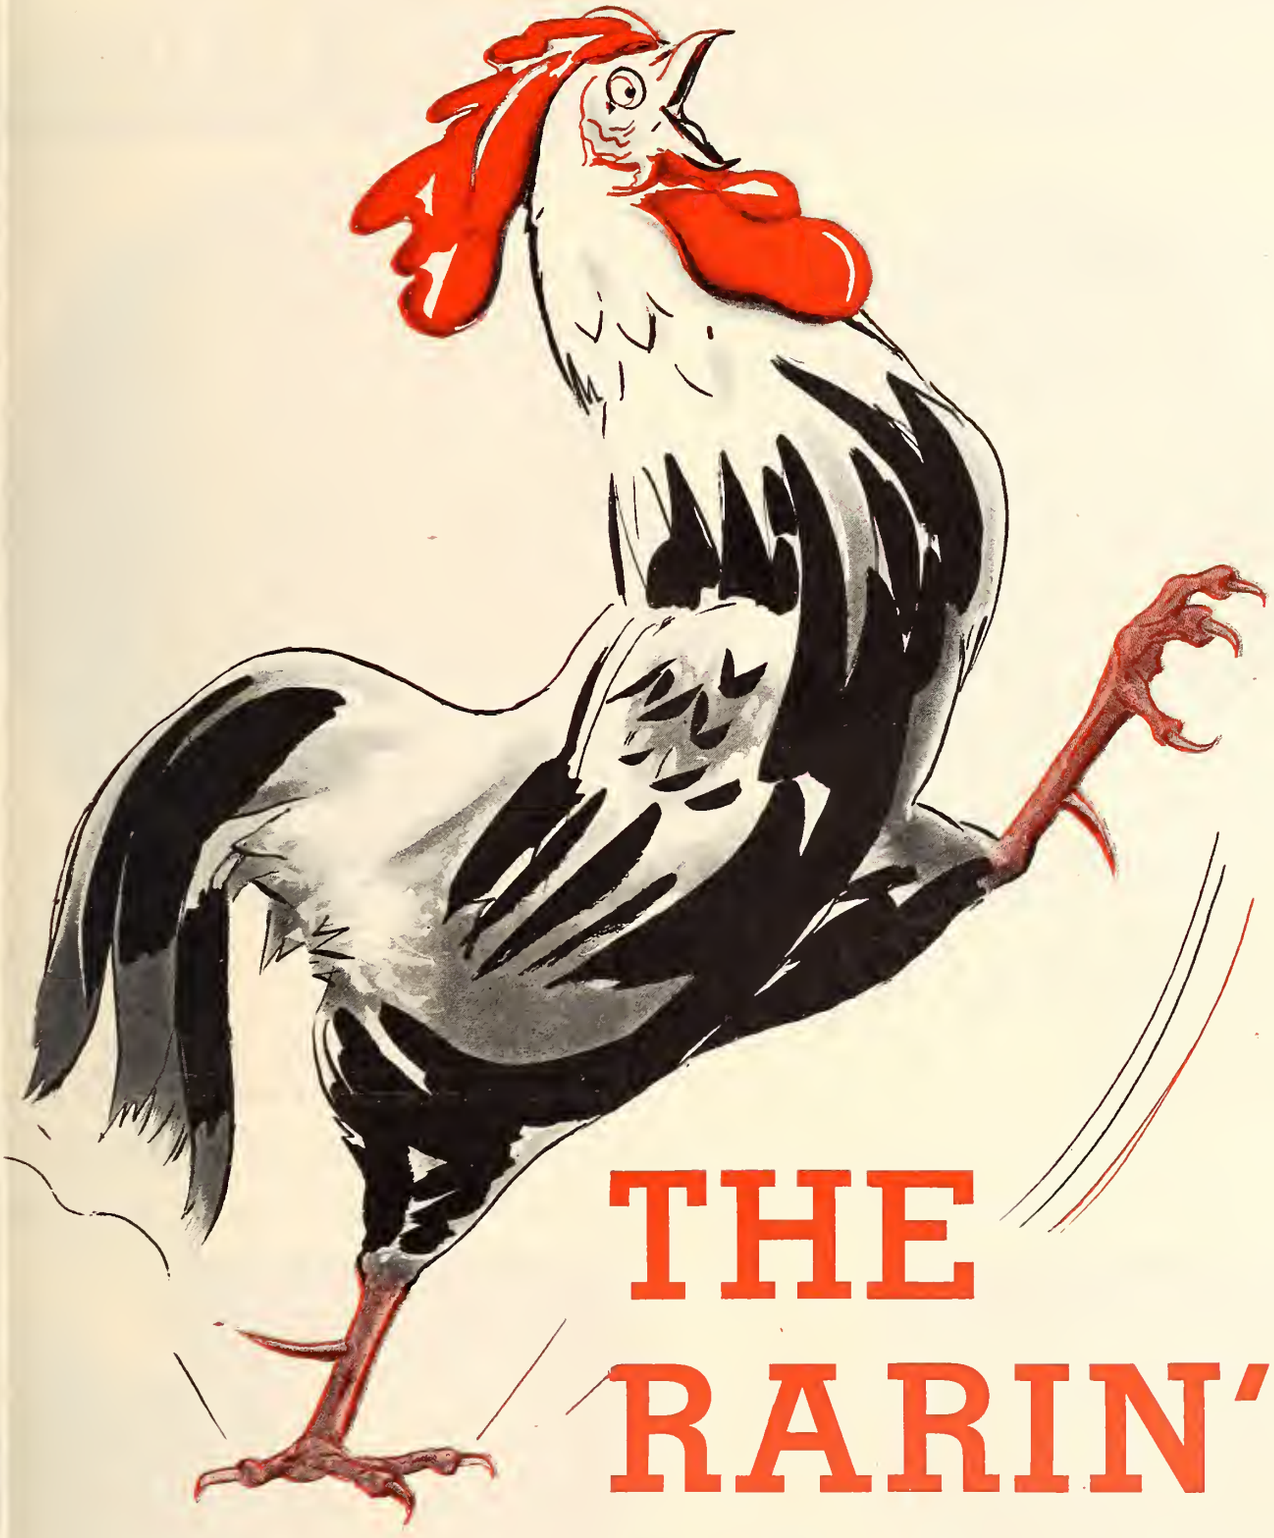
Frederic C. Madan, creator of the book and one of the foremost illustrators of the day; Rico Tomaso, whose work appears regularly in Cosmopolitan, Saturday Evening Post, etc.; Dan Content, another Saturday Evening Post illustrator; Armado, color designer, caricaturist of the first rank and colleague of Covarrubias; Armand Seguso, poster artist; Russell Patterson, creator of the Patterson Girl, comic strip artist, and protege of William Randolph Hearst; Frank Bensing, poster creator; William Hoople, whose color plates and black-and-whites have graced fiction in the Saturday Evening Post and Cosmopolitan, and Ty Mahon, girl artist.

The book is to be officially released Monday, April 27, at the opening of the general sales convention in Hollywood.

Radio Set for Annual Session On West Coast

Hollywood (QP)—Radio Pictures' sales forces, meeting Monday, will see President Joseph I. Schnitzer present prizes to salesmen.

Salesmen—and managers of those few offices that do not employ salesmen—who sold 80 per cent or more of their individual possibilities by the week ending April 17, will be awarded one form of recognition for meritorious work. In addition, the three highest rating salesmen will be awarded three gifts, ranging in value according to their respective standings, Schnitzer declared.



J. I. Schnitzer

The convention is to be one of the largest in company history. Every salesman in the organization is scheduled to attend.

First indication of Radio's plan for "names" is the signing last week of Dolores Del Rio for "The Dave."

Conrad Nagel, another "name" has been borrowed from M-G-M and will be featured in the Betty Compson picture, "Helga." Ina Claire will be borrowed from Sam Goldwyn for a picture to start soon and other deals are in work for players with name value.

Seed

Serious Drama

THROUGHOUT his long and extraordinary career as a cinema producer Carl Laemmle seems to have made it a habit occasionally to present to the public a "picture with a purpose" as well as for entertainment. Witness "All Quiet on the Western Front" as a recent example. Junior Laemmle's production of the much-discussed Charles G. Norris novel, adapted to the screen by Gladys Lehman and brilliantly directed by John M. Stahl, is the latest.

It is distinctly a serious and thoughtful presentation of some of the major problems of marriage, children and family life. It deserves respect and attention as such. Much of the footage from the studios is devoted to the cake and the icing; there should be room for this type—the daily bread, if you will—if the cinema is to live up to its responsibilities not only as an entertainment, but also as one of the dominant influences upon the every-day life of untold millions.

"Seed" is distinctly adult entertainment, a challenge to the complacently sophisticated critic who, perhaps to make popular conversation, announces that the screen devotes itself to appeals to the minds of 12-year-olds. The picture may not please said captious critic, because its morals may not be readily adapted to his own selfish philosophy. But to those, and more especially to the women, who are mindful of the responsibilities of being fathers and mothers, there should be much to entertain and inspire in the story of Bart Carter and the wife who gave him a family and the wife who gave him fame.

Universal had no simple problem bringing this Norris story to the screen. Originally sensational as a novel devoted to the matter of birth control, it was obviously impossible thematically for general distribution upon the screen. Through the combined efforts of the producers, of Gladys Lehman, who skillfully adapted it, and John Stahl, who intelligently directed it, the Norris story reaches the screen considerably altered. The mother, admirably portrayed by Lois Wilson, is not concerned with birth control. She loves being a mother, and, like "the old lady who lived in a shoe," she feels there always is room for another. The father, presented with hitherto unrevealed feeling and sincerity by John Boles, loves his children heartily, but finds their wants—and their boisterousness—unexpected handicaps to his ambitions as an author. Genevieve Tobin creates the third point of the triangle—the youthful sweetheart who comes back into John's life, now a suave, successful, gorgeous woman of the world. Only a finished actress of Miss Tobin's superior genius could keep the character she is asked to portray above the commonplace, or worse. Hers is a magnificent performance in a most difficult role, difficult even to the point that she must dominate the story for several reels when she is not even upon the screen.

Mildred Bronson (Genevieve Tobin) returns to New York from her post as Paris representative of a large American publishing house for conferences with the head of the firm. There, to her amazement, she finds Bart Carter (John Boles), the sweetheart of her girlhood in San Francisco, working as an unimportant minor executive. When she left him 10 years before he aspired to be a great author; in fact, his aspirations had prompted her to enter the publishing business. She goes with him to his home, there to discover the reason why he has dropped writing, a wife (Lois Wilson) and five children.

Feeling that Carter should have his chance to achieve fame as an author, she arranges with the publisher to have Carter assigned to her department during her stay in America. She puts him into a study in her own apartment, there to write his first novel without interruption or care. The novel is accepted, and Carter is on the road to fame and fortune. Meanwhile, however, Peggy Carter feels her husband is falling under the influence of Mildred Bronson, and forgetting home and family. The day comes when Peggy challenges Mildred's hold upon her husband, tells both that his greatest affection will always be his five children. The inevitable separation follows. Peggy leaves Bart's home and takes the children. Bart goes to Mildred and the two go to Paris. After 10 years Mildred and Bart have married, and Peggy is operating a gown shop in an obscure small community, where she has reared her family of five. Bart has become famous.

Peggy finally writes and tells Bart where she is. He goes to see his children, is deeply affected by them and their growth and progress. Wealthy, he offers them the opportunities of travel, college education. The children accept with wild enthusiasm. Their mother finds he has taken them away from her after her many years of struggle to rear them. First she is rebellious; but finally Mildred comes to her and tells her that she wins and Mildred loses. Bart's heart all these years has been in his children; barren to that of his second wife. The two women, lessons learned, sit down to cinnamon buns and coffee.

Possibly many who see this picture will think what this reviewer kept thinking as he saw it: Universal has turned a Charles Norris story into what might be a splendid Kathleen Norris story! No matter, both have long been "box office" authors. "Seed" should appeal most strongly to women, and they probably will insist that their husbands see it.

Foreign Love Farce

William Haines, more whimsical than usual and a great lover as well, wins the girl in "The Dancing Partner" after satisfying himself that no one else would ever crowd him out of the picture. He also learns, by a series of experiments, that she is nice and pure—not at all as he is. He has been, to put it mildly, a philanderer specializing in other men's wives, and has come to the conclusion that once a woman marries she becomes interested in love—offered by other men.

To test the girl, Irene Purcell, he poses as a gigolo, or paid dancing partner. He believes that he can dance his way into her affections and find out all there is to know, or what is what, or however one puts it. He loses a bet with his uncle, C. Aubrey Smith, who does some excellent acting.

The picture is very continental, except for the Haines accent, which falls by the wayside now and then in some of the allegedly big moments in the production. Miss Purcell, a stage importation, delivers her lines with an amazing gusto. Charlotte Granville, as the dowager, does a capable job.

This reviewer cannot recall broader treatment in his career of ten or more years of seeing motion pictures. Sex is paramount in every situation and suggestion is read into lines by leaving them half completed. The very basis of the story—the quest of Haines to find whether or not he is marrying a woman who has loved none other than himself—is suggestive.

Musical and strong shorts should be good with this.

"Clearing the Range"

(M. H. Hoffman, Jr., Prod.)

Crackerjack Western

With an excellent display of horsemanship and acting ability, Hoot Gibson makes "Clearing the Range," the first of a series of Westerns produced by M. H. Hoffman, Jr., a highly entertaining Western picture that will be received enthusiastically by kids and their parents alike.

While there is nothing to mark the plot as different from the usual run of Westerns, this outdoor thriller proves to be more enjoyable than most pictures of its type. Hoot is at his best as the lackadaisical cowboy and reads his lines with evident sincerity and aptitude.

Under a pretended air of indifference, he sets out to track down the bank robber, who shot his brother. Of course he is successful and a happy ending is reached, but only after he has been spurned by the girl with whom he is in love.

Sally Eilers, as his sweetheart, has a small part, of which she makes the most in a charming and highly effective manner. George Mendoza and Madame Eva Grippon give good characterizations.

Ernie Miller deserves considerable credit for the photography of the realistic and picturesque outdoor scenes. The direction of Otto Brower adds to the picture and he keeps it moving at a swift tempo throughout. The dialogue and screenplay by John Natteford are above the usual run of Western pictures. Jack Cunningham wrote the story.

Use strong comedy shorts here to fill.

The Woman Between

(Radio)

Sacrificing Love

Clever characterization is the chief attribute of "The Woman Between," Radio's sophisticated domestic drama dealing with the love of a man for his stepmother and her love for him. Her sacrifice of this love to avoid breaking the heart of her husband marks the dramatic highlight of the production.

"The Woman Between" was presented on the stage as "Madame Julie." It is the story of a Paris manikin who, afraid of being accused of marrying an American millionaire for money, operates a modiste shop. Throughout the story, efforts are made by her stepdaughter and friends of the husband's first wife to discredit her. These efforts fail.

Returning from Europe, she falls in love with a fellow-passenger on the liner. This passenger, the story discloses, is the son of her husband. He has left the United States and has changed his name because he has not approved of his father's marriage to her. The remainder of the story is devoted to the development of this misalliance and the ultimate shattering of it by the heroine beausc of her desire to save her husband from injury.

Lily Damita is the manikin who married the millionaire. Given good lines, she has a marked tendency to overact. O. P. Heggie, the husband and father, also over-dramatizes. Lester Vail, as the son, is good. Anita Louise, Lincoln Stedman and Miriam Seegar succeed as ingenues. Blanche Friderici does some excellent character work. Victor Schertzinger directed.

Credit for the adaptation and dialogue of the play goes to Howard Estabrook who, through the lines he gave Miss Damita and Miss Friderici, did some fine characterization. Dialogue is direct, full of vigor and to the point. The clash of wills between stepmother and daughter is well brought out, also.

Sound is only fair, although the incidental music inserted by Schertzinger adds to the more delicate scenes. Damita sings one song which vividly recalls the vocal work of Marlene Dietrich.

For contrast, play comedy shorts or cartoons.

Produced and distributed by Radio Pictures. From the original by Irving K. Davis. Adaptation and dialogue by Howard Estabrook. Directed by Victor Schertzinger. Max Ree, art director. J. Roy Hunt, photographer. Hugh McDonald, sound engineer.

Spanish Versions for RKO

Ambrose ('Bo) Dowling, general manager of foreign export for Radio, has returned from Hollywood to New York, following conferences with President Joseph I. Schnitzer at the studios.

Ambrose Dowling

Dowling was in Hollywood for six weeks, during which time he held numerous conferences with Schnitzer on the problem of producing versions for foreign exhibition and serving countries abroad.

The Radio foreign executive will continue an ultra conservative policy during the year, and according to him, this policy has been one that has been eminently satisfactory. Right now he is inclined to mark time and observe conditions abroad, such as are now extant in Spain, troubled with political and economic conditions. In the meantime he continues to serve France with French versions produced at the Radio studios by the Marquis Henry de la Falaise. "The Royal Bed" and "The Woman Between" have already been launched, and "The Next Corner" is third on the list. He has tentative plans for Spanish versions, the number of these to be severely limited.

A Woman of Experience

(RKO-Pathe)

Wartime Love

"A Woman of Experience" is a well directed, well handled and powerful story of a woman of the streets who, in the crucible of war and in the grip of love, finds herself and her place in the world. John Farrow has given the screen a good story and has handled it well. Harry Joe Brown has done a good job of directing Helen Twelvetrees, Billy Bakewell, the man she loves, and Lew Cody, the spy and villain. Miss Twelvetrees, Bakewell and Cody give smooth, logical portrayals, the actress reaching a higher run on the climb to stardom and Bakewell revealing himself as a capable and promising player.

Because of her beauty, Miss Twelvetrees is called in by the Austrian intelligence service to counter-spy on Cody, suspected of being a spy. She inadvertently meets Bakewell, titled officer from the provinces, who is without much worldly knowledge. They love each other but each must perform a duty. Both do so. Bakewell covers himself with glory by running an underseas blockade and she lives with Cody to learn of his activities. She finds he is a spy and is about to expose him when he shoots her in a scuffle.

She recovers, apparently. Bakewell's mother pleads with her to give up her son, saying that the marriage would last only a short time when he would find out the truth about her. She reveals that she can live only six months, for the bullet Cody sent into her cannot be withdrawn and is slowly working toward her heart.

The story is tragic from the beginning, and yet in the end one is satisfied with the logical climax and denouement. Brown has strengthened the story with his stark and cold direction and by his suggestion of certain circumstances rather than a bold and flat statement of them from the screen. The camera work is up to par with the rest of the production, which makes it better than average. Mohr, the cameraman, has used every opportunity.

The lightening of the plot is done effectively through the use of Zasu Pitts and Franklin Pangborn, maid and sailor respectively. Pitts received round applause from the preview audience.

Light comedy shorts will be effective supplements to the program.

Produced by Charles R. Rogers. Distributed by RKO-Pathe. Story, adaptation and dialog by John Farrow. Directed by Harry Joe Brown. Cameraman, Hal Mohr. Cast: Helen Twelvetrees, William Bakewell, Lew Cody, Zasu Pitts, H. B. Warner, C. Henry Gordon, Nance O'Neill, Franklin Pangborn and George Fawcett.

Kick In

(Paramount)

Bow in Dramatic Role

The long-awaited dramatic role which Paramount promised Clara Bow some time ago has materialized at last and the titian-haired star comes through with a performance that is very satisfactory. The main part in the picture, however, is the male lead played by Regis Toomey and he handles it with a conviction that makes his dramatic scenes stand out.

The production lacks comedy touches to brighten up the heavy drama, and the story at times gets rather unwieldy, but good acting carries it over these places. Miss Bow, as the wife who waits for Toomey while he is in prison, has a part which calls for some heavy emotional scenes and she handles them capably. The story concerns the affairs of the pair when they try to go straight. Their friends, who helped them to get a start after Toomey got out of prison, are crooks and this association keeps them under the watchful eyes of the police.

When one of the old gang, James Murray, steals a necklace from the district attorney he is wounded during the escape and is taken to Toomey's home. There he dies and Toomey has to get rid of the body. The police, suspecting Murray of the robbery call in all his pals for questioning and Toomey and Bow are included. Leslie Fenton, Bow's crooked brother, steals the necklace from the dead man and later turns it over to Clara. She gives it to the police who promise them freedom. This is not granted, however, and she and Toomey are held for the theft. After a final plea to the police commissioner and the return of the necklace the pair are freed. All ends well.

Wynne Gibson as Murray's girl friend and Leslie Fenton, the brother, are very good in strong supporting roles. Paul Hurst and Donald Crisp also are awarded important roles which they handle in fine manner.

Richard Wallace has directed the story in his usual capable style.

Comedy shorts with name value will go well here. Musicals would be good also.

"SEED" IS THE STORY YOU WOULD WRITE IF YOU HAD THE ck of expressing the thoughts that churn around in your brain.

IT IS THE PICTURE YOU WOULD DIRECT IF YOU HAD JOHN ahl's ability to bring out all that is human and fine in a splendid cast.

AS A MATTER OF FACT YOU REALLY MADE "SEED."

YOU MADE THE STORY WHICH CHARLES G. NORRIS WROTE into a best selling book.

ALL MR. NORRIS DID WAS TO TAKE YOUR EMOTIONS--YOUR very human, commonplace emotions--and set them down line after line in story form.

HE ROUNDED UP THE THOUGHTS THAT YOU THINK, THE loves that you love, the jealousies that you suffer from, the humor that lets you laugh--and put them into a book and then sold them back to you in that form.

SO "SEED" IS SIMPLY YOUR STORY, AND SINCE YOU ARE JUST one of the human units in the world, it is a story of humankind.

NOTHING TOUCHES YOUR HEART SO CLOSELY AS YOUR OWN emotions. That's why "Seed," as a picture, reaches right into your heart and soul. It is made up of the thoughts you think in secret--good and bad--and since your thoughts are YOU, so "Seed" is YOU.

Another Big John Stahl Production From Universal will get by principally because of the efforts of Jones and the effectual comedy which runs through it.

Buck appears at ease in the production and shows no tendency to overact. His powerful physique is displayed to good advantage and he engages in several realistic rough house fights.

Carmelita Geraghty is good as the heroine, but she is much more attractive when she doesn't have to wear clothes designed for use or a ranch. Ed Brophy is good in a character part.

Carmelita becomes an outlaw to avenge the death of her father. Buck is sent out to bring her in. They fall in love with one another. It is revealed that she was innocent of a murder charge against her and she and Buck indulge in a closing clinch while the true bandits are being led away.

A Free Soul

(M-G-M)

Typical Shearer Drama

This story by Adela Rogers St. John has been brought to the screen in much the same form as when it ran serially in a national magazine. Termed a starring picture for Miss Shearer it provides a role for Lionel Barrymore, which through his superb acting becomes the highspot of the talker.

Miss Shearer, in the role of a girl who has been brought up to do as she pleases, handles the part in her usual competent manner. Marvelously gowned and photographed to every advantage, the star looks the part of the adventure seeking girl who, brought up in a family filled with tradition, deserts her rich fiance for a good-looking gangster, Clark Gable.

When the father, Lionel Barrymore, finds his daughter has been very intimate with Gable he demands that she leave him at once. Miss Shearer, believing she is in love with Gable, refuses to do so unless Barrymore gives up his habitual drinking. This he agrees to do and accompanied by Barrymore's righthand man, Jimmy Gleason, leaves for the widecpen spaces and spends three months away from Gable and strong drink. The return to civilization is marked by Barrymore's getting drunk and leaving for parts unknown. Miss Shearer returns to Gable who wants to marry her and at the same time he tries to tell her what to do. Seeing his true side—a coarse racketeer—she leaves him despite his threat of carrying her away bodily and marrying her.

It is then that Leslie Howard, the rich fiance, comes to the rescue and, when given no other alternative, kills Gable. When brought to trial Howard offers no defense and it is only when Miss Shearer finds Barrymore in a waterfront flophouse and sobers him up that Howard is given any chance for vindication. Barrymore, hardly able to stand, delivers his plea before the jury and holds himself to blame for the whole affair. Finishing his speech he falls dead in front of the judges bench—his case won.

It is this speech by Barrymore that is the outstanding bit of acting in the picture and it is a dramatic scene that has been seldom equaled on any screen, silent or talking.

The fadeout comes with Howard and Shearer off to Europe to forget the past.

The dialogue is smart and sophisticated throughout and the theme rather risque. The direction by Clarence Brown is intelligent and adds much to the story. Lionel Barrymore undoubtedly will be sought out for more screen roles and Clark Gable adds to his string of fine performances with another great bit of acting. Others whose work is most commendable are Jimmy Gleason, Leslie Howard and Lucy Beaumont.

Use comedy shorts or musicals to balance the program.

Always Goodbye

(Fox)

Sophisticated

Elissa Landi's second motion picture feature finds her in the role of the delicately bred girl who accepts a questionable offer of love rather than endure the unpleasant surroundings that poverty inflicts. The lady's first goodbye in the story comes at a time when she has lost her money and finds that to be the only answer to the suitor to whom she has refused the heart and hand of wealth.

Mice in the humble lodgings she has obtained lead her to accept the proposition made by an apparently honest gentleman who declares he is the son of an old friend, that he has accepted an invitation for an extended visit but that the friend has demanded that his wife accompany him—his wife, unfortunately being "absent."

In the diamond collection which the host owns, the girl finally realizes the reason for the deception, although their host (Lewis Stone) has known of the impersonation from the moment of their arrival. When the robbery is finally perpetrated, the girl obtains the huge gem by a ruse and is returning it to the safe when she is discovered—seemingly in the act of theft. It is her farewell note, "Always Goodbye," enclosed with the gem, which proves her innocence.

The film drags rather noticeably during the opening scenes and has a number of extremely weak spots. This probably will be eliminated when cut for release. Miss Landi's diction is a cross between that of Greta Garbo and Ruth Chatterton. Her acting is very good. Paul Cavanaugh as the jewel thief displays a somewhat affected manner. Lewis Stone gives an excellent performance and is the only one in the cast who is entirely natural at all times. Beryl Mercer as the garrulous landlady in a brief scene gives the only comedy touch to the story.

The direction by Kenneth McKenna and William C. Menzies is very satisfactory.

Use strong comedy or musical shorts here for balanced program.

Produced and distrihuted by Fox Film Corporation. Associate Producer, John W. Considine, Jr. From the story by Kate McLaurin. Continuity and dialogue by Lynn Starling. The Secret Six

Surefire Gangster

Three great performances by Wallace Beery, Clark Gable and Lewis Stone make this underworld yarn a fine piece of screen entertainment. The story and dialogue by Francis Marion also have an important part in making the picture a success as does the intelligent direction given it by George Hill.

The story deals with the rise of Beery from a killer of beef in the stockyards to a killer of men. Lewis Stone is the "brains" of a gang headed by Ralph Bellamy who, after ineffectually putting Beery on the spot, is in turn disposed of by Beery. Through threats and killings, Beery gradually becomes a power in the civic affairs of the city. He has his henchman, Paul Hurst, elected mayor and rules the town with an iron hand. He is always protected by the legal prowess of Stone.

In order to halt the ravages of Beery's gang, a group of men called the Secret Six is formed to act in doing away the gangsters. Clark Gable, a reporter, is one of the undercover men and he accepts bribes from Beery. A fellow reporter, John Mack Brown, tries to get evidence against Beery but is caught and put on the spot, despite Gable's futile attempts to clear him of Beery's charges. Jean Harlow, Beery's girl-friend, is in love with Brown but he thinks she is aiding the gangsters and refuses to go with her. She too tries to save him but is unable to do so.

Beery is tried for the murder of Brown and despite the damaging testimony of Harlow, he is freed, due to a bribed jury. The end comes, however, when the Secret Six get federal warrants against Beery and his men and raid their place. In the attempt to escape, Beery kills Stone in an argument over the dividing of the money and in turn is caught by the police and sent to the chair.

Those in the supporting cast who give very good performances are Jean Harlow, Ralph Bellamy, DeWitt Jennings, John Mack Brown, Marjorie Rambeau and John Miljan.

Although the picture is highly dramatic for the most part, there are many bits of comedy, and Beery, although a bloodthirsty hoodlum, makes himself a somewhat sympathetic character through his ability to be funny.

Musicals and comedy shorts will be suitable here.

SHORTS

[The first five of the following reviews followed a screening at the Warner-First National convention, Atlantic City.]

The Putter

Vitaphone—Bobby Jones

Corking

This is the first of the Bobby Jones "How I Play Golf" series, and it is far and away the best thing yet in sports instruction on the screen. The appeal is unlimited, with the Jones name, plus a number of film stars acting as the golfer's support. Golfers, and there are plenty of them, will undoubtedly devour this series, and the narrative sketch idea makes it interesting enough for anyone. Jones gives the most lucid explanation possible, with stopping of the camera during the shot illustrative of the exact grip and swing. Joe Brown of the wide mouth and Frank Craven support Jones in this initial number, with Richard Barthelmess bringing Bobby into the picture in a logical manner. The narrative background has a neatly played touch of humor, which has its part in making the short effective. Play this series, all 12 of them, and plug them hard by all means. They are great, if the others are like the first, and that is promised. Each number illustrates the use of a particular club. George E. Marshall directed.

Merry Melodies

Vitaphone

Great Cartoon

Here is the first of the new Vitaphone cartoon comedy series for next season, "Merry Melodies," produced by Leon Schlesinger and written by Hugh Harmon and Rudolph Isling, "Looney Tunes" writer. It is Spanish stuff, but far outclasses the majority this reviewer has seen. The plot idea is neat and amusing, but the best of it are the decidedly funny cartoon antics of the animals. They are immense, with plenty of originality and pep. There is a laugh here for anybody in the family. Very much worth playing for a light spot on any bill. —Running time, 7 minutes.

Down the Blue Danube

Vitaphone

Splendid

The first number of a new series, produced by E. W. Newman for Warners to be released next season, means an excellent group if it is indicative of the balance of the shorts. Newman himself gives the running fire of dialogue in an interesting, conversational tone and pleasant voice. We are taken to Budapest, where pictures of buildings are interlaced with those of the natives. The river scenery is beautiful. Newman takes the audience to a village to view the peculiar but pretty dresses of the people, and their customs. One of them, Newman relates, is to the effect that a man cannot visit a girl before 9 o'clock in the evening. Interesting and has wide appeal.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Chip Shot

Vitaphone—Bobby Jones No. 2

Just as Good

The second of the Jones series is devoted to the playing of the chip shot. Jones does things with a golf club that will make non-golfers marvel and golfers kneel and pray to do it the same way. John Halliday, Charles Winninger and Bill Davidson are the support, with the story concerning a board meeting which adjourns to the golf course where Bobby does his stuff. Jones' voice records perfectly and the tone is particularly attractive. Easily holds to the standard of the first number, which is exceptionally high for its kind. There can be no doubt of the series' value.

The Niblick

Great

Bobby, the great golfer, goes on with the same high standard of the first two of the new series for release during the coming season. This time, Huntley Gordon gives the cue for the appearance of Jones, when he arrives home late and pleads a meeting. But his wife had seen him on the course, and as she catches him in the story, a flashback goes to the course and Jones illustrates position, grip, swings and all the rest in the use of the mashie niblick and the niblick, with some remarkable exhibitions of playing the ball from deep sand. He uses his famous "explosion shot." The demonstration is a perfect lesson, with a neat comedy narrative turn to carry the film along. Play these shorts hard.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Laughing with Medbury In Africa

(Columbia)

New Type

A hilarious reception greeted a new type of short subject produced by Columbia and presented last Friday night at the Carthay Circle in Los Angeles at the world premiere of Universal's "Seed."

John P. Medbury, noted humorist of Hearst-paper fame, is the voice behind a picture entitled "Laughing With John P. Medbury in Africa." Columbia has collected a miscellany of shots made by African explorers, and these are deliciously "gagged" with the Medbury brand of humor. Adroit cutting makes it appear that Medbury has made the exploration trip, and the audience goes "on safari" with him, a la Martin Johnson. Medbury tells a screamingly funny story of his experiences with natives, wild animals and what not.

It is understood that Columbia has tentative plans for making a series of such burlesque subjects with Medbury, and that the present one is a feeler. Certainly this first one drew plenty of laughs at a world premiere before a very critical audience. Dave Miller was the film editor.—Running time, 9 minutes.

● "I feel that the organization of the Bureau was a great step forward in putting advertising on a much sounder basis. There is no question but that it has been an important factor in creating greater confidence in advertising and in advertising media on the part of American business men. I am glad to realize that our company has been a supporter of the Bureau from its inception."

Lee W. Maxwell

● What a fortunate thing that advertising undertook, and today successfully does, the needed regulatory work of advertising.

Of the moves through which advertising won the confidence of business, this is one of the greatest. It began sixteen years ago—with the foundation of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Ever since its inception, men who have built the publications of America—men in whose publications business expends millions of dollars for space—have fostered the work of the A. B. C. Their cooperation has made it possible to place in the hands of all purchasers of space, the means to a sound, reliable measure of values.

How many in advertising today fully use this positive protecting power the Bureau makes available?

Hundreds do, of course. But additional hundreds, the Bureau believes, are not as yet guarding the appropriation this sure way.

It is valuable information—that contained in the Bureau's Audit Reports. And the whole story never is told on the first page of the report. On the inside pages are facts and data everyone buying space has a right to know.

Reports of the Bureau cover almost every important publication in America. Publishers expect and want men buying advertising to use them.

As a recognition of service, not only publishers and agencies, but a distinguished group of advertisers, hold membership today in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Why Is John Flinn On the Spot in The Pathe Fire?

part in this and other investigations inspired by it.

The entire crop of scandals, involving magistrates, police graft, frameups and the whole city administration headed by Mayor Walker, may be said to have had their birth in the Pathe fire inquiry.

It was the opening wedge that made way for the crowbars that came later and still are trying to pry Tammany out of power.

The thing has now reached the point where the witch burners are out in full cry and they demand a sacrifice.

John Flinn, conceivably, could well be the one to go to the stake, despite the fact that Nathan Burkan, his counsel, is confident he will get him acquitted in the face of public clamor.

Captain Dreyfus felt that same confidence a generation back, but he went to Devil's Island just the same.

I was on the "lobster" city desk—so named because no one but an aimless crustacean works the hours of that trick—of a Park Row afternoon paper when John Flinn was arrested and taken to the West 30th street station one morning about 3 o'clock. I sent our police headquarters man up to get a statement from him. John was too dazed to talk. I learned afterwards the fire had so unnerved him he did not sleep for several nights.

Other Interests in Control

Subsequently, I talked with him in a corridor of the Criminal Courts building, outside Magistrate's Simpson's court, while he was waiting to be heard on a homicide charge.

"Why are you the prisoner in this thing?" I asked him.

"Because, I guess, I was the only one available for the police to grab," he replied.

"But what did you have to do with the fire that they should grab you?"

"No more than you had."

I asked him what the company was doing in the case.

"They're going to stand back of me to the limit," he said.

That was almost eighteen months ago. In the interim most of the assets and operations of the company have passed into control of other interests which are not obligated to back John Flinn "to the limit." In the meantime the responsible executives of the old company have faded into the dim and remote background, as far as John Flinn is concerned.

Tried strictly on its merits, free from public hysteria, the case of John Flinn should result in his acquittal.

The facts involved are these:

Ten persons were burned to death or suffocated in a studio at 134th street and Park avenue, New York.

The studio building was under lease to a subsidiary of Pathe Exchange, Inc., known as Pathe Sound Studio, Inc.

John Flinn was a vice president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in charge of comedy production. His work was to find stories and casts. He had no connection with Pathe Sound Studio, Inc., was not on its payroll and had no real jurisdiction over the studio or its employes. He was not even shown the cost sheets on the studio operations. Certain carbon copies of reports circulated among the executives were withheld from him.

At the moment of the fire, the studio was under engagement to Harry Delmar for production of an independent picture to be titled "Black and White Revue." It carried a large cast of dancing girls, comedians and musicians who had been called for a rehearsal.

Origin Never Determined

How the fire started never has been determined. Two grand jury investigations, a special John Doe inquiry by the late Chief Magistrate William McAdoo, police and fire department researches all failed to fix the cause.

"The fire broke out early in the forenoon in a small flame in the curtain, about four feet from the ground," said Magistrate McAdoo in his report.

That is the nearest anyone has come to placing the original blaze which spread so rapidly that in three minutes the entire studio was in flames.

It was shown that in May, 1929, the fire prevention bureau of the New York fire department had declined to issue a permit for Pathe Sound Studio, Inc., to store 100,000 feet of film in the building's vault unless a sprinkler system were installed under its supervision.

Henry F. Lally, studio manager, who was indicted with Flinn and will be placed on trial with him, estimated that at the time of the fire there was in excess of 240,000 feet of film in the place.

But not a foot of film burned in the fire and the presence of this footage, legal or otherwise, had nothing to do with the fire.

The film created a situation with which John Flinn had no connection, but for which he is blamed nevertheless.

When he was arrested, Grover Whalen, then police commissioner, said to Flinn:

"Under the law here, Mr. Flinn, there is a prima facie case of culpable negligence in the handling of those films. We found 160 reels, approximately 160,000 feet. You are guilty of culpable negligence, causing the death of those people, and we are going to hold you under Section 1052, until such time as the investigation in the case is complete and determine whether this has played any part in the fire."

The investigation seems to have demonstrated quite completely that the film played no part in the fire, but John C. Flinn is going on trial for manslaughter.

The various inquiries did reveal that Pathe Sound Studio, Inc., had arranged with the Croker Fire Prevention Engineering Corporation to appeal from the fire department's refusal to grant a permit for heavy film storage; that the company, of which Edward F. Croker, former fire chief of New York, was president, had accepted a $500 retainer and promised to press the matter before the Board of Standards and Appeals; that the matter never had been taken before that body and that the studio was left in the position of defying the fire department orders.

Croker, incidentally, vanished from New York when the fire cooled and the inquiry became hot, and I am told he never has been questioned in the matter of that appeal.

However, all the negotiations about film storage and sprinklers had taken place before John C. Flinn ever was given office space in Pathe Sound Studio. That corporation, formed in 1928 originally as a joint-ownership corporation of F. B. O. and Pathe, had held a lease on the building for a year prior to Oct. 12, 1929, when it was renewed for eight months.

Steve Fitzgibbons was studio manager at the time the sprinkler matter came up and he was the man who signed the form provided by the Croker company for appealing to the Boards of Standards and Appeals.

Flinn and Lally had been in the studio for only six weeks prior to the fire and Flinn never had been cognizant of the film storage dispute. Lally only knew there was a letter in the files from the Croker company stating that it was proceeding in the matter.

Charge First Dismissed

But after the fire, Flinn was arrested and charged with homicide. After a delay of more than a month, the charge was dismissed because the case had been taken up by the extraordinary grand jury.

This body, after hearing dozens of witnesses, including survivors and fire prevention experts, refused to indict Flinn and Lally.

The case seemed closed. But newspaper clamor and other influences caused Chief Magistrate McAdoo to convene his John Doe inquiry, which resulted in his report:

"It would seem clear . . . . . the party chargeable with the omission to perform the duty of installing automatic sprinklers in the Pathe building is indictable for manslaughter in the second degree."

So Flinn and Lally, neither of whom had authority to spend the ten or fteen thousand dollars that such installation would have entailed, were indicted. Only this time they were accused of killing the Porter and Burford girls instead of Norene Byrne and Ruth Sparks, the victims named in the first grand jury inquiry.

When the fire occurred, the principal officers of Pathe, the parent company, were J. J. Murdock, president; Joseph P. Kennedy, chairman of the board of directors; E. B. Derr, executive vice president; C. J. Scollard, treasurer.

Messrs. Kennedy and Derr were in California at the time and John Flinn was the only operating official at hand when the police called. Grover Whalen, as Police Commissioner, found him guilty, though a grand jury did not and a special inquiry failed to name him in its findings.

The pack is in full cry.

The public wants somebody sent to jail.

John Flinn is on the spot.

Why?

Ducats vs. Hickory Stick

Providence—School kids in East Providence are being good boys now because it means tickets to the movies. No more hookie from school because good marks in studies spell more ducats to the films.

Probation Officer John H. McElroy is responsible for the innovation. He thinks it quite as necessary to give children a reward for being good as it is to punish them when they are bad. So when Johnny Jones has a perfect attendance record he is given a ticket to see "Skippy," Charlie Chaplin or some of his screen pals. The scheme is working well.

112,000 STOCKHOLDERS NOW OWN FIVE OF LEADING FILM ENTERPRISES

Paramount	9,000	21,000	12,000
RKO	1,500	21,000	19,500
Warner Bros.	10,000	26,000	16,000

Marked Increase Shown Last Two Years

Rapid Upturn Noted Since Advent Of Sound — Theatre Acquisition Policy Also Factor

The motion picture industry now belongs to not less than 112,000 stockholders as indicated by a survey of the lists of leading enterprises completed this week. Thirty-five years ago the industry belonged to one man.

Increase in the number of stockholders has been specially marked in the last two years. Observers credit this increase to a number of influences; among them a considerable public recognition of the motion picture as among the more stable industries in a period when many classes of investment have been put to the test by the general business depression.

The continuous gain in the lists of stockholders has taken a marked upturn since the advent of the sound picture, which with its revolution of the technology and equipment of the art has required large amounts of new capital. Also along with this development another influence has appeared in the policy of some of the major units to make acquisitions of theatres and other properties leading to expansion in the lists through exchanges of stock.

Rise 62,742 in Three Years

Thus, stockholders in five of the leading motion picture enterprises—RKO, Paramount, Warners, Fox and Eastman Kodak—increased from 49,258 in 1928 to 79,000 in 1929 and to the present total of approximately 112,000. Meanwhile, proportionate increases have taken place among less extensively capitalized companies, showing that public participation in the film industry has more than doubled in that short period.

Most rapid growth in the number of stockholders of the major units is shown by RKO. From a total of 1,500 in 1928, the number rose to about 10,000 in March, 1930 and, as a result of exchange of stock and issuance of rights, now stands at approximately 21,000, a gain since 1928 of some 19,500 stockholders.

Fox from 758 to 10,000

Paramount has had a wide expansion in number of shareholders, as revealed by the latest annual report, which shows that at the end of 1930 these totaled almost 21,000. This compared with approximately 14,000 in 1929, 9,000 in 1928, 5,000 in 1927, 4,000 in 1926, 3,000 in 1925 and 2,000 in 1924. Again the sharp rise since 1928 is brought out, the number from that year to 1930 rising about 12,000, while the increase in the preceding four years was only 7,000.

Stockholders in Warner Bros. rose from 10,000 in 1928 to approximately 26,000 in 1931, while Fox, early in 1928, had 758,

International Is Reported Ready To Invade Field

World International Pictures, Inc., which since July, 1930, is understood to have been quietly surveying the independent field for invasion with features, serials and shorts, is reported to be ready to start work, with 26 independent exchanges already lined up to handle product on the state rights market.

World International, with heaquarters in the Salmon Tower, New York, has F. M. Weideger as executive business manager, with George E. Thomas in charge of distribution and W. H. Ladley executive manager in charge of public relations. Negotiations for an "executive of national prominence" who will have charge of production is said to be near consummation.

For 1931-32 World International will produce 52 shorts, 24 2-reel subjects, and two ten-reel serials in addition to four features. Release will cover quarterly periods; first period will include 12 single reels, titled "Truth—Stranger Than Fiction"; six two-reel subjects, one serial, "Tower Murder Mystery," and one feature, "Subterranean."

Price Cuts and Concessions Hit by Australian Owners

Sydney, Australia—The annual report of the Exhibitors' Association here condemns the price cutting and concession policy; voices the opinion that regardless of financial depression, good pictures will still draw; and urges a strengthening of the association by all members, because the political attitude towards the industry is completely unknown.

The report alleges that many exhibitors, while not actually dropping prices by 50%, are going near enough to it by distributing candy, toys, food, etc., to people who pay a quarter for three hours' entertainment.

It also registered a kick against distributors for "entirely disregarding representations by exhibitors during the year on the questions of film rental, contract adjustments, and limitation of the 90 days' protection period."

Fight on for Profits Of Sunday Shows If Made Legal

London (QP Cable)—Although film interests were not nearly so aroused by the Sunday opening bill as the blue law proponents prior to its passage on second reading, they are now fighting for the elimination of the clause which makes it compulsory that all Sunday profits be given to charity.

The bill passed on second reading by a vote of 258 to 210, in the face of well organized opposition. It provides for the permission of Sunday amusements on a local option basis, and would change the blue law of 1780.

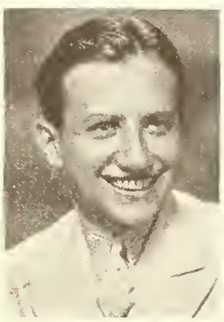
Home Secretary J. R. Clynes, author of the measure, told the House of Commons that 1780 was not 1931, while George Lansbury, president of the Board of Trade, declared the days when there shall be no work or amusements on Sunday are "as dead as the dodo."

Williams Confirms Deal

J. D. Williams confirms the announcement which appeared exclusively in Motion Picture Herald a few weeks ago that he has obtained world distribution rights to "Way Down North," all-talking feature which cost the lives of Varick Frissell and 24 others in the sinking of the Viking, sealing vessel, off Newfoundland in March. With Williams are E. Bruce Johnston, W. J. Morgan, Joseph S. Skirboll and C. L. Yearsley.

Interstate Now Has 22

Boston—Acquisition of the Scenic and Colonial, at Rochester, N. H., brings Interstate Theatre holdings in New England to 22.



Which Means?

Paramount tells Publix managers that it "senses the decline of mere baby-face stars and the demand for beautiful women who can act."

Universal to Train Youngsters To Meet Dearth of Star Talent

Carl Laemmle, Jr., to Develop One of Industry's Largest Training Schools

Hollywood (QP)—Starting with two embryo actors, Universal plans to build up, by July, the largest training school for players in the history of the industry. Plans are being made by Carl Laemmle, Jr., for the practical training of 30 young men and women, most of them recruited from 17 schools and colleges visited in the course of a national tour by Arthur Ungar, Universal talent scout. Within the next few weeks, offers of transportation to Hollywood for the purpose of making screen tests will be sent to those selected by Ungar. Eliminations will follow the screen tests, it is said. Ungar is reported to have seen, interviewed and studied more than 15,000 prospects in the course of his tour.

Carl Laemmle, Jr.

The first two to arrive in Hollywood are Dan Davies, picked by Ungar while viewing the Duffy Players at Portland, Oregon. Kent Morgan, student at the University of Utah, at Salt Lake City, is the other. Davies is 21 and Morgan is 20. Both are being given tests.

"There will be no attempt to run a school in the commonly accepted term," Ungar told a representative of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. "There will be no director or actor definitely assigned to train these newcomers."

He explained that their cinematic education would be "purely practical" and would become more and more comprehensive as they visited various departments at Universal and learned the inner workings of each. These departments include makeup, sound recording, property, scenic and construction. They also will be given an opportunity to absorb the technique of various directors by visits to their sets and by study.

They also will watch leading players at work. When each has overcome sufficient of the beginner's so-called "camera fright," he or she will be given small parts in pictures. With improvement the prospect will be moved into larger and larger parts. If no improvement is noted, options will be allowed to lapse.

Development of the new talent will be under the personal supervision of Carl Laemmle, jr. He has been making a thorough study of the situation, as far as the dearth of players is concerned, and believes that he has hit on the most practical way of developing new talent.

Fannie Hurst on Radio Tale

Fannie Hurst, popular novelist, has been signed by Radio for a story on its 1931-32 program. The story has been titled "Symphony of Six Millions" and will be along the lines, it is said, of her "Humoresque."

Goodman Handles Columbia Finance

Maurice Goodman is the new chairman of the finance committee of Columbia Pictures Corporation, with completion of extended negotiations by Joe Brandt, president, and Jack Cohn, treasurer.

Maurice Goodman

Goodman was associated with Radio-Keith-Orpheum circuit for many years and was vice-president and general counsel when he resigned a year and a half ago to resume private practice.

His theatrical connections began with B. F. Keith in 1906, at a time when the chain had only half a dozen theatres, and he was a factor in the growth of the organization up to the merger into RKO. Among the legal cases in which he played an important part were those with Klaw & Erlanger, with Shuberts, with the White Rats in their attempt to unionize the vaudeville actor, in the defense of KAO against monopoly charges, and in the anti-trust suit brought by Max Hart, vaudeville agent, against the Keith circuit and affiliated interests.

Hart Sues for $500,000 Of "Tumbleweeds" Profits

Papers have been served upon United Artists Corporation by William S. Hart in his suit for $500,000 for his share of profits which he says are due him from "Tumbleweeds," released in December, 1925.

His contract on the showing of this production closes in December of this year, he said, declaring "I have been waiting for years to get this thing threshed out." He financed the picture himself and lost $50,000 though it was a box office success, he charged, explaining that the financial entanglements on this production caused him to leave the motion picture field.

See Chicago Union Bar To Trans-Lux Theatres

Chicago (QP)—Belief here is that Trans-Lux will not carry out its original intention of extending its string of rear projection newsreel theatres to Chicago. It is reported that sudden loss of interest in local sites is due to the threat of theatrical union strength here to the Trans-Lux policy of minimum operating personnel.

Report Norma Talmadge Retired

Hollywood (QP)—Norma Talmadge has not been scheduled for any pictures on the 1931-32 United Artists program, and it is understood here that she has definitely retired from the screen.

Parking the Eggs

Newton, Kans.—Here's a new summer idea introduced by the Fox Regent: The management has installed a mammoth electric refrigerator in the theatre lobby, where patrons may park perishables while viewing the show.

But in Newton they don't consider it a "hot" summer until the concrete sidewalks begin to melt.

Perhaps Delilah Had Studio Deal On Samson Hair

Hollywood (QP)—Twelve thousand—count 'em—12,000 women in France, Germany and Austria are growing long hair to provide toupees and wigs for motion picture stars. That's the total, according to the latest information.

The women, most of them of the peasant class, get as much for their tresses, which are clipped annually, as for a month in the fields and factories. Their average earnings are $50 to $100 for a single crop of hair, depending on texture, length, color and quality.

The hair is packed into 200-pound bales, shipped to the United States, passed by customs officials after a rigid sanitary examination, and eventually it adorns the heads and faces of screen stars doing film characterizations.

This was revealed by Ern Westmore, chief makeup artist at the Radio Pictures studio and winner of the industry's annual cup emblematic of makeup supremacy.

Westmore explains there are eight distributing agencies for hair, scattered (the agencies) throughout Continental Europe. These companies ship annually about 4,000 pounds of natural hair, a large proportion of which is consigned to Hollywood. On the basis of from four to six ounces of hair from each woman the total number of producers is reached.

Only the most vigorous women are selected as producers because theirs is the most commercially desirable hair.

America, Westmore revealed, never has produced hair on a commercial basis, pride, sentiment and the bobbing trend being largely responsible.

Though wheat may fall below normal price levels due to overproduction and depressive market conditions, hair maintains a steady price level at from $10 to $25 an ounce.

In "Cimarron," for example, approximately 80 pounds were used in making up the thousand-odd frontier characters, also in emphasizing the time transitions and progressive aging of Richard Dix, Irene Dunne, Estelle Taylor, George E. Stone and other principals.

It is interesting to note that the oldfashioned theatrical wigs are no longer used in studios. Westmore has invented and patented a process which simulates a real growth of hair. This method consists of a fine network of interlaced, transparent hair upon which is woven the desired color of hair, strand by strand.

ACADEMY HELD LOGICAL MEDIATOR TO SOLVE STUDIOS' BAN ON AGENTS

And Solicitors Must Clean House Themselves

Responsible Representatives Pay For "Racketeers'" Throat-Cutting and "Ambulance Chasing"

By LEO MEEHAN

Difficulties of long standing between the Hollywood agents or business representatives of studio creative talent have finally come to a head. Practically without exception the studios last week put up the bars to all agents. They have been told that their contact must be confined to the casting office, that they will not be permitted to enter further into studio premises.

This rule already has been in effect, rather ineffectually in most cases, at a few of the studios for some time. Paramount took the lead last week among those which had not previously made such a ruling. It was followed by Radio, and it is likely that by the time this appears the bars will be up at all studios which are members of the Producers Association.

Agents Fail to Organize

It is stated at the office of the Association, however, that banning the agents is purely an individual action upon the part of each studio; but it is generally known that the matter of agents and their privileges has been a topic of discussion at producers' meetings. It was decided informally to refuse the agents permission to work in the studios, but each studio was left to handle the matter in its own way, and no official action was taken by the Association, as such.

There are many causes which have led up to the present concerted action upon the part of the producers. The chief reason has been the inability of the agents to organize in such a manner as to be able to control their own affairs, eliminate existing abuses and establish a standard of ethics and practices which would satisfy their own requirements and meet with the approval of the studios. Efforts have been made many times to get the agents organized, each time without success.

Last year a general meeting of the agents was called by Fred Beetson, executive vice-president of the Producers Association. They were told flatly and emphatically by Beetson that the producers, neither individually nor collectively, had any desire to put them out of business. He said the producers recognized that there was a definite place and purpose in the industry for the agent, and the producers wished it to be established and defined. He told them that unless the agents themselves got together and eliminated practices and conditions which studios then found objectionable and an unwarranted interference with normal operations, the studios would be compelled to protect themselves. He added that it was not the intention of the producers' organization to lay down a set of rules. That must be done by the agents through mutual agreement. Beetson then left the meeting, saying that the association would be glad to offer their conference rooms or any other facilities which might aid the agents but would have no part in the conferences themselves.

Committee Proves Unwieldy

After several hours of fireworks, charges and recriminations, the meeting adjourned with the appointment of a committee of agents, under the chairmanship of Grant Dolge, which was instructed to draw up a proposed set of rules and regulations, to be submitted and passed upon later at another general meeting. Dissension immediately arose within the committee. It seemed that each and every agent believed he or his firm should be represented on the committee, which began to grow large and unwieldy. The result was that the committee got nowhere, and the whole movement gradually died out without any further general conferences.

Subsequently a group of eight or ten of the more prominent and older established agents gathered informally, in the hope of drafting a form of organization which they proposed to submit to a general meeting. Right at the outset there was a serious factional split in the makeup of this informal committee. It had no representative from one of the largest agencies in Hollywood. This movement also died out, probably for want of sponsorship of sufficient weight and influence to pull the various factions together.

Meanwhile the producers said nothing. Meanwhile, too, the number of agents and pseudo-agents increased at an alarming rate, until now there are more than one hundred individuals or firms which claim to be representatives of actors, writers or directors. Throat-cutting, splitting of commissions, "ambulance chasing" tactics and what-not have developed in the mad frenzy to place artists on studio payrolls.

Agree Agents Are Essential

Producers and the more prominent artists both recognize that the existing situation must be clarified. Artists, writers and directors of importance, almost without exception, feel the absolute necessity of having proper business representation. Busy with their own work and under necessity of keeping their minds as free as possible from business details of their affairs in order that they may do their best creative work, they cannot maintain their contacts with the industry without assistance. In most instances, too, it is easier for the studios to keep track of, or get in touch with, various artists through their business representatives than it is directly.

The chief difficulty seems to lie in the fact that there are agents—and agents. Some of the latter might almost be called racketeers. They have no regard for the development of the industry as a whole; in fact, their only interest in life is to collect commissions. And it is altogether too long a story to set down here as to the devious ways and means by which they set about to get commissions. There are many well defined instances of lying, deception, splitting of fees and various other forms of trickery.

Yet the fact remains that there are agencies which maintain the strictest and highest principles of honesty and integrity both with their clients and with the studios. There are agents who have been responsible for the discovery and introduction to the screen world of some of the best and most sought after talent it has ever known. The screen knows and loves stars who never would have been heard of, probably, had it not been for the faith and confidence of an agent, who possibly sweat blood to get studio interviews for his client. There are agents who have succeeded in bringing clients off their high horses and down to earth after studios had failed to bring them out of temperamental flights, or worse. There are agents who, while endeavoring constantly to get as much money as they consistently could for their clients, have kept the inflated egos of actors from running their salaries up all out of reason.

Suffering from Racketeers

These are the agents which the industry needs; the personnel needs them, the producers need them. But they are suffering from the racketeers and from a lack of standards of practice which would make of their business what the producers have insisted it must be if relations are to be maintained.

"Our trouble today lies in the fact that we are not in control of our own profession," said one of the most prominent of the agents the other day. "The studios cannot and will not dictate how we must operate our affairs. We've got to do that ourselves. And until we do, the good agents will suffer and be hampered along with the not-so-good. We have never organized because there never has been anyone with sufficient influence and strength to compel all to get in line or get out of the business."

This seems to be a pretty accurate statement of fact. The endless series of charges and counter charges, the business of one

And 18 Went to the Movies

Every man in the Greek navy was requested by Admiral Dimoulis to see "The Cock Eyed World" when it showed at the Cinema Salon Ideal. The Admiral told his sailors that the film revealed "as fine examples of cooperation and altruism among the soldiers as are to be seen."

Roles of Norma Shearer vs. the Production Code

The viewpoint of an important and aggressive newspaper writer on motion pictures is presented by the comment of Chester B. Bahn in the Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald of April 12 on the subject of certain aspects of "Strangers May Kiss" and kindred productions. Mr. Bahn writes:

The fact that Miss Norma Shearer gives a beautiful performance in "Strangers May Kiss" (which you saw on the Loew sound-screen last week) does not alter the fact that the story was sordid and dangerously akin to a flagrant violation of the celebrated Hays canons.

In a statement which accompanied the publication of the Hays code a year ago, it was affirmed that the screen "owes a definite responsibility to public morals to treat all sex relationships with due care and judgment." The code—it was added—therefore provided "that the sanctity of the institution of marriage and the home shall be upheld; that adultery shall not be explicitly treated or justified."

It certainly is debatable whether that provision was remembered by those responsible for bringing "Strangers May Kiss" to the sound-screen.

As Martin Quigley remarks in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, "Hollywood, in its creative leanings, is now too much inclined to produce what it likes to produce rather than what it ought to produce." And again quoting Mr. Quigley, such pictures as "Strangers May Kiss," "Millie," "Illicit," "Stolen Heaven" and "A Lady Refuses" are "distinctly foreign to the type of entertainment which made the motion picture the world's greatest agency of public amusement."

I firmly believe that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is making a grave mistake in casting Miss Shearer in such vehicles as "The Divorcee" and "Strangers May Kiss," however artistic her portrayals of their "soiled dove" heroines may be.

Surely, Miss Shearer is worthy of something better in the story line; as it is, one is reminded strongly of the Biblical pearls-before-swine injunction.

The studio may offer as a defense that (1) such pictures make a huge profit, (2) the screen is privileged to mirror the age in which we live and (3) that Miss Shearer's delineations are cameo-cut—the sound-screen art at its best.

It is true both "The Divorcee" and "Strangers May Kiss" are "box office," but I must submit that this is due more to Miss Shearer than the story; in other words, the star, above all else, attracts the patronage. That Lisbeths exist today is also granted; but for every Lisbeth there are tens of thousands of young women leading normal lives. Thus the reflection presumed to have been mirrored by "Strangers May Kiss" is distorted. As for the third contention, would her employers have us believe that Miss Shearer is a "type" actress, suited, only to enact soiled doves?

I have the utmost respect and admiration for Norma Shearer, and it saddens me to see her condemned to vehicles that are little short of trash.

All Fields Recognizing Value of Talker, Otterson Says on Radio

Speaking on Halsey-Stuart Hour, Predicts Profound Influence of Screen on Political Destinies

So widespread has become the use of talking pictures in education and training that few fields remain to be conquered, nor is there any conceivable vocation in which they cannot be of service, John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, declared in a radio address from WEAF, New York, the night of April 22 in the Halsey, Stuart & Co. Hour.

John E. Otterson

Even more important and far-reaching than its influence and effectiveness as manifested in the field of theatrical entertainment, is the contribution that the talking picture can make in education, religious teaching, politics, industrial training and advertising, Otterson said.

Several hundred educational talking films have been made and presented to teachers, he pointed out, while in medicine and surgery there has been perhaps the most impressive application. Religious pictures, in dialogue, have been approved by leaders of all denominations, and "a studio organized by a group of churches has recently been opened in California for the purpose of making religious talking pictures exclusively," the radio audience was told.

Not only do ethical and cultural subjects lend themselves to interesting treatment in talking pictures, but the talking reel "will exert a profound influence upon our political destinies in the future," Otterson said.

Describing the extent to which the talking picture has come into service exclusive of the entertainment field, Otterson, said:

"Already talking pictures have been made to advertise commodities of every-day life. The cough that is never present in a carload can be recorded in talking pictures. The man who owns one can tell of his satisfaction with his motor car. Railroads, airlines, trade associations, insurance companies, newspapers and public service companies have used this medium to advertise their services and to create public understanding and goodwill.

"Manufacturers, department stores, banks, hotels, theatres and other industrial and business organizations are using talk-pictures to train their employees; churches to train their ministers and schools to train their teachers; athletic coaches to teach games; Bobby Jones to teach golf.

Famous-Canadian Pays Music Tax Despite Ruling

Toronto—Famous Players-Canadian is of its own accord paying the annual assessment of 10 cents a seat for all theatres in the chain to the Performing Rights Society despite the fact that the theatre circuit won its appeal before the privy council in London in the action brought by the Society in Canada for payment of royalties on copyrighted music.

Amendments to the copyright act which would give the Society full authority to collect are now before the Canadian parliament but have not been passed, and in fact may not be passed at this session because of objections raised.

Arbitration Decree Seen Basis for Contract Suits

Exhibitors who have suspended their contracts in the belief that the Thacher decision rendered them invalid, now face the possibility of suits based on the decision of the U. S. circuit court for the fourth district, that a distributor is not required to arbitrate before bringing suit for breach of contract.

The ruling was handed down in denying a demurrer action brought by the National Theatre corporation against Paramount, which had sued on a charge of breach of contract.

RCA Appeals to High Court

Washington—Review of adverse decision by a Philadelphia circuit court in a patent suit upon which claims of $48,350,000 in damages have been based, is asked of the U. S. supreme court by RCA. The original suit was brought by DeForest Radio. The lower court held the RCA patents involved in violation of the antitrust laws.

Shumlin Returns to Coast

Herman Shumlin has left New York to resume production of Samuel Goldwyn's "The Unholy Garden," which George Fitzmaurice is directing. Shumlin came to New York to meet Vicki Baum, author of "Grand Hotel," on her arrival from Germany. He produced "Grand Hotel" for the stage.

Laemmle Dance Sold Out

The Laemmle Anniversary Dance of the Universal Club at the Hotel Edison was sold out long before the date of the event, set for Saturday, April 25. Musical comedy and vaudeville acts were part of the entertainment arranged by Herman Stern, president of the club, and Sam Sedran.

FEAR OF REORGANIZING COOLS PATHE MEETING

Feeling Their Jobs Are Insecure Grips Salesmen Despite Executives' Repeated Assurances

Chicago (QP)—Apprehension among field men over the probable duration of their jobs injected a somber air into the RKO Pathe convention, which closed here Wednesday, nullifying much of enthusiasm for which speakers strove. Hiram Brown by phone, and Lee Marcus and Ned Depinet on the convention floor reiterated assurances that Pathe would be operated as an entity and stressed the permanency of the organization, but salesmen and branch managers left the convention with the same doubts they arrived with.

Talk among salesmen outside of sessions and in hotel rooms centers on guessing the duration of their jobs, even though admitting that Pathe remains an entity. They fear reorganization of the company has only begun, and that friends and relatives of new higher-ups will replace the present men all along the line.

It is believed that executives recognize an undercurrent of uneasiness as the greatest problem now facing them, since they made repeated assurances to the convention on the subject. Marcus said records show that the star is the main cog in exhibition and that the star system will prevail at RKO Pathe.

Pathe's worst job has been on the newsreel, Ned Depinet told the convention. For the amount spent on it, he said, it is grossing about half what it should. He said that Marcus was seriously concerned over its earning possibilities and confided to Depinet recently that he had confidence in all Pathe's products except the newsreel. It was said that the company has the poorest distribution of any of the newsreels.

Marcus told his men they didn't need brains; that hard work and consistent application were just as good and would get them far in the new organization.

Great precautions were taken here to prevent news leaks on the product prior to Thursday, not even the men knowing the titles until Wednesday.

Six stars will be sold to the exhibitor as the Personality Group appearing in the 21 features for 1931-32, and there also will be six Westerns besides the large number of shorts, including newsreels, comedies, novelties and cartoons. The six stars in the Personality Group are Constance Bennett, Ann Harding, Helen Twelvetrees, Ina Claire, Bill Boyd and Eddie Quillan.

Constance Bennett will star in four pictures, the first of which is Robert W. Chambers' "Common Law." Paul L. Stein will direct.

Ann Harding also will appear in four, the first of which temporarily is titled "Devotion." Robert Milton will direct from the novel by Pamela Wynn.

Four starring Helen Twelvetrees will include "A Woman of Experience," directed by Harry Joe Brown.

Ina Claire will star in "Rebound," Arthur Hopkins' stage play by Donald Ogden Stewart. Edward H. Griffith will direct.

Bill Boyd, with Octavus Roy Cohen's "Iron Chalice" as the first, and Eddie Quillan with "Whoop-Te-Do Kid" (temporary title) as his first, will each have four starring pictures.

In the short feature field there will be 13 in a group named "Floyd Gibbons' Supreme Thrills," 26 Aesop Fables, 26 Grantland Rice Sportlights, 13 Vagabond Adventures, 104 issues of Pathe News, and 13 issues of Pathe Review, six two-reel comedies produced by Masquers Club of Hollywood, the first being "Stout Hearts and Willing Hands," 42 RKO Pathe two-reel comedies, six each with Jimmy Gleason, Frank McHugh, Benny Rubin, Louis John Bartels (Traveling Salesman series), Ed Kennedy (Mr. Average Man), June McCloy (Gold Diggers) and six Manhattans.

Coast Publisher Held on Charges Of Obscenity

Los Angeles (QP)—Fred Girnau, publisher of the Coast Reporter, a so-called local newspaper, was arrested this week on a Federal warrant, charged with misusing the mails in sending alleged obscene and scurrilous literature concerning Clara Bow.

The story was run serially in the Coast Reporter, and appeared as alleged statements made by Daisy DeVoe, Clara's former secretary. It purported to tell intimate details of Clara's life, lovers, etc.

Girnau faces a Federal prison sentence and a $20,000 fine.

Pacent Hits at Forced Service

Service is a most necessary consideration if proper operation of sound equipment is desired, but compulsory service is basically unsound, according to Louis Gerard Pacent, president of Pacent Reproducer.

"It is impossible to make sound equipment, or any mechanical or electrical apparatus for that matter, that does not require a certain amount of service during its life-time," said Pacent, "but necessary as it is, service can be overdone.

"Careless operation by the projectionist may often result in unusual service costs, while a reasonable amount of attention will assure trouble-free operation. Why, then, penalize the exhibitor who takes care of his equipment by charging him for service that he does not require? Hundreds of exhibitors using Pacent Systems report service costs at less than $100 per year. If these exhibitors had to pay a forced compulsory service charge plus high rental fees, I doubt whether many of them would still be in business."

Perfection of a new pre-focused optical system which will eliminate necessity for lengthy adjustment by the projectionist is claimed as one of the features of the new Pacent "Z" series sound-on-film reproducer line. According to Pacent, the entire optical system in the film head is prefocused at the time of manufacture. A set screw locking arrangement permits removal of the lens barrel for cleaning, and when replaced assures perfect focus without the need for considerable adjustment, it is said.

Expect Three Regional Meets For United Artists' Salesmen

New York, Chicago and San Francisco will be selected by United Artists as sites for the annual sales confab, if a tri-regional meet is decided upon instead of one national convention. Salesmen and branch and division managers will attend with home office and studio represented.

Lubin Due Back May 11

Herbert Lubin, pioneer in films, is due in New York from a European vacation on May 11. Lubin, it is said, plans a comeback in pictures.

Educational in Charge of Sales Staff of Tiffany

problem. Cook and Hammons arrived in Hollywood on Wednesday to organize a studio staff and lay out production plans for 1931-32. Nothing has been done to date on the new season product for Tiffany, and plans will now be rushed to make up for some of the lost time in launching a sales drive for 1931-32.

Disposition of Phil Goldstone, present Tiffany studio head, is still to be settled. He had attempted resignation on numerous occasions since Tiffany merger negotiations were started. Insiders believe, however, that Goldstone will be found in charge when Cook and Hammons return to New York.

There has been no decision on the number of features for next season, but reports have it that the new interests will double Tiffany's former schedule, releasing between 32 and 40, including World Wide releases.

Educational-Tiffany officials now are working on a new name for the combined interests.

While the financial arrangements of the Tiffany-Educational deal have been held more or less secretive, it is understood that Hammons raised $2,500,000 from bankers to finance actual operation. And, in some quarters it is believed that a substantial part of this was put up by Young, Detroit manufacturer, who already has invested about $6,000,000 in his Tiffany venture. Actual cash payment by Hammons for taking over Tiffany operation is not believed to have entailed a large cash outlay, Hammons agreeing to pay off Young, it is said, on operating profits.

Projectionists Face Cut Or 150 Summer Closings

Chicago (QP)—Independents here are threatening the projectionists' union with the summer closing of 150 houses if the union refuses to meet the demands for reduction, in wage scale, or one man projection rooms during June, July and August.

The committee of the Allied Theatres of Illinois appointed to meet with the union heads, have full power to order the closing, and the members declare that relief must be had or the theatres will have to be closed. The committeemen are Aaron Saperstein, president of the Allied group; Aaron Courshon, Walter Babitz, Fred Guilford, Sol Meltzer, Sam Halper, Ben Lasker and Ludwig Sussman.

Third Trans-Lux in May

Opening of the two Trans-Lux theatres in the Lefcourt building at 49th and Broadway, New York, is scheduled for the first week in May. Each will seat more than the first Trans-Lux house at 58th and Madison avenue.

Papers Cut Ad Rates

In view of the long and bitter controversy between theatremen and newspaper advertising managers over advertising rates, it is significant to note that two Boston papers recently reduced their amusement rates.

On April 1 the Boston Globe reduced its rate from 75c to 50c a line. The Boston Herald-Traveler is making a bulk-lineage offer which cuts the rate from $1 to 50c a line. Other Boston papers are expected to fall into line and rate reductions are up for discussion in other cities.

In the April 18 issue of Motion Picture Herald an article pointed out that the motion picture industry has been paying a higher rate for newspaper space than do motor cars or finance. The article was based on figures supplied by West Coast Theatres publicity department.

Contract Tilt Is Deadlocked In Australia

Consummation of the deal has set the trade discussing possibilities of still closer ties between the two circuits later on. But that the deal possesses significance in this way is denied.

Almost two years ago, Union Theatres and Hoyts arrived at a working agreement, which set up a film buying committee, and restricted further expansion in building or theatre buying by either organization. It was the latter clause which jettisoned Union Theatres' plan to build a huge theatre in Adelaide to compete with the newly erected Hoyts Regent. Mutual control of the Clifford circuit maintains the balance of power.

Move to Dismiss Loew Suit Fails

Sale of controlling interest in Loew's, Inc., to William Fox without the knowledge of the minority stockholders was a "breach of trust," Supreme Court Justice Cotillo held with the plaintiff shareholders in ordering the case to trial when officers of Loew's lost out in an attempt to quash the suit.

The suit was filed last November by Edward M. Stanton, owner of 300 shares, and Fred Warren, another stockholder, against Nicholas M. Schenck, president; David Bernstein, treasurer, and Arthur M. Loew, director, and against the Loew Corporation. The plaintiffs demand a share in the $9,200,000 profit which they allege was made in the sale. Two weeks ago the federal court ordered the Fox company to divest itself of the Loew holdings.

112,000 Holders Now on Books of 5 Major Concerns

jumping to 2,342 in October of the same year. In December, 1929, Fox books revealed 6,590 holders, increasing to 9,000 in April, 1930, and to 10,000 on April 15, 1931.

Eastman Kodak shareholders have shown a steady increase from 1923. At that time they amounted to about 10,000, from which the figure rose to 12,000 in 1924, 20,000 in 1925, 24,000 in 1926, 26,000 in 1927, 28,000 in 1928, 32,000 in 1929 and 34,000 in 1930.

The last couple of years also have shown a steady increase in number of stockholders in smaller units, including Columbia, Consolidated Film, Technicolor and Trans-Lux, indicating the investment and speculative fraternity is not blind to the motion picture industry's demonstration of comparative stability in the current business depression and, despite temporary setbacks, its future possibilities as a result of the recent trend toward stronger financial management in the major film companies.

Easing of Quebec's Ban On Child Patrons Waited

Montreal—Definite provision for an easing of the restrictions on juvenile attendance is expected to be made soon by the Quebec government, with the provincial elections less than two months distant. The law, which bars all children under 16 from film theatres, was passed following the Laurier Palace fire in Montreal, in which 78 children lost their lives.

Morning vaudeville shows are being given at Loew's theatre by Manager James Adams, and are attracting considerable attention.

Kohn Gets "Rick's" Job

Denver—Gus Kohn has been appointed manager of the northern and southern Rocky Mountain division of Fox theatres. Frank Culp, city manager, has been named assistant. Rick Ricketson, who managed the northern division, recently joined Hughes-Franklin as district manager. Kohn was formerly manager of the southern division.

Operators Bill May Die

Milwaukee—Approximately 25 exhibitors, led by Fred S. Meyer, president of the MPTO of Wisconsin, attended a hearing on the Westfahl bill, which seeks to designate the hiring of one operator for each projection machine. Reports are that there are good prospects of killing the bill.

Academy Is Held Logical Mediator To Solve New Ban

agency throwing brickbats at others, or of agencies blaming the studios and studios blaming the agents, will not solve the problem. And until the agents themselves establish an organization and agree to conduct their affairs on a businesslike basis, the studios which have now barred them altogether will probably be compelled to continue such a policy largely without discrimination or exception.

Solution Seen in Academy

It is the belief of this writer that the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences is the logical institution to come to the rescue. If a very small group of established and reputable agents would draw up, even in very rough preliminary form, a code of practices and a tentative form of organization, and present it to the proper authorities at the Academy, together with a request that the Academy sponsor a series of meetings at which an organization and code should be perfected, it would be a step toward solution of the problem.

Whether there should eventuate from this an agents' branch of the Academy, just as there are now producers, artists, writers, directors and other branches, is beside the question. The Academy could render a genuine service to its present members, and to the reputable agents as well, by acting as arbiter or sponsor between agents, their clients (the most important of whom are Academy members) and the producers. Without placing the blame entirely upon the agents, or upon their clients, or upon the studios, the present situation is a deplorable one for all concerned, and one which must be rectified.

And the first move must be for the agents to clean house themselves. They have got to forget the notion that the producers are determined to put them out of business, or that they will continue to do business in spite of producer bans, or that their clients will be compelled to leave them, or that the clients will fight for them and against the studios. Petty bickering must cease, and it would seem that the logical first step would be for the more level headed to get together and initiate a move to have the whole matter settled under the sponsorship of the Academy.

Last Rites Are Held in Washington for Price

Funeral services were held in Washington for Oscar Price, film pioneer and at one time president of United Artists, who died in New York following a heart attack.

Price was one of the best known men in film circles, and his passing is mourned by many who had been associated with him since the earliest days of the industry.

Start Dietrich Film at Once

Production on "Indiscretion," Marlene Dietrich's next Paramount picture, will be started immediately upon the star's arrival in Hollywood. Miss Dietrich will go directly to the Coast upon her arrival in New York from Europe, this week.

One Up on Competition

Oklahoma City—Competition between Oklahoma City's first run theatre factions still waxes warm. One group recently showed "squawkies" of the co-operette better babies exposition, while another retaliated by showing "hoofies" of the Junior League horse-show and style review.

Ban on Visitors Put Into Effect; Passes Revoked

Hollywood (QP)—Practically every major studio on the Coast has put up the bars against visitors within the last ten days. This concerns not only tourists but also advertising solicitors, news gatherers, salesmen of various commodities and, last but not least, the agents who represent players, writers and directors, as predicted in last week's issue.

It is alleged that there was no concerted action, that each studio acted individually, but the fact remains that many who did act, did so at the same time. Practically all personal passes—and they ran into many hundreds for all the lots—were revoked. Callers must now be announced, go to the office of the person sought, transact the necessary business and leave the lot.

The restrictions are much more severe on some lots than on others but, so far as the agents are concerned, the freedom of the studio has been removed in all cases.

Each studio has made its own interpretation of the rule. At Paramount, agents are admitted to the executive offices and the casting office, but nowhere else. They may not seek out their clients. One ad solicitor from each publication may visit the lot after being okayed by the publicity department. Salesmen must stay out. News gatherers also must be announced and okayed.

Universal, United Artists and Radio Pictures have adopted practically the same rules. Fox and Warner-First National have had the rule in force for a long time. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and RKO-Pathe are considering restrictions.

In some instances the ban has been carried to ridiculous lengths. One studio refused to permit its employees to receive publications on the lot, contending they wasted too much time reading. Another forbade employees to go to the reception room at the main gate to see callers. These severe rules in most cases have been softened, one reason being that the general manager of one studio went berserk when his trade papers were held up.

The agents plan action but have not yet decided just what they can do. However, as one of the executives expressed it recently: "They'll forget it in 60 days!"

Paramount at Top Production

Production is at its peak this week at Paramount's Eastern plant with three features in work, "Secrets of a Secretary," "The Girl Habit" and "The Night Angel," as well as three reels of short pictures and the foreign language versions.

Young and Woods To Head Academy Writer's Division

Hollywood—The organization meeting of the Writers' Special Committee at the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences resulted in election of Waldemar Young as chairman and Frank Woods secretary. The committee was appointed to represent the writers in conferences with producers.

The following chairmen will head subcommittees to undertake immediate study of various phases of writer-producer problems: Ralph Block, ethics; Benjamin Glazer, legal aspects; Richard Schayer, credits; Percy Heath, writer-supervisor relations; John Meehan, writer-director relations; James Seymour, general survey. Membership of the sub-committees will be drawn from representative screen writers and a total of about 30 writers will participate during the development of proposals to be submitted to meetings of the Academy Writers' Branch.

In accepting chairmanship of the Special Committee, Young pointed out: "The attitude and purpose of the committee is entirely constructive. We are going to analyze and take inventory of our experience with the new creative demands of talking picture production. We feel that now is a very opportune time for this. Discussions and investigations of this committee will be as thorough and careful as we can make them so that the whole industry will benefit from the results."

The committee, which has been increased to 17 members, includes: Ralph Block, Richard Schayer, Oliver H. P. Garrett, Howard J. Green, Benjamin Glazer, Clara Beranger, Herman Mankiewicz, Jane Murfin, Martin Flavin, John Meehan, Bradley King, Percy Heath, Al Cohn, Gerrit Lloyd, James Seymour, Young and Woods.

Saenger-Richards Move Seen in United Purchase

New Orleans—Purchase of the Columbia theatre in Hammond, La., is believed here to be the first step in an expansion program that will extend the theatre holdings of United Theatres outside this city, where it is the principal second-run string.

The expansion itself is suggested as a joint effort of E. V. Richards, vice president of United, and Julian Saenger, formerly of the Saenger group taken over by Publix. Richards, former general manager of the Saenger circuit, has been reported previously as being in association with Julian Saenger in the projection of another chain.

Cinema versus Craft Film Hearing Is Set for May 13

Final hearing in the suit of Cinema-Patent versus Craft Film Laboratories, Inc., is set for May 13 by Judge Nields in the federal district court at Wilmington, following a request by counsel for Craft Film Laboratories. The suit has been pending for a year.

Cincinnati Paper Turns on Trade In RKO Ad Clash

Cincinnati—Denunciation of Cincinnati downtown theatres in general, their construction, shows and methods of exploitation and advertising has been undertaken by the Enquirer following a proposed reduction in advertising space in that newspaper by RKO after a survey by the company showed a large part of the circulation was in distant metropolitan centers.

The local RKO office, on instructions, proposed to cut in half its space in the Enquirer. Then came an ultimatum by the Enquirer that it would refuse all advertising from RKO unless given an even break with the two afternoon papers used. RKO withdrew all copy. Followed the editorial outbursts.

First came a charge of "pandering to sensationalism at whatever cost of money and decency." Next was a front page story in bold type headed "Motion Pictures Teach Crime," giving an opinion of a New York police official which was contrary to the conclusions reached time and again in surveys.

Another editorial article charged that "Cincinnati is far behind other cities of its size in the field of motion picture entertainment." But that was only part of it. Of exploitation methods the writer charged: "To judge by the lurid displays in the lobbys and the ballyhoo publicity methods employed in downtown film theatres, one gets the impression that he is walking along the main street in a small mining town on a Saturday night."

As to the theatre buildings, this: "With one or two exceptions, Cincinnati first-run theatres are antiquated, ill-ventilated, uncomfortable and generally depressing."

Finally came the declaration that "what downtown Cincinnati needs is a little competition . . . and if conditions are not improved the chances are that competition will be forthcoming."

Meantime RKO has been advertising over radio stations WFBE and WCKY—and with satisfactory grosses.

And now an Armistice has been reached, after the ten-day fight. The Enquirer again is carrying RKO advertising, but on a reduced basis. There are brief announcements of current pictures in the reader columns, but the advance and current reading notices are missing. The Monday morning reviews and criticisms are considered to be fair to the pictures.

DeForest Backs Laemmle on Ads

Dr. Lee De Forest, radio pioneer, declares that advertising on the air has cost the radio industry "countless millions of dollars," and points out that the screen "is now menaced by exactly the same form of greed."

In a letter to Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, De Forest praises Laemmle's stand against sponsored advertising on the screen.

Contract Illegal, Judge Decrees; Momand in Suit

Oklahoma City—The contract "commonly made" by film companies with independent exhibitors is invalid because it forces the exhibitor to accept the pictures named by the company, Judge Jesse J. Worten has ruled in a suit brought by Paramount Publix Corporation against E. V. Weaver, theatre owner at Shidler, Okla.

The decision by the district judge of Osage county at Pawhuska follows closely upon a suit filed in federal court by A. B. Momand of Shawnee, head of Momand Theatres of Texas and Oklahoma, against 24 firms and two individuals, charging conspiracy.

Attorneys are preparing an answer to the Momand suit, in which the exhibitor charged that his holding companies were forced to sell or close several theatres because of the alleged combine. He stated that the defendants organized the MPPDA to restrain trade. Regal Theatres, Oklahoma City branch of the Cooper-Publix theatres, were made defendants in a separate suit for $48,000 in connection with the purchase of the Circle Theatre from Momand last year, Momand charging that he was forced to sell the house because he could not book theatres.

Judge Worten's ruling, in which he held that a trust exists, came on the Paramount Publix demand for judgment of $1,081 because of Weaver's refusal to exhibit all the pictures included in his contract. A test case in the higher courts is expected as a result.

Cameramen Seek Silent Apparatus

Hollywood — The producers - technicians committee of the Academy, at its regular quarterly meeting, heard reports on camera silencing, standard release print survey, cue sheets, film processing, supersensitive film, and other technical developments in the industry. M. C. Levee presided.

At the meeting it was reported that 60 first cameramen, representing all Hollywood studios, had replied to the questionnaire sent out in March by the Camera Silencing Subcommittee. 91% of the replies advocate strong efforts toward development of cameras which would not require blimps or covers of any sort. 52% of these replies urged such efforts in strong terms.

The weight of the blimps in use was condemned by 90% of the replies; the bulk by 87%. 55% said the blimps made focusing difficult, and 73% said they crowded the sets uncomfortably on close-ups. Practically every type of camera cover in use in Hollywood was criticized for one or more of these reasons.

As a result it was resolved to bring this situation to the attention of camera manufacturers and inquire what efforts are being made toward production of a silent camera. The comittee will offer to have studio experts confer with manufacturers in an endeavor to advance such efforts.

Praise for Leblang From Varied Walks Of Life at Funeral

Two rabbis, an actor and a judge eulogized the late Joseph Leblang, Broadway figure for many years, at funeral services held in New York at Temple Emanu-El with more than 3,000 in attendance. Leblang conducted a ticket brokerage business at cut rates, and it is reported that he amassed a fortune of $20,000,000.

"As his success and influence grew," said Rev. Dr. Samuel Schulman, "his sympathies widened. When a man was broke and down and out and went to Joseph Leblang, the latter did not ask what was his religion or race before he helped him."

Leblang's rise in business and influence was called by Rev. Dr. Nathan Krass, "one of the fairy tales of American history." The judge who spoke was Otto A. Rosalsky of the court of general sessions, and he paid long and eloquent tribute to the departed ticket-seller. It was George Jessel, musical comedy and film star, who represented Leblang's own world, the theatre, among the speakers. He said:

"I can see him now entering the great hall of the theatre beyond and the doorman saying, 'Enter, all ye faithful; enter, Joseph Leblang, by courtesy of this theatre, as a fine son of Israel'."

Kodak, another comparatively steady issue in the film group.

New lows were touched by Loew's, Inc., and the less actively traded in shares such as Consolidated Film common and preferrred and Warners preferred. At its bottom level of the week Loew's was off 20 points from its high for the year. Pathe common and A held to the narrow price range evident in recent sessions.

On the curb exchange General Theatres preferred touched a new low, while declines of about a point each were made by Technicolor and Columbia Pictures.

Amusement bonds reflected the weakness in the share market, General Theatres 6s, Paramount Famous Lasky 6s and Paramount Publix 5½s reacting to new lows for the year. Pathe 7s and Loew's 6s were comparatively steady.

English Playwright Finishes Adaptation of "U" Story

Benn Levy, the English playwright whose "Mrs. Moonlight" is now playing in New York, has completed the adaptation of "Waterloo Bridge" for Universal. Tom Reed has been assigned by Carl Laemmle, Jr., to write the scenario for this Robert E. Sherwood stage play.

As already announced, Rose Hobart will play the role of Myra, the feminine lead, and James Whale, English stage and talking picture director, will have charge of production.

Estelle with Goldwyn

Estelle Taylor has been signed by Samuel Goldwyn to appear with Ronald Colman in "The Unholy Garden," the adventure yarn of the Sahara outpost that Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht have just completed and which George Fitzmaurice will direct. Her engagement to play the part effectively sets at rest rumors of her intention to go to Reno, to embark on a vaudeville tour or to take part in a Broadway stage play.

Tests Lead to New Coating for Screen

Beaded Screen Corp. has formed a new organization, with headquarters at 47 W. 24th Street, New York, for the purpose of cleaning and resurfacing motion picture screens.

The corporation is affiliated with the Beaded Screen Corporation, makers of "Vocalite" and "Superlite" Screens, and is the outgrowth of over a year's experiments and developments in cleaning and resurfacing of motion picture screens. Special surfacing and cleaning processes were worked out and tested under conditions met with in service.

One of the surfacing materials is the one used in the manufacture of the "Chromolite" screen, which has just been announced by the Beaded Screen Corporation.

A minimum price has been established for screens up to 12 x 16 feet in size. For screens above this size, a definite price per square foot has been set. Announcement of the product states:

"It is universally felt that the screen surface should be kept looking as near like new as possible, at all times, resulting in a superior picture, and in a saving in current, carbons, and maintenance costs, amounting to 20 to 40 cents per day.

"It is a recognized fact that all screens, and especially sound screens of perforated nature, collect dirt to a considerable extent, depending on the atmosphere and on local house conditions. This condition becomes acute about six months after the installation of a new screen, and much more so after an unsatisfactory cleaning or reprocessing. It is felt that screens should be serviced at regular intervals of at least six months, and in bad atmospheres, of three months."

Universal Signs Chandlee To Do "Up and Up" Script

Harry Chandlee, New York and Boston newspaperman, has been signed by Universal to prepare the treatment of "The Up and Up," race track story that goes into production soon. The cast and director are as yet unassigned.

"The Up and Up" is the Broadway stage success by Eva Kay Flint and Martha Madison. Universal purchased the screen rights last year.

6,000,000 Fans To See Ad Films Of Foreign Unit

London—British National Film is reported to have concluded negotiations in Germany, France, and Belgium for the international screening of advertising films. According to a statement made by the above organization, advertising films will have the entree to 2,000 theatres in France, 900 in Germany, and a smaller number in Belgium. This company, which claims distribution throughout India and Ceylon, reports that agreements now held will enable them to show advertising films in approximately 6,000 theatres. Estimating an average audience of 500 with two performances a day, this would mean a daily circulation of 6,000,000.

The figure of $4,630,789 was an approximate figure subject to an adjustment on account of appraisals, etc., and was probably slightly altered. The difference of $2,144,716 between the purchase price in cash and notes and the balance sheet value of the RKO notes represents a retirement of bank loans and repurchase by Pathe Exchange, Inc., of its 49 per cent interest in the DuPont-Pathe Company. Early in 1928 Pathe Exchange sold its 49 per cent interest in the DuPont Company to E. I. deNemours for $500,000 with an option to repurchase at the sale price. Although the balance sheet does not state that this option has been taken up, it obviously has been. Less dividends paid on the stock, it would have taken about $400,000 to repurchase the DuPont stock. The balance of $2,144,716 has apparently been used, although the operating statement and the balance sheet do not so state, to retire production loans. The production loans are said to have been made through a subsidiary production financing company.

The addition of five more actors to the cast of "Transatlantic" brings the total number of players in this Fox picture to 16. The latest additions are Robert Burns, Henry Sedley, Louis Natheau, Robert Montgomery and Earle Foxe. Montgomery is not to be confused with the featured player of the same name.

The cast is headed by Edmund Lowe. Lois Moran, Greta Nissen and Myrna Loy, and includes John Halliday, George E. Stone, Jean Hersholt, John Swor, Ruth Donnelly, Goodee Montgomery and Rosalie Roy. William K. Howard is directing from an original story by Guy Bolton.

Adapting "Twenty-four Hours"

Hollywood—Louis Weitzenkorn, one of Paramount's newer writers, is at work on the adaptation of Louis Bromfield's "Twenty-four Hours."

Cortez Spik Only Bklyn

A studio visitor—a friend of somebody-or-other, and one of those gushy young things!—was introduced to Ricardo Cortez on a First National set the other day.

"Oh, Senor Cortez!" she began—and forthwith rattled along in excellent Spanish for several minutes.

Cortez listened and smiled indulgently, Photoplay Magazine relates, until she paused.

"I'm sorry," he said. "I don't speak Spanish."

She looked startled.

Then a light dawned.

And she chattered on—this time in exquisite French.

When she paused again, he turned to a studio aide.

"Say," he pleaded, "won't someone tell this lady that the only language I know is English?"

She was quite disappointed.

Ricardo Cortez' real name, she is Jack Krantz.

He was raised in Brooklyn, N. Y.

British to Push Domestic Product

London—The Colonial Office has requested the Federation of British Industries to prepare a scheme for the introduction of British films into the British colonies and protectorates. This move follows the receipt by the Colonial Office, some time ago, of a report of the Investigation Committee appointed to go into the question of selling British films throughout the Empire. The industry was represented on the committee by Bruce Woolfe and Simon Rawson. The scheme to be prepared by the Federation of British Industries is to be submitted to the Government and it is expected that it will be put into operation by July 1.

Cultural films, it is stated, will receive the major consideration, but it is intended that the Bureau shall handle all types of British pictures. It is possible that this plan will include the connection of this plan with the proposed Empire Publicity Bureau. The scheme of the B. F. I. will probably call for the establishment of a central office in London, as well as of central London censorship for films destined for African exhibition.

The Colonial Office Committee, in discussing report of the Colonial Films Committee, strongly endorsed the suggestion that experimental use should be made of the cinematograph as part of the normal equipment of schools in the colonies.

"Blue-noses" Make Whoopee with The Blue Laws

By HENRY FLURY,
Former President, National Association Opposed to Blue Laws.

Evidently regarding the economic depression as a splendid time to raise the devil with constitutional rights, the Puritanical blue noses have awakened into a new frenzy of "law enforcement" and are determined to make Sunday a day of suffering. From many parts of the country, reports are received proving that the dictatorship of bigots is fast becoming a fact.

In the national capital, the U. S. Senate actually passed a bill to close barber shops on Sunday. If the bill had become a law, it would be necessary for the unfortunate visitor to "bootleg" a haircut or shave. In Vermont, in one town, Bellows Falls, the old Sunday closing law had not been enforced for the last 29 years. Thinking to stimulate business, no doubt, a group of fundamentalist preachers got 100 church members to sign a petition for rigid blue law enforcement. In fear of losing their jobs, officials complied with the request and prominent business men were arrested the next Sunday. No Sunday newspapers, taxis, or gasoline. Last November, the fanatics got a referendum on Sunday observance in California, but citizens rolled up a 833,000-vote majority and defeated it.

In the House, in Pennsylvania, a bill to amend the old blue law of 1794 failed of only two votes of passing. In Delaware, the House passed a measure to permit "home rule" or local option on the matter of Sunday movies and baseball by one vote majority. In Texas, the Senate passed such a bill.

Liberals must forget their "inferiority complex." Let them get busy and work for repeal of lapis lazuli laws.

Film of Rinehart Story Is "I Take This Woman"

Hollywood—"Lost Ecstasy," Mary Roberts Rinehart story, which has had almost as many Paramount writers working on its treatment as there are chapters in the book, will be released under the title of "I Take This Woman." The working title has been "In Defense of Love." Gary Cooper and Carol Lombard have the leads.

Radio Gets Fannie Hurst's "Symphony of Six Millions"

A second "Humoresque" from the pen of Fannie Hurst is to reach the screen, but this time in talking picture form. For Miss Hurst has been at work on an original story which will endeavor to capture the drama, heartache, laughter and tears of New York's teeming millions in a story titled "Symphony of Six Millions."

Zukor Tells Stockholders That Company Will Deal With Any Unit Which Pays Its Price

Paramount never has traded or swapped pictures with Warners or any other company, but buys as many productions as it deems advisable from any company and sells to any company willing to pay the price put on the Paramount product, Adolph Zukor, president, told stockholders of the corporation at the annual meeting this week.

"The number of pictures we take from any single company and the number they take from us depends entirely upon those matters which govern all selling," Zukor said. "If we think we are geting a good bargain we take a large number of pictures and if we think we are getting a good price for our pictures we sell all we can. We have always taken Warner Brothers pictures and there has never been an interruption in our use of them."

Foreign business of Paramount is running well ahead of last year and it appears this branch of the company will continue to expand favorably, Zukor told the stockholders, but added that, although the second quarter is showing some betterment, domestic business was sharply curtailed by widespread unemployment in industrial centers.

Paramount did not reflect the unemployment situation at once, but when money became scarce among the unemployed, the company felt the depression sharply, Zukor said, adding that revenues of the company showed particularly heavy losses in Detroit and Toledo.

Zukor was non-committal on the question of maintenance of the present $4 annual dividend rate, answering a stockholder's query with:

"This is something I am not prepared to say at this time. As you know, it is a matter which must be considered by the board of directors. Right now we feel that the curve is upward compared to our activities in the previous second quarter. Based on our plans and the productions in work and already made for this year, we are very optimistic for the year 1931 as far as our profit will show up."

Fox Back in Shorts Field With News-Travel Series

Fox will return to the short subjects field in 1931-32, with 26 one-reelers consisting of news and travel shots made throughout the world with Movietone. The series will be called "The Magic Carpet of Movietone."

The group will be shown pre-release at the Newsreel theatre in New York. Besides these 26, the foreign department will release 52.

RECIPROCATE TO GET TOP PROFITS: ROWSON

Americans Must Guarantee Releases for British Films in Return for Bookings, AMPA Is Told

American distributors must guarantee releases in the United States for British pictures if they want maximum bookings for American productions in Great Britain, but once that step is accomplished the path to closer co-operation in the making of pictures will be easy, Simeon Rowson, managing director of Gaumont British, advised the American trade yesterday at the AMPA luncheon.

Two circuits now control one-seventh of all the wired theatres in England, Rowson said, one chain with 300 houses and the other with more than 150 theatres. The two chains probably represent one-fifth of the seating capacity and the combined value of their playdates is from one-third to one-fourth of the entire gross of a picture, Rowson said. At the same time he announced that the two organizations are encouraging British production.

The fact that over 2,225,000 are unemployed out of England's total population of 46 millions has had an appreciable effect on grosses and has necessitated the closing of many theatres, the speaker said. Attendance decline he placed at 15 to 20 per cent in the past year. To combat those conditions he urged "utmost possible limits of improvement" as well as a united effort at solution.

"Personally, I am optimistic enough to believe that a combined frontal attack on the problem is more likely to lead to the discovery of the right solution to the present situation," Rowson said. "We must discover the root causes and treat them, and we must be prepared at the same time to recognize the utmost possible limits of improvement under present conditions."

Winters in Oklahoma City Office of Warner Houses

Oklahoma City—Ray Winters is the new manager of the Oklahoma City contact office for the Midwest division of Warner theatres, taking the place of Fred Wooley, resigned. Winters comes from the Warner zone contact office in St. Louis.

Title of Picture Changed

Hollywood—The title of "The Registered Woman," which RKO-Pathe will release, has been changed to "A Woman of Experience." This is the picture which Charles R. Rogers started for Radio and then switched over to RKO-Pathe when he became production head of that company.

Ryskind 'Monkey Business" Consultant Number Twelve

Hollywood—Morrie Ryskind, who has been working with Eddie Cantor and George Jessel on the former's new picture, "Palmy Days," has been borrowed by Paramount as a consultant on the story of the Marx Brothers' opus, "Monkey Business."

The last meeting over this story had eleven conferencees. Morrie makes up the round dozen. And, it may be whispered, the Marx Brothers don't want a story anyway. They don't believe in stories.

Cast Additions Made To The Marx Brothers' Film

Cast additions have just been made to the company supporting the Four Marx Brothers in their new Paramount vehicle, "Monkey Business," now in production at the Hollywood studios.

Those who have been selected for principal roles include Thelma Todd, Tom Kennedy, William B. Davidson and Rockcliffe Fellowes, the two latter having just completed roles in "The Vice Squad," with Paul Lukas, Kay Francis, and Helen Johnson.

Dix Picture Title Changed To "Young Donovan's Kid"

It's "Young Donovan's Kid" now instead of "Born to the Racket" as the title of Richard Dix's new picture for Radio. The production is from Rex Beach's "Big Brother." The cast includes Boris Karloff, Marion Shilling, Frank Sheridan, Jackie Cooper, Fred Kelsey, Dick Rush, Robert Wilber, Harry Tenbrook and Jane Talent.

Robinson; "The Co-Respondent" with William Powell; "Honor of the Family" as one of the Bebe Daniels group.

At the convention, which was presided over by C. C. Ezell, Eastern general sales manager, it was announced at the Wednesday session that Sam Morris, who will leave for Europe in September, had been unanimously elected a member of the board of directors of Warners at a meeting the preceding day.

An agreement has been concluded calling for the playing of Paramount product throughout the Warner circuit, with a reciprocal agreement not yet signed but expected shortly.

Morris, who welcomed the delegates at the opening session on Monday, stressed the point that the 1931-32 production schedule has been designed to meet the entertainment requirements of the entire family, all types of films are to be included, to "cater to all types of intelligence."

He stated with reference to sales policy: "We will continue our same sales policy of previous years in an honest effort to give the exhibitor and the public the same square deal for which our company is respected."

Conducted as "Open Forum"

Morris expressed the belief that the sales personnel of Warner-First National was developing in a manner which is keeping pace with the industry. The development of new personnel and the ambitious plans for the new year were pointed out as evidences of the upward turn in business.

The meeting was conducted in the form of an "open forum" with talks by the various department heads and division chiefs followed by open discussion from the floor.

Claude Ezell followed Morris at the opening Monday morning session, outlining the purposes of the convention and introducing Gradwell L. Sears, Western general sales manager.

Ezell announced the winners of the Sam E. Morris Playdate Drive as follows: Frank Myers, Toronto; Harry Decker, Brooklyn; Charles Muehlman, San Francisco, and Wolfe Cohen, Winnipeg. Meyers and Decker received first and second prizes awarded by Dorothy Mackaill, and Muehlman and Cohen third and fourth offered by Loretta Young.

Ezell introduced the various branch managers who in turn presented the members of their forces. Morris followed with a review of the Warner company's history since it entered the distribution field.

On Tuesday after the opening by Ezell, Max Milder, Eastern sales manager, spoke on office management as applied to the exchange. He was followed by A. W. Smith, Jr., Southern sales manager, whose topic was exhibitors' resistance. B. F. Lyon, Canadian sales manager, reviewed sales conditiones in Canada.

In the afternoon, Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, spoke on advertising applied to sales.

Norman Moray, Vitaphone sales manager, was introduced and reviewed the intentions of the Vitaphone short subject sales department during the coming season. He was followed by I. J. Hoffman, general manager of theatres of the New England zone, and Jacob Wilk, head of the story department. Sam Saxe, director of the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio, spoke briefly, and A. S. Howson talked on censorship conditions.

The closing session was devoted almost exclusively to an address by Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, who touched on the highlights of the production announcement, made just prior to his speech. Dan Michalove, general manager of theatres, who with Harry Charnas, general metropolitan zone manager, accompanied Warner, spoke very briefly. Morris and Ezell closed the convention.

No mention was made of sponsored reels in the convention. Sam Morris did say, however, that color in pictures for the coming season would be used only very carefully, that there was no definite foreign film schedule, that the company "would merely meet conditions in the foreign market as it found them" and that no definite advertising budget had as yet been set.

The executive group entrained immediately for New York for a one day stopover, before continuing to the Coast for the Western division meeting scheduled for San Francisco April 29, 30 and May 1, with Gradwell L. Sears, Western general sales manager, presiding.

Each Company To Produce 35 for Coming Season

Warner Product Gets Sendoff at Coast Meetings

San Francisco—One hundred fifty members of the Warner-First National-Vitaphone sales organization are to meet at the St. Francis hotel next Wednesday for a three-day discussion of the new season's product, when the Western forces go into action, representing the territory between Chicago and the Coast.

Speakers include Harry M. Warner, Jack L. and Albert Warner, Gradwell L. Sears, Western sales manager, Charles Muehlman, manager of the Northern division of California, and Sam E. Morris, vice-president and general manager. Product plans, as outlined at the Atlantic City meeting of the Eastern forces this week, will be presented.

Attempting Export Firm For U. S. Theatre Supplies

Organization of an international theatre equipment corporation made up of American manufacturers and to deal in every country except the United States, is being attempted through the Wall Street firm of George S. Mabee & Associates. Those behind the venture would not be revealed.

The plans calls for the purchase of stock in the company, which is to be known as World Wide Theatre Equipment Corporation, by American manufacturers, their product, insofar as they are non-competitive, to be distributed by this jointly owned organization, which would conduct sales offices in the principal cities of the world.

The corporation would have exclusive rights to these products in all countries except the United States. Each of the member manufacturers would have a representative on the board of directors, and all stock held by them would be voting stock.

Atlantic City was the place. . . . Traymore was the hotel. . . . The Rose Room was the spot, . . . but the press-boys had to sit outside and look wise, because the "open forum" was closed to the scribes, as usual. . . .

C. C. Ezell wielded the gavel, Sam Morris sat on one side, with Charlie Einfeld on the other. . . . The Warner Brothers smiled down from the back wall. . . .

Fourteen oldtimers stood up and took bows. All of them have been with the company more than 16 years, . . . particularly deep bows were taken by Joe Hebrew, George Balsdon, Jr., John French and Joe Hummel. . . .

Under Charlie Einfeld's direction, Al Brauninger and his men did a neat job of decorating the Rose Room. . . .

After Monday's talkfest, the boys were invited to a fightfest. . . . They enjoyed seeing some one else having it out. . . .

B. F. Lyon brought his men down from Canada and they were in their element . . . because the Byrd Exhibition was down from New York . . . and the huskies were with it. . . .

Tim Donahue is a very quiet Boston lad, . . . but he and Tom Spry, Boston branch manager, were rather much sought after. . . . They blamed the haberdashery. . . . Who knows! . . .

Harry Seed, who branch manages up Buffalo way, and J. R. Levee, J. M. Sitterly, J. G. Fater are at the moment more interested in their standing in the Sam Morris Playdate Drive than anything else. . . . Harry swears he is going to drag down first honors, or know the reason why. . . .

On Tuesday, at the opening of the p. m. session, Sam Morris brought in "Red" Kann. . . . Ezell introduced him and Red answered back. . . . Then Red was politely requested to partake of the Atlantic City sea-breezes, . . . which he did. . . .

Ray Cloud, Cincinnati branch chief, formerly of Detroit, brought four henchmen along: H. C. Bugie, J. P. Eifert, W. F. LaSance, C. L. Kendall. . . .

P. S. Krumenacker, G. R. Jermain and R. H. Dunbar attempted to sleep together, we are told, in the same room. . . . The why? . . . Well . . . figure it out for yourself. . . .

Irving Rothenberg and Harry Decker wasted plenty of coldcream. . . . Sunburned and how! . . .

Joe Hebrew and Herb Elder are back in their respective territories and seemingly glad of it. . . . Joe is Washington and Philadelphia district manager handling distribution after a shot at the theatre end, replacing William Heenan, resigned. . . . Herb hangs his hat in New Haven. . . . R. Binns has climbed one step up the ladder with his desk labeled "Sales Manager, Philadelphia." . . .

We are whispering this one. . . . William Lissner, M. A. Mooney, R. O. Flemm, William Onie, registered as of Cleveland, carried stones in their pockets. . . . They had to, to keep the women away. . . . They are all bad shots! . . .

Here's real train service. . . . The contingent of executives which will shift to San Francisco for the Western meeting hopped a special at New York, after a one-day stopover, which is taking them to the Coast in a record run of three days, four hours. . . . Al Brauninger cleared a neat $50 when some one bet him it couldn't be done. . . .

Speaking of trains . . . there was a real old hand on deck. . . . Vernon K. Hantke, Pennsylvania passenger representative, is arranging the boys' transportation. . . . He has been in the service 25 years, for the last four or five of which he has been moving film conventionites hither and yon, expeditiously. . . . Just arrived from Washington, where he had 1,200 of Mrs. Sabin's Prohibition Reform outfit on his hands . . . and he found a seat for every one of them. . . .

Al Gold, local press-photographer, spent four days running up and down the boardwalk with a camera under his arm, snapping them here and there, . . . and the boys grinned and liked it. . . .

A sign along the boardwalk: "Clean, refined reading, 30 years' experience—Madame Beaumont." But the conventioners went right past. . . . Warner First National Convention signs were plastered all over the boardwalk and the Warner houses plugged the convention. . . . There was even a welcome sign on the incubator baby-show, but not a single half-baked baby came out of the oven to shake hands! . . .

Sunday p. m. when the Traymore bellhops were plenty busy, smashing film-baggage, Al Brauninger held a snappy reception in his room with E. L. Alperson, film buying assistant to Dan Michalove, general manager of theatres, as impromptu m. c. . . . Eddie claimed he was celebrating his tenth wedding anniversary. . . . Charlie Einfeld stepped up for a "hello." . . .

E. M. Newman, producer-explorer, related some very interesting experiences in the making of travelogue shorts. . . . Next season's shorts, to be practically entirely in series, will contain a group of his product. . . .

The first of the Bobby Jones golf series appropriately hit the Warner here during convention. . . . It's a corker! . . .

Luncheons were held in the Submarine Grill. . . . When they were tired of looking at the fish in their plates, the conventioning diners looked up at the gold-fish sprinting around in the ceiling pool. . . .

Outside the Rose Room, tacked on a bulletin board, were congratulatory wires from Dorothy Mackaill, Alfred E. Green, Ben Lyon, Joan Blondell, William Beaudine, Evalyn Knapp, Loretta Young, Archie Mayo, Walter Huston, Mervyn LeRoy, Dick Barthelmess, Leon Janney (who will star in a series of children's pictures for next season) and William Powell, new to the Warner menage. . . .

Jack Pearl, well-known stage comedian, and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth, the Vitaphone "Naggers" pair, gave the boys "time-out" for a while Wednesday afternoon. . . . They had them forgetting all about sales and business when they liberally distributed their humor. . . . Pearl's, they say, was unadulterated. . . .

THEATRE RECEIPTS

As indicated by the chart on page 24, theatre grosses are reaching a mark above the April period in 1930, at which time there was a sudden drop in receipts. The trend toward healthier business is decidedly noticeable at this time. Climatic conditions have been almost ideal for the theatres. Product for the most part excellent, with several exceptional pictures recording unusually high grosses.

Entertainment the Issue, Says Freuler

Popular entertainment at popular prices, according to John R. Freuler, of Big 4, is the real issue at any time, and particularly now. Trends may come and trends may go, but the practice which has made for the success of American business is the public's money's worth at prices the public can pay, he says.

If, as has been rumored, "many theatres will be forced to close before summer unless the supply of wholesome family pictures is increased to meet the demand," the situation, states Freuler, presents a very serious problem to all concerned. Large producers, independent producers and exhibitors of all classes are involved. It is clearly a case of underproduction of playable product. Product should be built of wholesome, de-sexed, action material along popular lines, sacrificing lavish sets, costuming and overhead which increase production costs, says Freuler.

Recognition of the importance of keeping houses open during the summer months should be seriously regarded by major and independent producer alike. If, in certain territories, the double-feature policy results in added revenue to the independent producer, in additional playing situations to the major companies, and permits exhibitors to keep their doors open it should be welcomed, and studio activities should be speeded to meet a two-fold market.

License Power Shifted

Providence—The city council has taken from the chief of police the power to issue licenses and invested it in three councilmen.

Tax Bill Tabled

Austin, Texas—A bill to place a tax of 25 cents a square foot on billboards was tabled after it had been defeated in the lower house of the state legislature.

Rouda Suddenly Learns the Boss's Son Has Grown Up

Chicago—Harry Rouda, who has been manager of the Lane Court theatre for more years than probably any other man in the business has remained in one place, is wondering if it's really worthwhile.

During the years Rouda was on the job, the Lane Court's owner was raising a family. The other day Rouda suddenly was made aware that one of these, a son, had grown up. Now the boss' hopeful manages the theatre, and the old veteran is looking for something else to do.

Whitbeck with Universal

Los Angeles — Frank Whitbeck, it is understood, has joined Universal to devote his efforts to exploitation and advertising.

Whitbeck's resignation as ad and publicity director of Fox West Coast becomes effective on May 1.

Closed for Summer Months

Enid, Okla.—The Arcadia, Publix, in operation only six months, will be closed during the summer months, beginning next week.

Branches Add Men

Denver—Two changes in sales forces here are the adding of Earl Stein of Los Angeles to the RKO staff and Jack Anderson of Seattle to Universal.

Quartet of Playwrights

Four well known playwrights have just been signed by Paramount to contracts calling for their services on pictures to be made for the new season by this company. They include Brian Marlow, S. K. Lauren, A. A. Kline and Madame Condes Neve.

Sound More Critical Than Silent Picture

Hollywood—Five Universal players have recently been rewarded thus for their outstanding performances. Success seems to register much more rapidly in the talkies than it did in the days of silent films.

Latest of these is Robert Armstrong, whose work as the prize fight manager in "Iron Man," the Lew Ayres starring picture, has won praise. Carl Laemmle, Jr., production chief, has given Armstrong the leading role in "The Whole Town's Talking," the Anita Loos-John Emerson play, which is coming to the screen via an adaptation by Dale Van Every, with Vin Moore directing.

Lois Wilson's performance in "Seed" at the Carthay Circle theatre, has marked her for a come-back apparently, for she has now affixed her name to a long term Universal contract.

Elliott Nugent, stage actor who went into pictures a couple of years ago and who "clicked" in Universal's "Virtuous Husband," has also been signed by Universal to a long term contract.

A recent notable case is Lew Ayres, an unknown until he played opposite Greta Garbo in "The Kiss." Ayres was later picked for a difficult and responsible role in "All Quiet on the Western Front," and now has a long term contract with Universal. And he is a star, in less than a year.

"All Quiet" was the making of stardom for another actor—Slim Summerville. Though Slim has been a prominent Hollywood figure for years, his great chance came in "All Quiet." He was given the role of Tjaden, scored decisively, was at once placed under long term contract, has become a short subject star for Universal, and a featured player in many important feature productions.

Delores Del Rio Contract For Year, Says LeBaron

Stars, stories, plays, and adaptors figure among the latest contracts with RKO Radio Pictures.

In the first place, Dolores Del Rio's contract is for one year rather than for one picture, according to word from William LeBaron, production head at the studios on the West Coast.

Contracts finally have been completed with John McGowan and Guy Bolton, authors, and George and Ira Gershwin, composers, for screen rights to "Girl Crazy," Broadway musical show. Rex Beach's "The Slander Girl" has been bought for next season's program. Two others of Beach's stories that are yet to come in the picture form are "White Shoulders" and "Young Donovan's Kid."

Adaptation and dialogue of the French version of "The Next Corner" will be done by A. LaBailley. Herbert Brenon has direction of the English production, the cast including Kay Francis, William Welch, Ricardo Cortez, Adrienne d'Ambricourt and John St. Polis. And Fred Santley has been added to the cast of "High Stakes," from Willard Mack's play.

MUSIC AND TALENT

TALKIES CREATE DEMAND FOR STAGE

Nelle Stage Director at The Fox in San Francisco

San Francisco—Things are happening these days at the Fox theatre, still billed as the "World's Finest Theatre," and Anthony Nelle, the stage director, is right in the thick of things.

When Fanchon and Marco stage acts were moved from the Fox back to the Warfield, it looked like curtains for stage presentations at the big house. Musical tableaux were tried out and gradually expanded and then full-fledged stage shows again made their appearance, with Anthony Nelle in charge. Nelle is a young Russian who studied and drilled for years in the Imperial Russian ballet school in Warsaw before the war. Now he is anchored, he hopes, at the Fox, where he is given free rein in planning tableaux, designing costumes, training the ballet, working out lighting effects, suggesting music and supervising the arrangement of settings.

Nationally Known Organist at San Antonio RKO Majestic

"Mac" Bridwell, well-known theatre and radio organist, has taken over the Robert Morton console at the RKO Majestic theatre in San Antonio, Texas. Bridwell will present a series of featured organ solos in conjunction with the stageshow vaudeville. He was, for the past year, featured organist at the Parkway Theatre, Madison, Wisc.

National Music Week Set For May Third to Ninth

The National Music Week Committee together with every theatre manager, musical conductor and organist are tying up with civic organizations to put over this event for the furtherance of good music.

Johns Succeeds Crawford

Indianapolis—Brooke Johns will succeed Jack Crawford as m.c. at the Indiana, starting May 1.

Publix is planning a campaign for Johns prior to his opening here.

New Firms File Charters

Dover, Del.—Charters have been filed here by Independent Union Motion Picture Operators of America, North American Distributing Corp., Moreno-Snyder Cine Corp., and Cathay Copyright Corp.

Martin Expands Holdings

York, Neb.—Lester F. Martin, of Nevada, Iowa, president of the Independent Theatre Operators of Iowa (Allied), has purchased the York. He owns five others.

Johnny Perkins

Three hundred and four (304—count 'em—304) pounds of Joy and "head man of hilarity," that's Johnny Perkins, Warner Bros' sensational master of ceremonies at the Jersey City Stanley theatre. Johnny recently completed his third consecutive RKO unit and has been featured in seven Publix units. He has played in nearly every big theatre in the world and always has been a successful entertainer. He is now on his fourth week at the Stanley, having been brought in for a two-weeks' run. After opening day, Warner immediately signed him up for an additional 14 weeks. And that surely speaks well for the ever smiling Johnny. Newspapers throughout Jersey are proclaiming him the best entertainer ever to play in the State and they say that he soon will be an institution there. Johnny has that something—let us call it the happy facuity of making people happy—and that is in our humble opinion one of the best things in the world. Behind that cute pout and the happy smiles Johnny bestows on his audiences is a real business head. And what a happy combination that is.

Hit at Gang and Wet Films

Vallejo, Cal.—Women should register a protest against gang pictures and those that play lightly with the prohibition amendment by "attending only the best pictures, not by staying away from pictures altogether, as so many have been driven to do," the San Francisco District Federation of Women's Clubs was told by Mrs. J. E. Hensen, chairman of the division on pictures, at the annual convention.

Marco Points Out Circuits Are Adding to Units

Sees "Stage Renaissance" With Screen Stars and Writers Playing Important Part

By ED DAWSON

A "stage renaissance" in which talking picture stars and writers will prove a dominant factor, is the prediction of Michael Marco, who has arrived in New York to supervise the production of several new Roxy shows.

Marco said that the eclipse of "live entertainments" in the motion picture theatres caused temporarily by the talkies, was definitely over.

"The talkies an dthe singing pictures have really started a fresh public demand for real live artists in the picture theatres," he said. In proof of this, the producer cited that RKO and Publix are adding to their stage bookings, as are Fox theatres, with whom Fanchon & Marco are connected.

"Fanchon & Marco produced stage shows for 22 weeks of 'motion picture time' in 1928, when the talkies came in," said Marco, "whereas today we produce for 36 weeks. We have just built the largest studio in the world devoted exclusively to stage presentations in motion picture theatres, and you don't make that sort of move purely out of sentiment.

Wants Live Performers

"There is no question that the public wants to see real live performers as well as good movies. Eventually the condensed stage entertainment we give at theatres like the Roxy will create a new interest in full length stage shows, the legitimate, so-called. But with all the best actors appearing in the talkies, the theatre will have to go to the movies for its casts.

"Hollywood is developing new speaking talent, and new talent for the writing of essential dialogue, to the point that eventually it will be able to assist the legitimate without injuring itself. Right now Hollywood cannot spare any talent for the revival of the legitimate, but in a year or two this condition will adjust itself and the new blood for the theatrical renaissance will come from moviedom."

Sees Producers' Help

Marco said that the motion picture producers would help this renaissance because, since the advent of the talkies, the screen needed the theatre.

"A strong legitimate stage can only be helpful to the talking picture producers," he concluded. "And the only hope for a strong legitimate lies out there in Hollywood. With interests so identical, there can be only one result. Hollywood, which revolutionized the amusement business of the entire world, will put the American legitimate theatre back on its feet."

UNIFORMS FOR HOUSE ATTACHES COSTUMES FOR STAGE PRESENTATIONS BROOKS 149 B'way N. Y. City

STAGE SHOWS

New York City Roxy

Week ending April 23

Preceding the stage presentation, Mischa Violin conducted the Roxy Symphony Orchestra in the Rimsky-Korsakoff overture, "Capriccio Espagnole." It was well played but seemed unnccessarily long.

The stage presentation consisted of three independent and distinct units. The first, "The Fish Bowl," was a unique adaigo offering by Renoff and Renova, in which their actions appeared to be performed in the bottom of a bowl filled with fish. They were assisted by Irene McBride, Helen Sassier, Hilda Eckner, Claudia Latova and the Roxy Ballet Corps.

The second unit, "Anvil Chorus" from "Il Trovatore," featured Anne Tyson, a new personality in the Roxy company. Miss Tyson is a contralto of note, being a former member of the Philadelphia Opera Company. A full stage setting, beautiful in its simplicity, incorporated the use of three flashing anvils as a background to Miss Tyson who, accompanied by the Roxy Orchestra, beautifully sang excerpts from the opera.

The third unit, "Happy Feet," executed by the 32 Roxyettes, consisted of "jazz" dance routines which were not up to the standard of the Roxyettes.

The fourth unit, "Land of Laces," featured Patricia Bowman, youthful ballerina, and is saved from becoming monotonous by the graceful and pleasing dancing of Miss Bowman, who performs a most lithesome routine of toe dancing.

Fanchon & Marco's "African" Idea opens with a number by the chorus of 14 Jungle Maidens attired in shorts. The maidens perform in snappy style with rifles before a jungle setting and then give way to Frank Foster and Maybelle, featuring Foster's amazing animals, two monkeys and a baboon. The animals are expertly trained and ride a bicycle, rock in a chair and engage in other clever stunts.

Two tap dancers perform in an agile manner and are followed by the chorus in native jungle attire and equipped with spears and shields. Featured in connection with this number are Cherie & Tomasita, sister adagioists, who twist and twirl in elaborate style.

Ed & Morton Beck combine the foolish with the sublime in their act, singing "Love Sick Blues" and "The Song of the Fool." They include some clever repartee.

The background for the final episode is the silhouette of a large tree with some of the members of the chorus reclining in its branches. Cherie & Tomasita again perform in an engaging manner, after which other members of the chorus, attired in striking costumes to represent animals and plants of the jungle, parade across the stage.

Prosper & Maret, garbed as Tarzans of the stage, do a neat bit of slow motion acrobatics, which are plenty good and earn them applause. The entire idea is cleverly executed and staged.

Jessel and Picon at Fox Houses

Fanchon and Marco have signed George Jessel for a tour of Fox theatres, commencing at the Fox Brooklyn, May 1st, followed by the Academy of Music, Manhattan, and Crotona, Bronx.

Molly Picon will open at the Audubon, Manhattan, May 15th with the Crotona and Fox Brooklyn to immediately follow. Miss Picon will then appear in a play of her own for a summer engagement.

San Francisco Warfield

Week ending April 22

Under the leadership of Rube Wolf the orchestra offers the "Poet and Peasant Overture," with a trumpet solo by Rube, and the quick approval of the audience brings the promise of other classics in the future. A novelty number, "The King's Horses," is made comical by the reading of headings from the newspapers.

The stage offering is Fanchon & Marco's "Mickey Mouse Idea," staged by Larry Ceballos, and proves a wow. Mickey, with his flapping ears, nervous tail, pearl-buttoned panties and demure mien, appears "in person," along with Minnie, a jocular steed, a cow, frog, fish, penguins, flowers and dancing skeletons.

The Sunkist Beauties appear with Mickey Mouse dolls and sing about his charm and then on comes Mickey Mouse himself to prove that he is no myth. Mickey dances with the girls, performs on a pole and walks right over a group when they obligingly bend their backs.

Bozo, the famous educated dog, long a stage favorite, is introduced to Mickey Mouse and goes through his regular run of tricks. His mistress, who puts him through his paces, does a dance and tumbling act that wins her a fine hand.

Rube announces the presentation of Walter Disney's "Silly Symphony," and the real fun is on. A huge hen struts across the stage, accompanied by a rooster, and a green and yellow frog adds a bass note here and there to the farmyard song. Fish and flowers come to life and dance and skeletons rattle their dry bones and disappear mysteriously. Four sociable looking penguins appear and walk off with the laugh honors by doing the "Wooden Soldier" dance.

Three young chaps advise that they are to get a neat sum from an uncle if they succeed in persuading an audience to laugh, and prove their right to the coin with a lot of funny stories and a slow motion fight that is a scream.

A family of Minnie Mice appear and do stunts on trapeze to the rear of the stage, while Mickey Mouse does a bicycle and crutch stunt. A confident young man walks in on his hands and does a tap dance up and down steps and a couple put on a trapeze act in real circus style. Several old friends have a part in the show, including Toots Novelle and Helen Patch, who do solo dances.

San Antonio RKO Majestic

Week ending April 15

The genial orchestra conductor, Dave Smason, and His RKOlians start the program going with another lively overture while "Mac" Bridwell at the organ offers a treat of musical numbers.

Les Gellis, as the American Boys from France, are well received and the patrons give them a good hand.

Lane & Haley, in a satire, "Who Is Your Boss?", make the audience roar with a line of chatter that is really hiliarious throughout. They sure drive straight at your funnybone. A nice hand.

The Three McCann Sisters, a trio of dainty sweetness, capture the hearts of the natives right from the start with their steps and songs. They were formerly of "The International Revue." A great big hand.

Headlining the bill is Miss Gloria Foy with Sam Critcherson and Alan David in "Stars and Satire." This wonderful trio presents an up-to-the-minute cycle of dance and song hits. Gloria is a skilled artist while an equal amount of praise goes to her two partners.

Jersey City Stanley

Week ending April 23

Jules Faret, musical conductor, announcing and then leading the orchestra in a well-played arrangement of Rachmaninoff's "Prelude," preceded the stage show. The stage show, "Carnival of Youth," featured this house's new m.c., Johnny Perkins, who proved a whole show in himself. The show opened to a flashy setting in which Bernice and Emily performed a difficult routine of acrobatic dancing on a flight of stairs. Johnny Perkins, rotund comedian master of ceremonies, between gags introduced the acts on the bill. Anna Chang, Chinese personality singer, did well with her songs. Tommy Wonder presented a new "strutt" routine of dancing and also his well known fast jazz fox trot and whirling dance with a dummy. Charlie Hill, Broadway song writer, comedian and pianist, had the house in an uproar at his philosophy on the origin of popular songs. Perkins and His Mad Gang of 8 musicians and 3 entertainers next came on for their own spot. (Johnny and his gang have been here three weeks and they have been doing so well that they have been held over indefinitely). Ralph Arcuri, a 12 year old boy, did very well with his singing of "Smile Darn Ya Smile," and Ruth Petty, a devastating "blues" crooner, stopped the show with her singing of "I Got Rhythm" and a beautiful ballad, "When Your Lover Has Gone." She was forced to encore. Miss Petty has plenty of personality, a good "blues" singing voice, a great delivery and beauty. She undoubtedly will get far in her chosen work. Richard Montgomery, a young colored boy, also stopped the show with his singing of "Moonlight on the Colorado" and "For You." His high tenor voice is a pleasure to hear. Johnny Perkins followed these singers with the singing and especially the reciting of "Just Say Nothing at All." Johnny's voice is not a trained singing voice, such as the others have, but he brought tears to many eyes with his recitation, and a big reception for himself at the finish. "Dub" Taylor, a young bashful Southern boy, offered a great imitation of a train, "Goin' Ahead" (as he says) on his harmonica. He also pleased with his xylophone playing.

The Foster Girls, doing a "drum" and tap dance routine together with the entire company, closed the show.

Due to the many encores the performers got, the show ran 15 minutes over schedule.

Providence Fay's

Week ending April 17

"Steps and Riddles," a fast-moving dance novelty featuring Roscoe Ails and Thelms White, assumes the feature spot in this week's program at Fay's. The act is built around the terpsichorean skill of Miss White and Mr. Ails, and during its run of nearly half an hour brings to the fore a number of new routines that seemed to please mightily in this town, which is dance-mad.

A Providence girl, Sally Sarkis, comes in for a great hand when she appears with Bee and Ray Gorman in "Revue Modernistic." This act has eight stylish young steppers against an artistic drop and is a great number for a headline position anywhere.

Jimmy Gildea and company appear in "The Great Lover," a decidedly humorous burlesque with wise patter, and Bob Fisher, a comedian but recently from across the pond, has a trunkful of English jokes and fun. The La Mour Trio, gymnasts, open the bill with high swings and fancy capers.

STAGE SHOWS

New York City Paramount

Week ending April 23

Charlie Davis and His Joy Gang proved the most enjoyable part of the stage show "Sweethearts" current at the Paramount this week. "Sweethearts," a Fred Evans Publix production, as a unit, had nothing outstanding but all performers did their bits well and proved entertaining. The show opens to a pleasing pictorial scene in which the 24 Evans-Bines Girls present a double-dance routine as Miss Syd Mann nicely sings that old favorite, "Sweethearts." Stadler and Rose follow with a good routine of a "Rag Doll" dance, which consists of a combination of adaigo, acrobatic and contortion work and then a well-done toy soldier routine. The line-girls, dressed in ballet skirts, uniform jackets and shining helmets, perform one of the best military dance routines, done on their toes, that this reviewer has ever seen. The fine reception accorded them was justified. Their manual at arms performed with guns, phosphorescent and with house and stage lights out, proved most entertaining. Red Donahue and company offered a hilarious comedy act. Red as a colored private, driving an ammunition cart, pulled by a trained mule, and his assistant, a top sergeant, have their troubles trying to keep the mule from kicking the life out of them. Charlie Davis and his gang of 14 musicians are on next, playing and singing popular numbers. Each week these boys, ably led by Davis, offer some new and outstanding bit. This week their prize bit is the singing of "Turn on the Heat" as a church choir might sing it. Their playing of "Whistling in the Dark" and "Bugle Call Rag" was well-done and received a good hand. Jimmy Ray earned an encore after offering an unique type of "jazz" dancing. His encore consisted of a well done "strut" dance routine. The entire company, augmented by the ensemble, presented a pretty picture in a flash finish, when the entire stage was lighted with flowered lights.

Denver Denver

Week ending April 23

The Denver had a feature that is fast becoming a model for theatres in all parts of the country. It was a Kiddie Revue, put on by members of the Denver Post Just Kids club. This week was particularly fine, and featuring 87 well trained children, drew large crowds who were generous in their applause. Some of the acts included toe and specialty dancing, line routines that would do credit to many a unit, a Midget orchestra, Floradora sextet, composed of diminutive girls and their escorts—an act which nearly brought down the house. Bennie Sullivan, with a saxophone as big as himself, and Barbara Lee Terrill, the tiniest violinist on the stage, were well received. The flash at the end was put on by the entire company and the Midget accordion band. This band has over twenty members, and is really good. Fred Schmitt, musical director of the Denver, arranged the music and he and Holden Swigêr, manager, provided special stage settings. Miss Geraldine O'Neill, musical director of the Denver Post Just Kids Club, had charge of the program.

The Publix stage unit, "An Antique Shop," was pleasingly staged and presented. Dave Craig, master of ceremonies, ran the show and sang a song. Dave's popularity is growing here and his singing is one of the reasons this house has such a large list of regulars. Twelve girls in the lines put on good routines, while the OnWah troupe, with its liberal dose of tumbling and contortionisms, keep the audience entertained. The spinning plate act is clever. The George Adagio foursome, an adagio act, provided beauty and skill in their performance. Sid Marion did the clowning and Marie Du Val the singing.

Cincinnati RKO Albee

Week ending April 17

This house presents one of the best all-around bills seen here in many moons, every act clicking, heavily with the customers.

The Three Rhythm Dancers, a male trio of African descent, open the show. Their plain and fancy hoofing registers in a big way from their initial numbers, and they frequently are interrupted by salvos of prolonged applause, bowing off at the finish to a very hefty hand.

Arnaut Brothers, on No. 2, in harlequin costumes and makeup, open with a series of musical numbers on the uke and guitar, accompanied by considerable subtle pantomime clowning, working in one. They then go to full stage for a "bird song" number, in which they are assisted by an unbilled femme. The latter part of the act is extremely novel both in presentation and effects.

Henry Bergman & Co follow in a skit called "Ham and Eggs," with special drops This is a four-act with one member a youngster not yet in her teens. She is, however, a finished artist both in her lines and dance steps, the latter creating something of a sensation. The act goes over with a bang.

Billy Glason, billed in big type as the former star of "Gay Paree," offers a variety of nonsensical chatter which makes an instantaneous hit, resulting in many encores. In fact, the act registers a near show-stop.

Gus Edwards' "New Stars on Parade," featuring Billy Taylor and Mitzi Mayfair, closing the show as headliners, is replete with high-class talent including the Connor Twins, the Aber Twins, Virginia Lee, Walter Kevan and Hildegarde. The specialties, including songs and dances, are all especially clever, Miss Mayfair in her acrobatic and toe dancing numbers being particularly outstanding. In presentation, costuming, and, in fact, from every angle, the act is clean.

Stanley-Warner Cuts Stage Shows for Vaude at Earle

Philadelphia—Beginning Saturday, the Earle Theatre, a Stanley-Warner house, will return to vaudeville, eliminating stage presentations. Eight acts of R-K-O vaudeville will be presented, plus a feature picture and orchestral and organ novelties.

For the last several weeks, since the expiration of the Publix stage show contract, Stanley-Warner has been building its own shows for the Mastbaum and the Earle. The policy will be continued at the Mastbaum, though the revue idea goes into the discard at the Earle.

The age-old favorite, "School Days," is proving more popular than ever. Brian MacDonald, m. c., is dressed as a seedy looking school master and he helps keep the fun coming fast and furious. The old act, whereby the teacher keeps hitting his desk with the gavel to maintain order and finally smashes the apple standing thereon, causing it to splatter all over the stage, gets a bigger laugh than ever. Of course the orchestra boys and the ensemble girls, dressed as children, provide the school class with plenty of pep and wisecracks.

The girls do a good number skipping rope in time with the music, first skipping slowly, and later at breakneck speed. The sight is a pretty one.

Murphy, the comedian trumpeter, dresses as a girl and does "Would You Like to Take a Walk," with MacDonald, and almost stops the show. These boys right here put on a great comedy act, better than many of the traveling acts which have been coming here.

The star of the show is Rin-Tin-Tin in person with his trainer and owner, Lee Duncan. "Rinty" is winning his way more and more into the hearts of the fans by his clever and well-presented offering.

The Hill Billies, Annie, Judy and Zeke, are an excellent trio of vocalists, as well as comedians. Their offering is scoring a tremendous hit, getting encore after encore and keeping MacDonald busy trying to get the show started again after their every appearance.

Dorothy Bushey, local favorite, leads the ensemble girls, in a couple of fast songs and dance routines.

"Old Man Rhythm" is the title of the final presentation to play this Publix deluxe house.

First we hear Ernest Hauser and His Grand Symphony render the ever-pleasing overture and a selected violin solo by the music master.

Paul Spor, "The Prince of Pep," introduces the following principals upon the stage: Block and Sully; The Dave Gould Dancing Girls, 12 stepping dolls; George Dewey Washington; Ruth Stanley and Dave White, all snappy rhythm dancers and singers.

The Dave Gould Steppers come out several times again and delight the Texans in a most entertaining way. Headlining the unit this week are Block and Sully, two stars that make Old Man Rhythm young once more. All in all the show is well deversified and entertaining.

Earl Abel at the console gives a great organ solo and it's a relief to this reviewer that the recent change in policy at this theater doesn't affect the organist, as he is well liked here. His concerts and song slides always go over great.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Harry Kogen, NBC orchestra leader, has turned his talents to the writing of string quartet arrangements of old ballads. Among the numbers in his volume to be published soon are such old favorites as "Old Kentucky Home," "Last Rose of Summer," "Love's Old Sweet Song," "Darling Nellie Gray," and "The Mocking Bird." . . . James K. Holstein, the "Jim" of Jim and Bob, popular WENR Hawaiian guitarists, worked as a stoker on a ship in order to come over to the United States, and try his hand at entertaining. . . . Dad Pickard, versatile NBC entertainer and head of the Pickard Family, owns more than forty harmonicas and jews harps, in addition to a few fiddles, guitars, banjos and ukuleles. Fourteen harmonicas are needed when Dad steps to the mike. "Can't take any chances, and besides they're all different key," according to Dad. . . . Al Cameron, of the team Al & Pete, is undoubtedly the chief comedian of the WENR minstrels, broadcast on Wednesday night from the NBC studios in Chicago. He even makes his actors laugh, and at the wrong time, too. His Southern drawl and witticisms make him outstanding in any performance. . . . Fred Rose, singing pianist and popular composer featured over KYW, is a St. Louis boy. In 1917 he came to Chicago and began his composing career. The beginning of radio in 1921 found him at KYW studios learning what it is all about. His popularity on the air brought him recording contracts and he is still making record every month.

Harry Buddinger, trap drummer with Harry Kogen's Homesteaders, received considerable joshing from his fellow orchestra members when a guest artist during a recent National Farm and Home Hour broadcast presented a song telling the story of a "drummer" who had run away with another man's wife. . . . Two years ago, Bruce Kammen, NBC production man, was playing the part of Uncle Adam in the broadcast over WENR of "Uncle Adam and Little Eve" and he is still receiving fan mail, according to the mail department of that station, which informed Mr. Kammen to call for his mail. . . . Darcey Luz, son of Ernst Luz, musical director for Loew's in New York City, is here in the interest of his new song called "Clowning the Blues Away." Darcy has covered all the spots in town with orchestrations, and we hope the orders will be coming in soon. . . . Ben Bernie continues to pack them in at the College Inn. . . . Mark Fisher and wife have returned from Havana. . . . Carl Hoeffle is without a doubt one of the hardest working individuals in the music business. Carl arranges all the harmony arrangements for the Feist music company, besides playing piano for those three remarkable singers, Tom, Dick and Harry.

A crutch is figuring as one of the important "props" for the time being in the Friendly Five Footnotes programs presented each Thursday evening from the NBC Chicago studios. Despite a broken footbone Fred Waldner, tenor soloist in the programs, continues to hobble before the microphone with aid of a crutch during each broadcast. The injury was the result of an intense basketball game. Fred has decided to take up ping-pong in the future. . . . Irwin Barge, professional manager of Milton Weil's, informs me that his firm has a song entitled "That Little Boy of Mine" which is destined to be one of the big hits of the year. Here's hoping that "little boy" grows into a big seller. . . . Jean Paul King, popular NBC announcer has turned writer. . . . The charming Chicagoettes are now connected with the National Broadcasting company, and I feel quite sure that they will be an asset to any program.

ORGAN SOLOS

BETTY HAMMOND (New Orleans Publix Strand) develops a clever variation of the hackneyed use of the radio amplifier to carry a song in connection with organ solos. Miss Hammond, using the new Westinghouse Columaire, hooked up with a microphone, placed near the organ, sings "What Good Am I Without You?" using verse, chorus over the Columaire amplifier, an organ interlude, then a closing chorus. Her voice is pleasingly deep, taking well to mechanical reproduction and winning her a big hand from the audience. The novel feature lies in the appearance of the Columaire, which resemble a modernistic conception of a grandfather's clock, and which has its amplifier in the top, instead of in front, like the majority of radio sets. It makes an unusual setting, properly lighted, but the fact that the tone, issuing from the top, has a tendency to spread, makes it difficult to concentrate attention on the machine. Miss Hammond overcame this handicap by centering the radio in the organ pit, placing a spotlight on it throughout the solo and keeping the microphone slightly to the side of the organ, where it could be seen. The audience seemed well pleased with the novelty, though trailer copy explaining the novelty of the new radio, might have helped make a strong act a bit stronger.

CHARLES WILLIAMS (New York City Loew's State) offered an organ solo this week, that lacked any semblance of entertainment. This solo is called, "An April Shower of Hits" but was nothing more than an advertising campaign for the forthcoming attractions at this house. Williams has put on a lot of good, entertaining solos heretofore but this one, but for a few songs which the audience sang, did not seem to please the patrons. Solo opened to Williams playing "April Showers." Behind and around the slides, beautiful rain effects played. After playing this in a nice style, the direct ballyhoo on coming attractions, played to the tune of "April Showers," started. After the audience were started nicely in singing, this ballyhoo stopped them like a wet blanket. Williams played the following popular tunes: "Got the Park," "Singing in the Rain," "Ain't Gonna Rain No More" and closed with the theme song, "April Showers." The audience sang all these songs, but reneged on the special lyrics to the tunes, "Simply Delish" and "King's Horses" which was more ballyhoo. Williams' solos are usually clever and entertaining novelties and this one no doubt was not one of his own originals.

JOHNNY MITCHELL (Pittsburgh Enright) calls his organlogue "The Social Club," and the reading content of the slides is to the effect that the audience is one big social club and the only way in which to keep one's good standing is by singing lustily. The audience took the hint and sang with might and main. Johnny played "Give Me Something to Remember You By," "Blue Again," "Just a Gigolo," "I'm Alone Because I Love You" (which Ernie Mathias, one of the orchestra boys, sang through a "mike"), "Walking My Baby Back Home" and "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver."

HY C. GEIS (Jersey City Stanley). "Styles and Smiles" is the title of Geis' novelty this week and opens to special lyrics about styles, to the tune, "Sidewalks of New York." It was strictly a community song-fest with the audience singing the following songs: "All on Account of Your Kisses," a special to "East Side, West Side," "Wabash Moon," "By My Side," "Smile Darn Ya Smile" and a special about coming attractions. The solo was delivered well and sung well by this audience. The necessary punch at the finish was lacking because of the advertising appeal in the last song. It may be good business to use a number of this kind in the organist's program but if it is found necessary, in this reviewer's opinion, it would be much beter to put it in the first part of the program.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio Texas) recently offered an organ solo that he termed Sing-Time which was right in tune with our unusual Spring time and the way that he put the song slides over you would think that the entire audience had a touch of the Sing fever when the organist had them all singing, which is really one good cure for many ills. Abel raised cain at the console with the following late song numbers and scored a big hit on each and every one of them: "Sweet Jennie Lee"; a neat parody on "Dancing With Tears in My Eyes"; "For You Brought a New Kind of Love to Me"; another novel arrangement on the ever popular "My Baby," and on this concluding song, Earl received a great big hand from the patrons. He also rendered "Yours and Mine," and "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver." Then the audience gave him a good mitt for his work. He sure knows how to make them sing and they in turn like to sing with our clever organist.

Hello Everybody

In keeping with the policy of giving the country one hit after another, M. Witmark & Sons announces acquisition of a brand new one already published and finding great favor among those fortunate enough to have been allowed glimpses of the composition. Mr. and Mrs. E. H. (Buddy) Morris wrote the words and music of this latest number, which has been titled "Nan." This is the first published work of Mr. and Mrs. Morris and gives every indication of being a sensation. Mr. Morris, the son of Sam E. Morris, vice president of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is vice president and general manager of M. Witmark & Sons. Mrs. Morris was the former Carlyn Nathan of Parkersburg, West Virginia. . . . In other words Mr. and Mrs. Morris are the very proud parents of a baby girl named Nan and weighing seven pounds. The daughter was born March 14. . . .

Uncle Abe Holzmann announces that his arranging department will be at home in newly arranged arranging offices at the Remick Music Corp. The blessed event took place in the very near past and Uncle and arranging staff are doing very well. . . . That reminds me, Cliff Hess, special service man at Remick's, opines that the country is once more becoming organ-conscious. Cliff should know. He bases his statement on the increasing number of organists going back to the manuals in small towns and cities throughout the country. He says further that the surest indication is the increasing number of requests for chorus sets and specialties on Remick numbers.

Another indication that organists are working lies in the many demands from featured organists throughout the country—for something different in organ solos. National Studios has six releases of super "orgologues" which organists can rent. These sets combine entertainment and singing and many slides have appropriate illustrations or gags which are sure-fire. . . . Since the leading organists in the country are writing this material, it looks like a good bet . . . Julia Dawn, featured organist in many Publix theatres, and lately of the Paramount Prince Edward theatre, Melbourne, Australia, is on her way back to America . . . She lands in San Francisco May 28. . . . C. Sharp Minor, who for the past few months has been organist at the Tampa theatre, Tampa, Florida, is slated to offer a new type of organ presentation at the Warner Strand, Brooklyn, this week. . . . Well, I haven't any more room for more so

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Riesenfeld Appreciative

I THANK YOU VERY MUCH FOR THE interest you have shown in my musical setting for "Tabu." It feels good to find someone who understands and appreciates the effort put into this work.

Thank you very much for the space which you have given to the article in your magazine, and at the same time let me say that this is the first time in my career that I have seen a real technical article written on motion picture music and written critically and properly.

Will you please express my thanks to Mr. O'Sullivan?—HUGO RIESENFELD, 113 West 57th street, New York City.

Thank You, Mr. Levy

FIRST LET ME ADD MY BIT OF praise and congratulations on the new HERALD. I find it the most complete and best trade journal that I have read in my 22 years in the motion picture game. Your release chart hits the spot for the small-town exhibitor and your reviews are very good as far as they go. I do not think they go far enough for the small-town men. Your reviewers give the big city point of view only. I find the reviews in The New York Times much better. Nothing is more valuable to showmen than good reviews and I believe that you should devote more space to them. I thought the old Motion Picture News method of printing a few small pictures above each review very good, as it gave an idea of what kind of picture each one was. I also find criticisms of pictures in your exhibitors' letters very valuable—especially those from Mr. Phillip Rand. He must be smart. FOR HE USUALLY AGREES WITH ME.

I noted in last week's issue that there was an item in which it stated that 287 small-town shows were closed in Texas and that the producers were losing over $100,000 in revenue thereby. Mr. Douglas stated that it was caused by the cost of installing sound in their theatres. Speaking as a showman in a town of about 1,500, I say that Mr. Douglas is far wrong. I say it is because of the poor pictures put out by the producers and their block methods of selling and that they deserve to lose the above revenue. I suppose the producers will say that they make the best pictures that they can. But do they? NO. Compare the first two months' product of any company to that of the two months' product released near the end of the season, and see how they compare. The producers put forth real efforts, put in good stars and supporting casts, and spend real money making their first month's, or selling-pictures, then, when almost every one has bought, they put in cheap stars, weak supporting casts and make a bunch of cheap pictures to fill out the year. And then they wonder why so many shows are in the "red." We now have an epidemic of mighty fine supporting players made into mighty poor "stars" and proving mighty poor drawing cards.

And the evils of block booking! If the "smart" producers could just see where they are really killing the goose that laid the golden eggs by this, they would quit it at once. I claim that I could keep any small-town theatre in the country open, no matter how small and how poor conditions were, if I could pick out 10 good pictures from each producer and run them this summer. But no, I must run only the pictures from three companies of which I was forced to buy them all. I find that it will pay me to book some of their pictures in on certain dates and keep closed these dates, while many small towns find it will pay them to keep closed altogether rather than run the trash they are producing now. I have bought Metro, Fox, Paramount and Universal. I know that I could take pictures like "Check and Double Check," "Cimarron," "Dixiana," "The Dawn Patrol," "Sit Tight," "City Lights," "Kiki," "Dirigible," etc., and make money for myself and for the producers on any nights, but instead I am forced to book such tripe as "Are You There?", "Blue Angel," "Three French Girls," "Mr. Lemon of Orange," "Sea Legs," "Rango," etc., and lose money for myself and for the producers by keeping closed.

Certain kinds of pictures will not make money in certain sections of the country, and no one knows it better than the local exhibitor, so why not use some sense and let him pick out what he can profit with? Do not place the motion picture salesman in the same class with a clothing salesman, who would force an Alaskan merchant to buy so many pairs of palm beach pants with his fur coat order.—L. L. Drastic "Blue Law" Bill Introduced in Florida

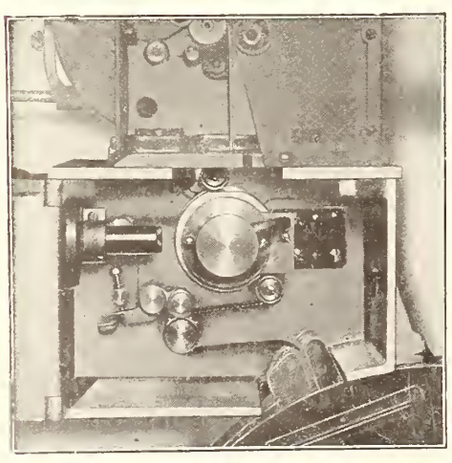
Tampa — First bill affecting Florida theatres was introduced in the House by Representative Beasley, Hernando county. Under his measure every form of amusement and sport would be prohibited on the Sabbath. It provides for the closing of "wordly employment of business, ordinary or servile," and also prohibits shooting, fishing, sporting, hunting, racing, plays, dancing, athletic games or sports on Sunday. Churches and charities are the only exceptions.

Penalty for violation is a maximum fine of $300 and a minimum sentence of one year in jail.

Sunday Agitation in Tulsa

Tulsa, Okla.—The "blue Sunday move" has reached Tulsa. The Tulsa Ministerial alliance has started agitation for "blue Sundays." More than a dozen ministers appealed for this move to their congregations in sermons last Sunday, directing their attention to theatres and film business.

Theatre managers expressed the belief that everything would "blow over" since the agitation was rife in the same manner two years ago.



Ohio Stench Bomb Bill Dies

Columbus, Ohio—Governor George White refused to sign the stench bomb bill, which had pased both houses of legislature almost unanimously, because, in his opinion, it lacked definiteness. Deprecating the stench bomb evil as practiced in theatres, Governor White said: "I trust that the next legislature may enact a bill properly drawn to curb the evil noted."

Billboard Measure Squashed

Oklahoma City—The legislature on the closing day of the 13th session defeated a bill which was aimed at billboards. The bill, a freak, provided that any billboard displaying a woman smoking a cigarette would be illegal. It had passed the house but refused by the senate and tabled by the house on its return.

Ten Per Cent Use—
SYNCROFILM

Does ten per cent sound like a little? Ten per cent of the country's population lives in Greater New York. Ten per cent is a big net return in any business. If you want to know how big ten per cent can be, take a ten per cent cut in profits! No, ten per cent is not piking.

So, when we tell you ten per cent of this country's theatres use Syncrofilm, we're talking important figures. The only reason it isn't more is the short time Syncrofilm has been on the market, for in everything but sales Syncrofilm is 100%. Clear, natural voices, pure musical tones; fair price; big box-office pull; these qualities are fast pushing Syncrofilm past ten per cent. Try Syncrofilm and put your house among the eleven per cent!

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. Richardson

The question was: Describe, so far as you are able, the difference between a horn and a loud speaker. What part of the sound projector, now commonly dubbed the "horn," is really the horn? Describe a sound projector receiver. Understand, please, that what is meant by a "sound projector" is what is commonly termed a horn. Of what is a horn receiver diaphragm made? Why is the diaphragm made in a cupped form? Just what does the receiver do?

The correct answers were relatively few, though the total number of answers was rather large. Here is the list of acceptable ones: Harman Billings, Lester Borst, Earl Boyer, S. Evans and C. Rau, Thomas Enderly, G. E. Doe, F. C. Richards, George Thompson, Herbert Gainsley, T. L. D. Peters, Frank Gibson, C. H. Ginston, L. D. Herbert, Tom Turk, George Anderson, Edgar D. Wilson, John Doe, S. Kliene, Alex B. Smith, R. D. Albert, Andrew Dillon, T. Van Vaulkenburg and Tom Simpson.

Of these I have, after hasty examination —see note at end—concluded the answer of Evans and Rau to be best, though I later intend publishing the answer of Earl Boyer in BETTER THEATERS, as it is most interesting and sets up some arguments which I am unable to pass upon as to their correctness. His answer is in any event most interesting. It is one which may provoke considerable discussion, though I hardly think its publication here would be best. Look for it later in the BETTER THEATRES.

Messrs. Evans and Rau say: "(A) The difference between the horn and loud speaker is as follows: A horn is a large wooden or composition shell attached to a receiver, whereas a loud speaker consists of a small metallic receiver coupled to a cone which is of small dimensions as compared with the size of the horn shell. When a horn is attached to a receiver the whole is then properly called a sound projector.

"(B) The part of a sound projector which is really the 'horn' is the large wooden or composition shell, though that and the receiver is commonly dubbed the 'horn.'

"(C) A sound projector receiver consists of a diaphragm, driving coil, field coil, damping plug and the pole pieces of an electro magnet. The diaphragm itself consist of a single sheet of alluminum alloy. To this diaphragm is attached a coil, known as the driving coil. It consists of a single layer of aluminum ribbon, the turns of which are held together by a thin film of insulating lacquer, which latter makes the coil rigid and self-supporting. This coil reacts between the pole pieces between which it is located. The pole pieces are energized by a field coil, which is itself energized by a direct current source. The reactions from the direct current source through to the pole pieces onto the driving coil, which latter is passing the sound current, operates the diaphragm.

"(D) The diaphragm is made of, or consists of, a sheet of very thin aluminum alloy.

"(E) The diaphragm is cupped in order to provide the stiffness or rigidity necessary to enable it to move as a unit against the air column in the horn, acting in fact as a solid plunger. This is so thin that it could not do if it were flat.

"(F) The receiver is the element which receives the electric impulses coming from the amplifier and translates or changes them into air vibrations."

Note: Your editor took a trip up to his summer home at South Lynne, Conn., overlooking the fact that this answer had not been prepared for publication. Remembering it, he split a hole in the air, looked the answers over hastily and prepared the above. If anything is wrong, please blame it on lack of time to go over it as carefully as I should. Think it is O. K., though.

A New System of Volume Control

That every progressive experimental department of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, makers of the Motiograph projector, which has been prominently with us for, lo, these many years, now comes out with something once more that appears to be a mighty important improvement in sound picture reproduction and projection. It is a device used on the new Motiograph sound projector and provides for volume control at the photoelectric cell.

A light valve controls the amount of light falling on the cell, thereby controlling the amount of electrons thrown off by the cell. The idea is to obtain more positive control and eliminate the fader from the audio circuit.

"Tests have shown," states V. A. Schoenberg, Motiograph engineer, "that the number of stages heretofore used can be greatly reduced, also that frequencies never before heard were reproduced in naturalness. The light valve proper consists of a mechanical means for increasing or decreasing the amount of light permitted to fall upon the cell. It is located within the sound aperture block and is controlled at the machine proper. The control dial is over a range of 180 degrees graduated in a series of 15 steps. Its action permits an exceptionally even, smooth change which is gradual, and not in steps of several decibels, which feature makes sound regulation ideal.

"Sound regulation by means of electronic emission control is the most logical position whereby sound reproduction should be regulated, as it eliminates from the audio circuit such devices as pads, faders and the like, and also permits the reduction in the number of stages required. The sound reproduction then is equal to that of amplifiers, speakers, and slit adjustment, whatever is recorded on the film, whether it be variable area or variable density.

"Its use permits all stages of amplification to operate at an equal proportional amount, thereby overcoming the possibility of some stages, such as are in the head or pre-amplifier, being crowded and then having its output reduced to a suitable level so as not to over-modulate the first stages of the power amplifier. Usually the output of some head amplifiers is far in excess as to the required amount for the input of the power amplifier. In such cases pads and the fader are used, acting as a dam and used also to regulate the input to the power amplifier for sound regulation, regulating the amount of input to the head amplifier instead of regulating the output of head amplifier. It can readily be seen that the proper and only practical way of presenting sound as recorded is to regulate and control it at the cell proper."

The sound changeover is accomplished by means of a four- and a three-way switch wired in the 500-ohm output circuits of the head amplifiers. These switches are placed in convenient location in the booth. The light valve is not adjusted once a level has been ascertained except for such increase or decrease of volume as required during screening.

"Talking Wire" Records Sound, Then Erases It, for a Few Cents

Magnegraph, Developed by Delmar Whitson, Held Particularly Valuable For Writers and Rehearsals

Hollywood (QP)—A new system, the 'talking wire" for use during the writing and rehearsing of sound pictures, has been developed, largely by Delmar Whitson, one of the pioneers in sound recording. It is not really a new invention, rather the perfection of a device at least thirty years old but practically only an experiment and plaything heretofore.

The chief recommendation for the Magnegraph, as it is called, is the fact that there is practically no cost except the comparatively negligible initial outlay for the equipment.

The instrument itself—or that part of it which is visible—consists of two spools or reels, about eight inches apart. Each will hold 20,000 feet of wire. Between them is the "sound head," a sort of bobbin or guide for the wire as it passes from one reel to the other.

The sound is recorded on the wire magnetically. The instant that the record stops, the throwing of a switch plays back at once what has been recorded. The engineers say it can be run thousands of times with no loss of quality or volume, or, if the record is not needed again, the wire is demagnetized and used over and over again.

Another feature is that it is possible to "erase" the sound from any part of the wire and make a substitution merely by throwing two switches and demagnetizing the wire to any desired place.

Those viewing the demonstration see an important mission for the Magnegraph, for writers and for rehearsals. The wire records not only the writer's words but his enthusiasm too. When the boss wants to hear the story the compact Magnegraph is wheeled to his office. And the only extra expense for making several records of the dialogue in rehearsing a picture is the few cents for electrical current.

It is also possible to record sound and then superimpose other sound. The script clerk, in a low voice or whisper, can record her own comment while with the Magnegraph she turns the microphone of a small portable set toward the action and records that.

Advantageous use is seen for the device in court stenography, in elimination of errors in telegraph and telephone communications, and in substitution for the expensive transcriptions of radio programs to 16-inch records.

French Film Trade Looking for Boom From New Capital

Paris—Boom days for the French film industry are forecast in developments which point to 1931 as the beginning of an era of unusual domestic activity in both production and exhibition. The consolidations that have been effected place the French industry on a much firmer basis financially, while the introduction of American interests in 1930 is proving an impetus generally.

It now seems likely that the French industry will ask the government for further quota changes, these to be directed toward German product. It has been apparent for some time that the one-for-one kontingent would be bitterly opposed.

Universal Starts Work After Short Lull at Coast Plant

Hollywood—Universal on Thursday resumed production with two features and two shorts. The studio had been dark several weeks.

Features are "The Whole Town's Talking," being directed by Vin Moore, with Robert Armstrong, Jean Arthur, Lola Lane, George Brent; and "East of Borneo," formerly "Ourang," to be made by George Melford, with Rose Hobart and Charles Pickford.

Murray-Sidney are teamed in one short and Lloyd Hamilton features the second. Four more shorts and four features start within ten days.

Wrestlers Used to Bolster B. O.

Seattle—Wrestling exhibitions, which have been staged here each week during the last six months, with telling effect on theatre box offices, were enlisted to build the gross at the Fox Paramount theatre here this week. Through arrangements made by Manager Clemmer of the theatre with Floyd "Musty" Musgrave, promoter, a regular six-round wrestling match was staged as part of the Saturday "Midnite Revels" performance. The match was in addition to the feature film, stage revue, musical novelties and other features.

Fred Weinberg, who has been handling the Ritz, Albany, goes to the Winter Garden, Jamestown, and Byron Farley, who has been managing the Troy, comes to the Ritz in Albany.

New Television System Similar To Sound Films

What promises to be an important television factor is a radically different system recently disclosed by Clyde Fitch, a New York radio and television engineer associated with Allied Engineering Institute.

The new system transmits many image points at once—in the form of a number of musical tones of different frequencies. By means of a special scanning arrangement at the transmitter, including a transparent disc on which are photographically recorded a number of sound tracks of different frequencies (similar to the sound track on the side of a talking film) the light from the moving image is broken up into a number of separate light beams, each interrupted at a different musical frequency. The difference in frequency between neighboring beams is about 50 cycles.

These beams are then focused onto a single photoelectric cell. This converts them into electric currents to be transmitted over a telephone line or by radio, in the same manner that an ordinary studio microphone picks up a number of different sound frequencies and transmits them over a single wire.

At the receiving end, these currents of different frequencies are heterodyned to values in resonance with a number of quartz-crystal light resonators, one for each frequency. Each resonator consists of a quartz plate in a bulb containing a rarified atmosphere of helium and neon gas. When alternating current in resonance with the natural period of vibration of the quartz crystal is applied to it, the gas within the bulb becomes luminous. Thus, the quartz light resonators serve the double purpose of separating the frequencies and automatically converting them into light. By means of rotating mirrors running in synchronism with the scanning discs at the transmitter, the light from these resonators is projected on to a large screen, on which the moving image is reproduced.

By using 100 light resonators, a 100 line image can be broadcast over a five kilocycle wave band, at the rate of 20 pictures a second. This system is said to offer possibilities for theatrical use.

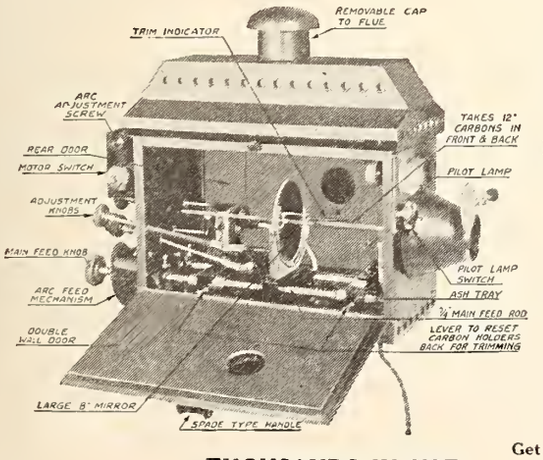
New W. E. Test Film Has Two Sound Tracks



A new form of test film made by noiseless recording, to test the fitness of a sound reproducing system to handle sound pictures made by the new Western Electric process, has no picture but does have two sound tracks, one including voice and music selections, the other including several constant frequency sections, ranging from 55 to 8,000 cycles, and a length of unmodulated, or blank track for ground noise measurements.

The double purpose is that the film may be used to check the general quality of reproduction by usage of the track having mixed voice and music recordings, and the film permits determination of the frequency characteristics of a system by use of the other track in conjunction with a volume indicator.

New Sound Film Concerns

Indianapolis—Two new companies for the making of projection equipment for sound pictures in the home are Cinetrope Corporation, Burton F. Swain, president, and National Sound Films, Inc., headed by Julius Frankenberg of Chicago. One board will serve both companies. Announced plans for this year's output call for 5,000 to 10,000 at a cost of two millions, the first to be ready in three months.

Brandt Talks on "Mickey Mouse" Deal Made Last Week with U.A.

When Joe Brandt, president of Columbia, returned from the coast this week and learned of printed reports that Disney's "Mickey Mouse" and "Silly Symphonies" would be released through United Artists next year, he issued the following denial:

Columbia Pictures have the "Mickey Mouse" and "Silly Symphonies" cartoons internationally. Despite rumors to the contrary the distribution of the Disney features is still vested in Columbia under the terms of a contract which is drawn for an extended period Columbia has a new series of both brands of the Disney shorts scheduled for the new season.

The Disney deal with United Artists does not become effective until 1932, at which time new product of Disney will go through United Artists, according to reports.

Patronage Built for Long Time, Says Darmour

An Increase of Attendance Is Noted For Each Succeeding Picture of Entire Group

Proper exploitation of a series of short features can be utilized to even greater advantage than the exploiting of a long picture, because the work for each successive short moulds an increasingly stronger foundation for the remainder of the group.

That's the conviction of Larry Darmour, producer of the Mickey Mouse and other Radio comedies in the short product field.

"In the case of the long feature the ballyhoo is for the one time only," Darmour explained, "whereas with the short of a series you are building your patronage over a long period of time."

Darmour called attention to letters he has had from exhibitors, bearing out the truth of that statement.

"The results in each case have been highly satisfactory when solid exploitation has been used on our Mickey Mouse comedies," the producer declared. "Particularly has it helped the exhibitor in building the kid matinee business. Wherever, for example, a Mickey McGuire Club has been organized, the exhibitor assures us that the attendance of children has increased each time one of the Mickey series was shown."

Darmour emphasized the value of launching the exploitation at the proper moment, citing the fact that one short may lend itself more effectively to special exploitation than another.

He called attention to the case of "Mickey's Crusaders," a comedy treating the circus subject.

"There is color and lots of color in circus exploitation—clowns, parades, stuffed animals in cages, and plenty of noise," Darmour said, noting the dearth of circus pictures for the present circus season. "Here is an opportunity to give full exploitation to a short subject with almost assured success."

Carey Signed by Levine for Serial

Nat Levine, of Mascot, has engaged Harry Carey for the lead in "Vanishing Legion," a twelve-part, all-talking serial. The story is by Wyndham Gittens and Ford Beebe. It will be released in early summer and will be Carey's first serial. Rex, the horse, and Frankie Darrow will support the popular child player, has also been engaged for an important role. The balance of the cast will be announced shortly. B. Reaves Eason will direct, Levine, supervising.

Following "Vanishing Legion," Levine will make three other serials for release this year.

An interesting test of whether or not there has been any change in the viewpoint of the censor board since the election will be provided by the board's treatment of United Artists' "Front Page." It is a newspaper story with Chicago for its locale and a mayoral election for its background. The principal political characters—only thinly disguised—belong to a recently departed city hall regime. If it plays without a resort to the courts you may be sure there has been a change in censorial attitude here.

All Houses Agree to Drop Trick Programs

So Battle of Double Features Plus Twin Stage Bills Against Triple-Shows-in-One Nears End

Chicago (QP)—Back to normal by May 1, or shortly thereafter, is the hope in Chicago following an agreement of both independent and affiliated theatres to abandon the multi-featuring policy. Triple features, double features, four-hour programs combining two features and two separate stage units—all are headed for the exit under the accord.

Outstanding in the struggle of multi-featuring and overburdened programs here are the recent offerings of the New Drake and the Adelphi.

The Drake, which has offered triple features for some time, ran a Sunday night performance which was comprised of two feature pictures and two separate stage units. The program ran approximately four hours and, naturally, could not be repeated.

The Adelphi, which has been a double featuring house, switched to triple features to combat the new competition offered by double pre-release attractions at the Granada. The Adelphi's gross, which had been slipping since the Granada inaugurated double featuring, is reported to have staged a comeback under the triple feature policy.

Publix May Revamp Units For "A" Houses West of Chi

Proposals for a change in Publix unit shows entailing revamping of units for "A" houses west of Chicago are being considered.

Under the proposed plan units upon arrival in Chicago will be completely revamped. This will result in considerable savings and in shows better suited to the entertainment requirements of the remaining unit towns. The revamped units will play Denver, Des Moines, Omaha, Dallas, Houston and New Orleans.

100 Exhibitors in Buying Combine by Start of Season

Chicago (QP)—Henri Ellman reports that there are now 60 members enrolled in the recently extended independents' buying combine, with 100 expected by the time the new buying season opens.

Special Pass Required to Get on the Lot

Only Question Raised Is How Much Will Be Spent in Extra Help and Lost Time

B. P. Schulberg has just saved the Paramount studios a million dollars a year. At least, he says that is what it has cost the company every year to permit news gatherers, ad solicitors, agents, salesmen and other visitors to roam about the lot.

Next Monday a new set of rules goes into effect. It is the most drastic of any announced by the various studios within the past two weeks. If it is lived up to, visitors on the Paramount lot will be few and far between.

Special Pass Required

Primarily, no outsider will be permitted on the lot without a special pass. The visitors' passes will be in two classes—courtesy pass and interviewer's pass. And if the visitor is on the lot around noon, the pass must bear a special stamp before he or she can enter the studio lunchroom.

There will be passes for talent, passes for writers and directors, passes for news men, for ad men, for musicians, for agents, for commercial salesmen. No provision is made for bootleggers, but perhaps they won't need a pass.

If a player goes to the lot to talk about a part in a picture, no agent may accompany him. News gatherers must check in at the publicity department and, if they go on the lot, must have a studio publicity man or an official guide to see that they don't get into mischief.

Watchman on the Job

A watchman is to be stationed at the door leading from the administration building to the lot to keep people off, and another will be at the lunchroom to see that no one without a pass gets anything to eat.

Even the rules for employees are stiffened. Only two entrances will be open. Employees may not use any other. Everyone on the payroll will be checked in and out and a time sheet kept.

It is all most efficient. The only hitch mentioned is the likelihood that a part of the million that will be saved will be spent in extra help and lost in extra time needed to see that the rules are obeyed.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

APRIL bursting into bloom, and May, with full flower, just around the corner are your liveliest competitors, Mr. Exhibitor! This heavenly weather tempts even mediocre souls onto the highways and byways, and makes the thought of a closed motion picture house repellant. But there is a check-mate play! Bring spring into your theatres. There are ways to do this with special programs of Arbor Day and Bird Day, and May Day itself! Even nature lovers will be tempted to drop in to see what you have on your screen if you have advertised pictures of special significance to this radiant season of the year.

© Davis & Sanford
RITA C. McGOLDRICK

Fortunately, there is a wealth of material for you to select from for your appropriate May programs. You might emphasize the first day of May as the gala day of spring. Its celebration goes back in the earliest history to the old Roman flower festivals, which probably in turn came from India and Egypt. Here is a day set apart by Nature for the full flowering of the earth. It is naturally a day for rejoicing.

The official date for Arbor Day is May 5. The day is observed in almost every state, the actual date depending on the climate. All over the United States Arbor Day has become associated with patriotic and esthetic as well as economic ideas for the improvement of the community and as an incentive toward civic betterment, through the planting of trees, improving of school grounds, streets, parks and highways.

If you have an active Children's matinee Club, or Junior Matinee organization, you might plan an Arbor Day ceremony, at which the children should plant and name a tree for the school ground or the community park. Invite nurserymen or prominent florists to tell the story of Arbor Day. Ask a public official to talk on forest conservation. An interesting ceremony is the planting of a living Christmas tree in a box for your theatre foyer.

Children are invariably interested in birds and their diminutive houses. A contest for the best birdhouse built by a member of your Junior Matinee group would make an interesting foyer display. You might add to this an exhibit of pictures of birds' nests and eggs. Children might be asked to submit lists of birds native to their state, and the award of a singing canary or an illustrated book on bird lore would make an excellent prize.

Among the short features that would lend themselves to an appropriate program for the occasion are:

"Springtime" (Silly Symphony), Columbia, 1 reel.
"Ain't Nature Grand" (Looney Tune) Warner, 1 reel.
"Bird Islands of Peru," Talking Picture Epics, 2 reels.
"Birds of a Feather" (Silly Symphony) Columbia, 1 reel.
"Little Dutch Tulip Girl," Pathe, 1 reel.
"Flower Garden" (Revue), M-G-M, 2 reels.
"House Cleaning Time" (Fable) Pathe, 1 reel.
"Strange Birds," Educational, 1 reel.
"Tree Saps" (cartoon) Paramount, 1 reel.
"Wood Choppers" (fable) Pathe, 1 reel.

Mother's Day

Last week we suggested to you a few pictures suitable to the dignified observance of Mother's Day. Here are a few additional ones that should offer you a wide choice in your selection of pictures for this important occasion. Sunday, May 10, the second Sunday in May, is the day which President Wilson by special proclamation set aside for "a public expression of our love and reverence for the mothers of our country." It is proper to display your flags on this date.

The children of your matinee group should be extended the privilege of bringing their mothers as their guests to the week's matinee. Mothers might be presented with pink carnations.

Community singing of such songs as "Mother Machree," "Mother of Mine," etc., would be appropriate program additions.

It would be a gracious and kindly thing to invite the elderly women from the Public Homes.

There are several good feature pictures suitable for the occasion, among them being,

"Courage" (a mother love story) Warner, 6,300 ft.
"Mother Macree" (mother love theme), Fox, 7,195 ft.
"Four Sons," Fox, 11 reels.
"Jazz Singer," Warner, 7 reels.
"Mother's Boy" (Morton Downey) Pathe, talking.
Pathe's shorts, "Songs of Mother."

Byrd's Birthday

Saturday, May 9, is the birthday of Richard E. Byrd who accomplished the first flight over the North Pole in 1926 and subsequently made a successful flight to the South Pole. This is a day of importance to boys and should be featured in a special manner, with local aviators as your guests. An interesting flyer display would be a collection of miniature airplane models and a tiny model airplane would make a fine attendance prize.

The outstanding feature for the day would be, of course, Paramount's epic picture, "With Byrd at the South Pole," a picture which no school boy or girl should have missed. There is large profit in this picture for years to come where the theatre man brings it to his community with the proper patriotic appeal for children.

Other pictures suitable for the day are:

"At the Bottom of the World" (South Pole), Talking Picture Epics, 3,600 ft.
"The Break Up" (Alaskan Travelogue), Talking Picture Epics, 3,300 ft.
"Great White North" (Snow's Arctic Expedition), Fox, synchronized 6,700 ft.; silent, 5,455 ft.
"Flight" (Jack Holt), Columbia 10-reel.
"Now We're in the Air" (Beery-Hatton). Paramount, 6 reels.

Shorts:

"Come Take a Trip in My Air Ship" (Song cartoon).
"Alaskan Nights" (cartoon) Columbia, 1 reel.
"Arctic Antics" (Silly Symphony) Columbia, 1 reel.
"Explorer" (cartoon), North Pole, Educational, 1 reel.
"Frozen Frolics" (Musical Frolic at North Pole), Pathe, 1 reel.
"In Alaska" (Lucky Rabbit in Frozen North) Universal, 1 reel.

Saturday, May 16. Inauguration of First Regular Air Mail Service.

Guests of Honor: Air Mail Pilots; Postmaster; local mail carriers.
Foyer display of model planes and pictures of airplanes in mail service.

"Air Legion" (Air mail service) RKO, 7 reels.
"Cloud Dodger" (airplane-western) Universal, 5 reels.
"California Mail" (Ken Maynard) First National, 6 reels.
"Sky Skippers" (cartoon), Pathe.

Display world flags and invite officers of the local Red Cross as guests of honor. gain permission from local Red Cross to give paper armbands to children attending, to honor Red Cross Day.
Encourage children to join Junior Red Cross.

Saturday, May 23. Anniversary of Lindbergh's first non-stop flight from New York to Paris (May 21, 1927).

Invite a local flier or a representative of the nearest aviation school to describe the details of this spectacular and history making flight.
If possible, display model of type of plane used in the greatest non-stop flight.

Features:

"Dawn Patrol" (war drama) First National, 9,450 feet.
"Sky Hawk" (war drama) Fox, 6,925 feet.
"Young Eagles" (world war) Paramount, 6,525 feet.
"Aviator" (E. E. Horton) Warner, 6,740 feet.

"Mickey's Musketeers" (comedy; adventuring in airplanes), RKO, 2 reels.
"The Take Off" (Sporting Youth comedy), Universal, 2 reels.
"Lindbergh Flies New Air Route," Pathe News No. 91.

Saturday, May 30. Memorial Day, a holiday originally set apart for decorating the graves of the soldiers of the Civil War and for holding exercises in their memory. It originally was called Decoration Day, but now, the more proper term, Memorial Day, is generally used.

Guests of honor should be the war veterans and children of veterans.
Display flags and have patriotic music.
Present children with tiny flags.
Invite the cooperation of such local organizations as: The American Legion; Daughters of the American Revolution; the Red Cross; Boy and Girl Scouts and when possible, the Army Post.

Features:

"Abraham Lincoln," United Artists, 8,280 feet.

Shorts:

"Memorial Day" (Fitzpatrick Holiday subject), all star, 1 reel.
"Two Americans," (Paramount, 2 reels.
"Marching On" (Chick Sales; Lincoln Memorial Service), Fox.

Acknowledgment

The above pictures have been selected from a compilation made by Miss Ryllis Hemington, director of public relations, Fox West Coast Theatres; from the reviewing committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; from the National Board of Review Magazine and from lists made up by the four leading national organizations engaged in previewing pictures. This department has checked all pictures with the studios and has printed only those that are available.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
A Consolidation of Exhibitors Herald World and Motion Picture News
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Civic Contacts and Good Will!

TOO Much publicity has been given to a recent discussion about managers offering performers to local functions such as Rotary Club luncheons and similar affairs. It is our candid opinion that those responsible for this discussion have never managed theatres in spots outside of New York, if they ever operated them at all. If they understood the true value of cementing goodwill through such organizations as the Lions, Rotary, Kiwanis or Chambers of Commerce, they would soon awaken to the fact that organizations of this type can be capitalized to the satisfaction of everybody concerned. Especially the theatre.

Supposing that all the artist gets is "a bowl of soup"? What does the theatre gain? Plenty. You have brought your theatre before a representative group of merchants and business men. Leaders of their respective fields in your community. People you must depend upon for many cooperative tie-ups. People who help swing those special campaigns which revive, so often, lack of interest among theatre-goers.

We are not advocating the donation of performers as a regular diet. But we are certainly stressing the value of so doing on certain occasions.

The introduction of entertainers at such functions stimulates much interest in the affair by reason of it being something of a departure from the routine parade of long-winded speakers. Whenever an advance notice announces the appearance of entertainers from the local theatre it generally brings out a record attendance.

And in a few well-chosen words, the manager of the theatre gets a fine opportunity of slipping in something about the theatre and how it is constantly striving to take a leading part in community welfare by offering the finest in entertainment, etc., etc.

It has long since been definitely established that running theatres from an office hundreds, or thousands of miles away is all wet and if there is any one phase of community activity where the manager is the best judge of what he should, or should not do, it is on this particular question. He is the one these various organizations look to when they want to make their meetings interesting and entertaining, and he is, or should be, the last word on such matters.

The nature of the function is, of course, one of the important factors when a manager is asked for assistance. Anything that will become competition to the theatre he should naturally try to discourage. But no one ever accused a luncheon of being theatre competition.

If those who are handing out so much advice will listen to a word of reason from one who has gone through the mill, then we would say that instead of putting the manager "on the spot" for such cooperation with his local organizations, they should encourage him to do so.

And if they doubt the wisdom of these words let them take a crack at running one of those theatres on Main Street where the manager is the guiding spirit of most community functions. Let them open each morning's mail and read the "high-powered" advice being handed out by someone in the home office concerning affairs many miles away.

As far as we are concerned we have always stressed the value of making the theatre and the theatre manager the most important angles of any city. And from small town experience we well know the value of being, not only active in the various local organizations, but ready to lend a hand in every possible way when so requested.

The leading lights of the national circuits have decreed that the house manager is the man to pass on every local situation. Many of them have emphasized the civic contact slants in particular. It is unfortunate that others should make an issue out of angle which means so much.

"Chick"

More "Cool" Advice!

Just as a reminder, we would like to call your attention once more to your cooling plant. Have you oiled it thoroughly and gone over every part of it? If not, do it now, for if those motors and fans aren't carrying enough oil and grease you're certainly going to get a surprise when the fan belt squeaks impair the reproduction of your sound, OR YOU BURN OUT A MOTOR BEARING.

We were in a house just a little while ago and the manager wanted to show us what a wonderful cooling plant he had, so he set it in operation. Well, the groans and shrieks that ensued were enough to awaken the soundest sleeper. It was a good thing that the house hadn't opened for business yet.

They were running off a trailer and when the noise got into that sound—Zowie! 'Nuff said! Our friend shut off that cooling plant pretty quick and then decided that it needed oil. We will say this much for him—he called his janitor and instructed him to get busy with the oil and stood supervising it until it was finished.

Don't let this happen to you. A little thoughtfulness will prevent it. If you take so much pride in your house that you feel you want to oil it yourself, then hop to it. Don't wait until it's too late. You are certainly going to be in a nice mess if you turn that thing on "cold" because the squeaks and everything else in the thing will be running a contest with your sound reproduction in an effort to see which is the greatest noisemaker. And, of course, your patrons are going to love it! You know what the proverb says, "Never put off until tomorrow what you can do today."

Look Over This Slant On Baby Popularity That Lighthouse Has

The stories on the front page! And it's nothing unusual for Lloyd V. Lighthouse, manager of the Kenmore Theatre, Kenmore, N. Y., to grab off this space on his local newspaper. Being active, Lloyd believes in keeping his house before the public as much as possible.

A perusal of the three stories reveals that Lloyd has promoted these things: "A Roving Dollar" to help sell "Going "Wild"; a benefit at the theatre; and a baby contest.

The "Roving Dollar" is the prosperity stunt that has appeared quite a bit on the Round Table pages. Persons holding the specially marked dollar were given, in many cases, $1.50 worth of merchandise by the local merchants. The idea was to spend the dollar as soon as a person received it. This was done, and, as a result, the picture, "Going Wild," received publicity due to the fact that a book was given with the dollar, for the purpose of having each holder place his or her name in it. The merchants were more than enthusiastic about the stunt; the local newspaper offered a $1.50 subscription for the dollar, while the theatre offered a $1.50 worth of tickets for the buck.

The benefit contest was for the Firemen's Fund of the Kenmore firefighters. This, too, gave the house lots of publicity as well as considerable good-will. The "Most Popular Baby Gag" was a knockout. There were four classes, A, B, C, D. Children up to one year old were in class A; from one to two years, babies were in class B; C held the kids from two to three years of age; and D from three to four years old.

Jewelry donated by a local jeweler was the first award; a colored picture of the winning child, the second; two years' subscription to the local paper the third; while the fourth privilege was tickets to the theatre. A local photographer supplied the photographs, giving one picture to each family. The photos, numbered, were placed on a bulletin board in the theatre lobby. Patrons entering the theatre were given blanks calling for a certain number of votes. The votes, containing the number of the child for whom the patrons voted as well as the patron's name, were then deposited in a box in the lobby. On the final night of the week, the announcement was made.

Now there's a gag that you, too, can work to good advantage and without incurring the animosity of any peeved parents. No one need judge the contest, and so is eliminated one move that used to be hard for the showman-securing locals to act as judges. Give this stunt some heavy considering, and should you wish any more dope on the idea, drop a line to Lighthouse. We are sure he'll furnish you with information. Right, Lloyd?

Perry Secured Front Page Publicity For Attraction At House

Space grabbing, after it has been done long enough, gets to be an art with showmen. At every possible opportunity they make a high dive and leap right on the front pages with their attractions. Fred Perry, of the Binghamton Theatre, Binghamton, New York, crashed the front page of the Binghamton Press recently.

In addition to grabbing space on the front page, Fred also landed a two-column story—an interview—that hit one of the up front pages of the sheet. Perry arranged to have the managing editor of the sheet meet "Poodles" Hanneford, for whom all of the publicity was obtained and who was to present his act for a week at the theatre, and have lunch with him. The results of the luncheon was a notice in the late news flashes to the effect that Hanneford's family would arrive in Binghamton on the following day and present their act that had thrilled thousands of circus patrons, before the theatre-goers of Binghamton.

These two stories certainly did a lot towards the success of the engagement, especially the second story which was read by many persons, so well was it written. We think that Fred deserves a compliment for the fine way in which he engineered his stunt, and we look forward to seeing some more of his work.

Meister Passes Along Stunt Theatre Used To Plug "Sheer Luck"

Not so long ago we showed you a couple of photos depicting the manner in which Otto Meister sells his shows at the White House Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis. Then he sold a Western film; now he puts across another theme.

Meister has on hand a number of dummies which are dressed in costume atmospheric of the picture. "Sheer Luck," Big 4's picture, glorifying the milkman, was the film Meister concentrated his efforts upon. And to excellent results, as can be seen in the photo we are showing.

Three dummies were dressed up, two as milkmen, the other as a policeman. The dummies were placed on display in front of the theatre and created quite a bit of comment. Which is always the case when Meister dopes out a stunt. He is a showman who believes in plugging his product all that he can. Indeed, in the face of stiff competition, he has to more than plug it.

Since he is always active, we are sure that he'll pass some more of his work along, so that we can let the Club see what he's doing at the White House. What do you say, Meister?

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address. —THANK YOU.

Wear's Easter Egg Hunt On Goat Isle Proved Corking Gag

An ace publicity stunt was the last that Tom Wear put across before he left the Fox Cataract Theatre in Niagara Falls, New York. And the stunt—an Easter Egg Hunt—the biggest ever seen in Wear's part of the country!!

When we say that the stunt was big, we mean big with a capital "B". Over 2,200 kiddies took part in Wear's stunt. At the Cataract is to be found a corking Mickey Mouse Club. The youngsters think there's nothing like it in the world, and they are more than anxious to take part in the many events that are planned—or rather, were planned and executed by Wear.

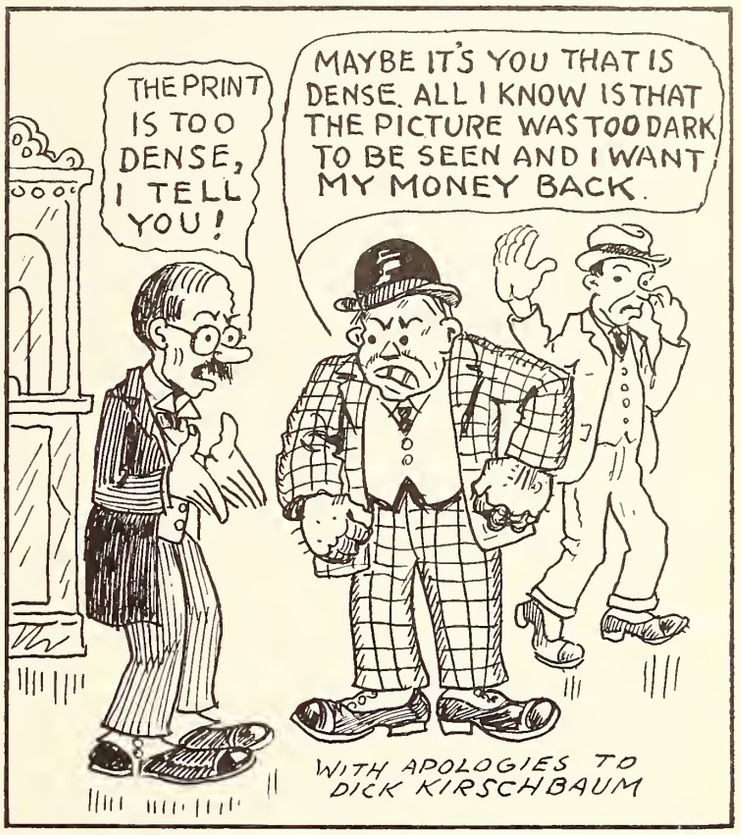
On Easter Week, Tom decided that he was going to stage an Easter Egg hunt, and give it the same prominence as is given the annual Easter Egg Hunt held on the grounds of the White House at the Nation's Capital.

Wear followed through on his intention and besides contacting local dealers, newspapers, and other sources, sent a letter to Governor Roosevelt, requesting that the State Executive approve of the hunt, which was to be held on historic Goat Island. The Governor despatched an immediate reply, sanctioning the affair and commending Wear and the participating factors.

The newspapers plugged the hunt until it was on everyone's tongue. And when the day finally arrived—what a party! Not 2200, but nearly 3,000 kids surged forward at the bark of the starter's pistol, and commenced a diligent search for the eggs that had been hidden, and among the thousands of hen's fruit were contained fifty eggs redeemable at the stores of local merchants for special prizes. We are showing a herald announcing the hunt and these prizes so that you may see how completely the stunt was covered.

Everything went off in ship-shape order. Transportation had been provided for by the addition of extra cars on the street railroads. The movietone men ground away at their cameras, and dotting the kid-covered grounds were State troopers, the local militia, and all available police stationed to guard the youngsters against possible accidents.

Never in the history of the showmanship of Niagara Falls had such a stunt been planned and executed to so complete a success. To say that Wear deserves a compliment would be putting it mildly. He deserves a couple. And though Tom is not now connected with the Cataract, we are sure that when he hits his new assignment (such work must be deserved), he'll let us see what he is doing to put his house across.



Scandinavian Throwaways Distributed By Logan Sells Film

Heralds in Scandinavian were what E. R. Logan handed out recently in St. Paul, Minn., to plug the show at the Capitol Theatre. And why in Scandinavian? Because he was selling a Scandinavian picture!

It is the policy of the Publix Capitol to every now and then present a foreign show in native dialogue. We ran a story not so long ago telling you of Logan's activity along the show-selling line when he set out to plug—and did successfully do so—his first talking picture in foreign tongue. The campaign was a wow and certainly hit the right spot. Logan adopted similar methods to plug "Vi Tva," when it was booked in. Result: An excellent campaign resolved itself into good business and plenty of publicity for the theatre.

Logan must also sell his regular shows, too. He had a fine herald on "Criminal Code," which, though not new, nevertheless went over very well. This herald was not new, as we have stated—was made up in the form of a summons to attend the picture. The heralds were given out all over town, and most assuredly were responsible for lots of publicity and extra business. Logan is always active in his town and he tries to pull some sort of stunt on every picture. We hope that he'll be represented again on our pages in the very near future so that we can pass his work along to the rest of the Club. What do you say, "E. R."?

Mason Hall Grabbed Front Page Space On Opening Of The Lee

Front page publicity, the gift of the local newspaper, back page publicity, the gift of the local dealers—that was what R. Mason Hall obtained recently in Pennington, Va., when the new Lee Theatre opened there not so long ago.

Hall, formerly manager of the Lyric Theatre in Norton, Va., took care of the opening campaign of the house, sending it over with a bang that rivalled a Fourth of July celebration. The newspaper gave him plenty of publicity, and on the "Lee Theatre Number" of the paper, gave him a front-page head. The back page of the paper contained a full-page co-operative ad in which welcome was extended the theatre by many of the town's prominent merchants.

While at the Lyric in Norton, Hall turned out some corking work, as you will doubtless remember. He is especially interested in boosting kiddie business in town's where he is selling shows. That he will continue it in Pennington goes without saying. We want to wish him lots of luck on his new enterprise and we are sure that he is going to continue the same activity—perhaps on an even larger scale—than was on display while located in Norton. Right, Mason?

Typografikal Errows

When you labor for weeks and weeks to turn out a perfectly gorgeous piece of advertising matter, and then discover on publication day that the compositor used a wrong font letter in a heading, and the proofreader overlooked a misspelled word in the third paragraph . . . just be nonchalant . . . count yourself lucky!

According to O. O. McIntyre, famous New York columnist: "Book publishers have been unable, despite innumerable precautions, to bring out a book entirely free of grammatical and typographical mistakes. The average tome will present 150 'bulls.' One of Conrad's totaled more than 400 and an early volume by H. G. Wells had 150 embarrassing errors. Some books are proofread by three different experts but mistakes creep in."

Even experienced authors get their thoughts tangled into knots at times. H. I. Phillips, who conducts "The Sun Dial," recently quoted the following paragraph from "Fourth Plague," written by Edgar Wallace: "When the discussion was finished the surly man jerked his head around to Festine. He was sitting on his right hand, his elbows on the table, his big fleshy hands clasped."

If you still are grieving over a mistake you found in your last piece . . . well, just forget it. Count yourself luzky!—B.M.T. Advertiser.

F. Hill Had Another Wow Ad In 'Whoopee' It Was Done In Color!

Frank Hill had such an ace ad on "whoopee" recently that we can't reproduce it! And now isn't that a fix to be in? But nevertheless it's true. Frank's ad carried a number of colors, which made it practically impossible for the engraver to reproduce it. But we'll try to tell you about the ad, and if that won't do, we suggest that you drop Frank a line and ask him to send one to you. It's fine to look at and certainly marks a new departure in newspaper advertising.

The ad portrayed a number of Ziegfeld beauties mounted on horses, and dressed in cowboy and Indian costumes. The costumes were colored, brown, red and brown and red. In the upper right hand corner of the layout, a cut of Eddie Cantor was placed, with the title alongside being strung out in lariat fashion. Cantor's name was carried in red and black. Surrounding the ad was a very unusual border (and you all know that Frank digs borders out of thin air sometimes). He used newspaper mats to achieve the border effect. When the completed ad appeared in the papers, plenty was certainly said about it, and it was almost impossible to turn the page of the paper without seeing the ad.

And now a stunt on "Whoopee" that also clicked. Teaser ads were run in the newspaper for a week in advance to the effect: Look to the skies for "Whoopee"; it's in the air "Whoopee"; in the air, everywhere, every one is looking for "Whoopee." A plane was next hired to fly at night over the town. Spotlights were then set up, and when the plane zoomed over the town during the hours of evening when most persons were on the streets, the lights were focused on the wings of the plane, where in big letters, easily discernible, flashed: "Whoopee." That the stunt was a success was proven by the opening matinee's business.

Well, that's what Frank did as a couple of highlights for "Whoopee." And since he is always active, we'll no doubt have plenty more of his work to pass along soon. Keep it up, Frank.

Stringing Banner Across Street Was Break For Lashley

There was quite a job facing H. T. Lashley recently when he set out to plug "Hell's Angels" and its engagement at the Paramount Theatre in Burlington, N. C.

But Lashley finally managed to overcome the obstacle. You see, he wanted to string a compoboard plane, of a large size, across the street. The plane was suspended by wires. Through his civic contacts he finally secured permission to string the plane. And it proved to be one of the high spots of the entire campaign. Every one could see the plane for blocks away. And if any one didn't know that "Hell's Angels" was playing the town, it wasn't Lashley's fault.

On "Unfaithful," he made a tie-up with a local newspaper and secured the co-operation of the editors to the extent of running a contest in which tickets were given to newspaper readers, the first 20, who would clip out a scattered still of Ruth Chatterton and restore it to its original style. The contest was run for two days, 20 passes being given out on either day. The newspaper office was kept plenty busy while the stunt was on. Which made the editors satisfied, since they knew that reader interest had been gained. Lashley was satisfied, too. And why? Because he managed to get in a lot of publicity and some additional business as a result of the stunt. Right, "H. T."?

Rosenthal's Campaign On "Cimarron" Was A Corker; It Clicked

The steam calliope that the residents of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., heard screeching on the streets not so long ago apprised them of the fact that the Capitol Theatre was shortly to play "Cimarron." The stunt of the calliope was but one of the highlights of the campaign furnished by Morris Rosenthal for the picture. Indeed, the calliope was but part of a stunt.

All that the circus whistle did was to call attention to the parade of cars we are showing. Through a tie-up with a local automobile dealer, Rosenthal was enabled to secure an old model car and a couple of the newer models. Led by the calliope the transportation exhibit procession wended its way about the streets, doing, as stated before, yeoman service for the Capitol Theatre.

The tie-up was but one of the many Rosenthal effected. His campaign—one of the most complete that the town has ever seen—included lobby hangers, two weeks in advance; 5,000 book marks 10 days in advance, which were supplied all libraries; a card at the libraries; a window tie-up with a typewriter company effected through a still scene; special one frame trailers that appeared at the end of each subject; the inside pages of the book "Cimarron" were blown up and placed on display, one in a large department store, the other in the theatre lobby; many book stores plugged the book itself; ads were run in all papers, culminating in a full-page smash on opening day.

The front of the theatre presented an appearance that was a wow. The specially constructed plug extended from the inside doors right out into the streets. Flood lights made it doubly effective. Cut-out letters plugging the picture were used over the doors in the lobby on the exit a week in advance and then moved out front for the showing.

Establishing a precedent, the newspapers sent reviewers to cover the picture, something seldom done in Wilkes-Barre. These criticisms were later used as the basis for newspaper ads. Radio announcements were made throughout the week. The Booster Club, over 2,000 kids strong, gave the picture some excellent word-of-mouth comment.

As a matter of fact, Morris covered so many angles that it is practically impossible to set them all forth in limited space. We'll tell you that through his activity the picture went over to great results. And if you know Morris' work, you'll know that he'll do it on other pictures as well. Right, Morris?

Institutional Plug

It has been suggested that showmen can secure excellent institutional plugs by distributing monthly blotters to be given away to all of the office holders in the business section of the town.

The blotters need not carry anything on them but an institutional plug on the theatre and a calendar of the current month.

Dollison Receives Plenty Of Publicity From Local Editor

Landing six or seven stories in his local newspaper on any special attraction he is plugging is nothing out of the ordinary for Lester Dollison, of the Big Theatre, Wink, Texas. And oh, yes! Dollison generally manages to grab off a story and picture on the front page.

He has other activities, too, in Wink, that net his house lots of publicity. One is his monthly calendar that is given to patrons in and out of town. It measures 14x11 inches and besides carrying the program of features and shorts for the month, also carries a border of ads. To stimulate interest in the program and the ad, Dollison placed a special date in a number of the ads. A note on the bottom of the calendar announced: "Free—Tickets—Free! Clip Any Dated Ad On This Calendar, Have It Endorsed By the Advertiser; It Is Then Good for One FREE TICKET If Presented With One Paid Adult Admission to THE RIG On Date Printed On Ad."

The calendar has met with the unanimous approval of the local public, and Dollison finds no trouble in distributing them. Incidentally, Dollison pulled a good stunt on Will Rogers in "Lightnin'" that we think you'd like to know about. Small cards, about the size of calling cards and the same kind of stock, were passed out. They carried a small square of cloth in the right hand corner. Copy stated: "Here's a Handkerchief to Wipe the Tears Away—When You Laugh 'Till You Cry—Seeing Will Rogers In 'Lightnin'" (theatre, playdates). The novel heralds had them laughing in the town and caused quite a bit of comment on the picture. Which eventually reached the box-office in the form of big business. Right, Lester?

Here's What Broadway Does To Sell Shows; Rivoli's Fine Front

Quite a bit of comment is heard on Broadway these days as a result of the excellent and eye-arresting front displays that are being turned out on the attractions playing the Rivoli Theatre.

Here we show you a close-up of one of two gigantic panels that helped put "The Front Page" before the eyes of the theatre-going crowd. The front would have to be seen to be appreciated. Photos will not do this display justice. In black and white, and containing numerous stills depicting scenes for the picture, it was an object of admiration, and momentarily commanded the attention of passersby, many of whom stopped to linger and look.

The Rivoli Theatre has long featured fine fronts, and not only does the showman laying them out figure on attracting the eye through the color and photos he selects, but he also uses selling copy that will appeal. Over the doors of the theatre (this is not shown in the photo), were placed heads of the principal characters in the film, while directly below them an explanation was given as to the parts played by the characters, their real names, and a brief bit of the story. Photostats of newspaper front pages formed a background for the heads.

Of course, one would hardly expect to find such a front in a small town, the cost of this display being so prohibitive as to drive all thought of ever creating such a piece of work out of the mind of the showman located in such a situation. Our purpose in passing it along is to show you how it's done on Broadway, and to state that you can always use the principle upon which they base their displays, and carry it out the best way possible. As has—and is—being done by showmen all over the country, whose work is seen often on our pages. Oke?

Emerson's Novel Ad!

This novel newspaper advertisement is the work of Ted Emerson, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Cedar Rapids, Ia. Notice how Emerson attracts attention to his advertisement by running a press book cut on "Fifty Million Frenchmen" upside down and then tying the newspaper copy in with the illustration. It happens that Olsen and Johnson are big favorites as a result of their vaudeville appearances in Cedar Rapids which explains why Emerson played up the comics' names over the title.

And so—even this little odd slant on a newspaper ad opens up an avenue for discussion. Have YOU ever given a thought to pulling a gag of this kind? Or have you ever tried to manipulate an ordinary exchange mat so that it will enhance the appearance of your newspaper ad?

Several visiting members at Club headquarters happened to see this ad of Emerson's on our desk and suggested that, possibly, many of our other members were pulling the same kind of stunts but were keeping it a secret. So those of you who happen across this little bit about Ted's gag should remember that we are all anxious to see what is being done "differently" by our brother members and showmen. Send those out-of-the-ordinary ads in regularly so that we may pass them on to other club members.

Yo-Yo Spinners Had A Fine Time On The Ohio Theatre's Stage

First of all, we'll explain that yo-yo isn't a song, but a top. The explanation is advanced thus early in our story in order that those persons perusing this brief account of one of Julius Lamm's recent and successful activities at the Ohio Theatre, Mansfield, Ohio, will not be confused.

Lamm purchased from a wholesale dealer a quantity of the tops at three cents each, and announced that he would give them away to kids at the Saturday afternoon show. 1,500 youngsters stormed the doors on the day the tops were given away. Some publicity for the house! Further publicity was obtained on the front page of the local newspapers when Lamm announced that special awards promoted from local dealers would be given the youngsters proving themselves masters of the yo-yo. The selections were announced as to be made by a local committee who would pick out 10 best yo-yoists, and ask them to appear at the afternoon show where they would be judged by audience applause. No show was given at the morning judgings. Children under 14 alone could compete, and were alone given tops.

The stunt was one of the best Lamm has used to date. If you'd like a little dope on it drop him a line and we are sure that he'll furnish you with it. Thanks, Julius! Keep us posted on your future work, too, will you?

Suggs Had Complete Campaign For Film; It Clicked Very Well

Quite a campaign was put on by M. S. Suggs, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Bristol, Tenn., when he engineered his campaign for "Check and Double Check" not so long ago.

On Sunday before the picture's Wednesday opening, the Courier-Herald carried a double-page spread. The theatre used additional space in this truck which greatly enhanced the selling value of the picture.

A tie-up was secured with a furniture store whereby they gave a whole section of their window to a radio display. At the back of two of the radios were cut-out heads of Amos and Andy taken from the one-sheet. One of the local music houses gave the theatre another window—placing pianos and radios in it with cut-out heads of Amos and Andy together with stills taken from the picture.

A ladies' ready-to-wear store turned over both of their windows to a display made by the theatre's artist together with copy regarding the picture and also the fact that a ticket would be given the purchaser of $3 or more. This merchant bought 100 tickets and also ran large ads daily in the papers.

A desk company gave a portion of their window to display an Underwood typewriter and a cut-out of Amos and Andy seated at a desk with copy, "Check and Double Check" our stock and be sure to find what you want." Also stills from the picture appeared in the window.

Two leading filling stations permitted the theatre to place cards in prominent places in front of their stations. Copy on these cards read, "Check and Double Check your Gas and Oil after seeing Amos and Andy at the Paramount.

An old model "T" Ford was run over the downtown streets and residential section two days prior to showing of picture and three days during showing. This old car was plastered with copy about the picture, Amos and Andy, etc. Every time the car "conveniently" stopped, Amos and Andy would carry on a conversation by starting an argument. This drew a crowd at all times and further helped to publicize the picture.

This is Mr. Sugg's initial appearance on the Club pages, and we hope that he'll be here many more times. What do you say, "M. S." You know the rest of the showmen on your circuit are often seen, and we'd like to see you, too. Oke?

Cassady's Poster Work

Studies in character portraiture. So might be called these samples of recent poster work executed by C. C. Cassady, poster artist for Zaring's Egyptian Theatre in Indianapolis, Ind. Look them over and note how the artist has captured, and cleverly reproduced, the individual personalities of the various stars, in which is reflected the moods known to many.

McDonald Advances The Suggestion That Classes Be Tied-Up

Teddy McDonald, of the Universal Studios publicity department in Hollywood, Cal., comes forward with another suggestion. He says: "In every town there is a school and every school has a teacher who is old enough to understand life. But the manager who knows how to approach the principal of the school can get results. Try this. Go to the school room and see the teacher. And sell your theatre to her. Tell her she can have a block of seats every Saturday afternoon for her honor pupils—those who can get 100% in the lessons during the week. She will be happy to know that there is something for her children to plug for and without a doubt you will get 10 honor pupils every Saturday afternoon who will be pleased with the show and certainly will be pleased with the manager. Then when they go home won't they brag—about their theatre and their teacher. It is a simple stunt and one that will cause a long bits of news for the people in the little town; and as most papers carry a page on the schools and their doings a story and pho will no doubt be welcomed. . . . Remember, play with the kids and you will win every time. . . . Be one of them; and when the serials flash on the screen don't run up and down the aisle trying to hush the kids. Yell with them and they will be back next Saturday."

Oke, Teddy. We are glad to pass along your sentiments and expressions on the subject of kids. We are already looking forward to hearing from you again, for we know that your suggestions are always read with interest by your fellow Club members. Give our regards to our many friends out around your district, will you?

Local Activity Is Seen In Work That Kislingbury Does

F. F. Kislingbury, manager of the Publix-Paramount Theatre in Plainfield, N. J., is doing a splendid job of selling his attractions and selling his theatre institutionally, though he has been in Plainfield only a short while.

Prior to the opening of "The Royal Family of Broadway" three thousand tabloid heralds were distributed. Imprint cost was paid by a local clothier.

A theatre party during the same week was held for "The Girls' Friendly Society." This party, and the feature picture, received considerable newspaper publicity.

Publicity on a tie-up with the Boy Scouts (Theatre operation was turned over to the Boy Scouts for one day) broke Friday, the opening day of "The Royal Family of Broadway." The Plainfield Courier-News used a three-column cut mentioning the feature picture.

Four large window displays, with stills and copy, were placed in leading store windows.

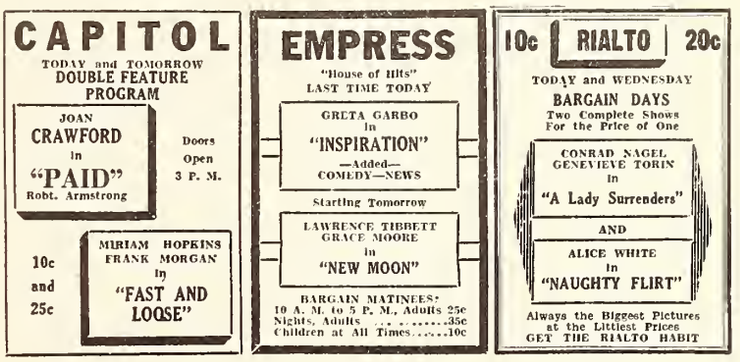
A telephone campaign was started Tuesday, in advance of the Friday opening. Exceptional results were achieved. 1,595 phone calls were made, informing people of the fact that "The Royal Family of Broadway" would be the next feature picture at the Plainfield Paramount Theatre.

And these stunts obtained results with a capital "R," and the well known dollar sign. We have followed the activities of Kislingbury and we know that he is a live-wire. Those of you who recall his work in other spots around the country will remember that it was right up to the mark. We'd like to hear from you again, "F. F."

Boom-Boom-A-Boom!

The vacuum sweeper buzzed along merrily at the Arcadia Theatre in Wellsboro, Pa., as the janitor performed his daily cleaning task, when suddenly and without warning two sharp cracks were heard over the motor's buzz.

After the surprised and wide-eyed janitor had sufficiently regained his composure he found that two holes had been torn in the vacuum bag by two 22 shells which were picked up in the course of the cleaning.



The janitor is still trying to figure the case out, but Larry Woodin, manager of the house, advances the plausible story that one or the other witnesses of "The Last Parade" which ran that day, lost the shells.

Small Ad Layouts!

Having a lot to say, but mighty little space to say it in, is just another reason why showmen must be—showmen. As witness these three ads from Jacksonville, Fla. They are all one column by three inches and have two pictures to sell, two as double features and the other for a current, as well as, coming attraction.

By the sensible use of a neat layout, plus a few rules, they are not only attractive but easy to read. We might add, that on the entire theatrical page of the paper from which they were clipped, they were as outstanding as many of the larger space ads.

If rates in your town are too high for the pocketbook you should still be able to sell your pictures through the use of neat type and a knowledge of how rules can make an ad effective.

Model Planes Built By Youngsters Were Aid to Louis Lamm

Making use of a stunt that of late has been a great favorite with showmen, enabled Louis Lamm to get a lot of publicity for the picture, "Hell's Angels," when it played the Palace Theatre in Lorain, Ohio. Lamm sponsored an airplane model building contest among the youngsters of the town.

Lamm used his idea as a plug for "Hell's Angels." He agreed to sponsor an airplane model building contest. Twenty-three entrants took part in the plan. We are showing a photo of some of the youngsters. If you can make them out in the photo you'll see some beautiful models of planes. The stunt created lots of interest and resulted in considerable comment on the picture, all of which tended towards the film's ultimate success. The newspaper gave publicity to the contest for several weeks.

Here's an idea that you can pull whenever you think that the time is ripe. If you don't want to start a club to teach the kids how to build the models, you can use the gag as Lamm has. It clicked for him and would doubtless do the same for you. We want to thank Louis for passing that along to him and we hope that he'll be on our pages again soon, so that his brother Julius, who you all know manages the Ohio at Mansfield, for Warners, won't jump into the lead for showman honors in the family.

Kane's Initiative Saves Fashion Show; Clicked In Ace Style

All dressed up and no place to go!

That was Tom Kane, manager of the Sequoia Theatre, Redwood City, Cal., when the local Retail Merchants' Association, with whom he had arranged to run a Fashion Show, balked at the money necessary to put the show across in a manner befitting the occasion, and took a run-out powder.

If any one had dared play "What'll I Do" on the non-synch in Kane's presence, murder would have been absolute.

But Kane didn't wonder long about what to do; for up steps a high-class shop, Clemens, having branches all over the Coast, and volunteers put up the money needed for a Fashion Show that would be a show and not just a procession of manequins across an undraped stage.

Whatever the store agreed to do, they more than kept their agreement. Ads, stories, pictures—all of these mediums helped inform the local populace of the fact that Tom Kane was on the way with a Fashion Show. For days in advance the local newspaper plugged the show by stories.

Clemens, realizing the value of effective displays, carried models and style in their windows. Cards plugged the show shortly to play the Sequoia, Kane wasn't backward about plugging his end of it, either. He used cards in the lobby, signs all over town; notices in his newspaper ads; trailers on the screen. All that you could hear or see for weeks in advance was: "Fashion Show at Sequoia Theatre."

Along with this story we are showing some of the work Tommy got in. Look over the layout showing some of the ads. That's class, sez we. And we thing you'll agree. Then cast your eye over the midget ads that are included in the layout. Class to them, too. Right? And still another illustration that tells more than words what Kane accomplished, is the photo showing the models on the stage. The setting was designed by Ray Hardy, the stage manager. All art work was executed by Ken Miller.

What a mob stormed the house on the opening night of the show! Seats were at a premium. When Tom Kane stepped out on the stage to act as master of ceremonies, the party began. The patrons were more than satisfied; for in addition to seeing a Fashion Show, with its many style creations worn by beautiful models, they also saw a vaudeville show consisting of dancing and music. And, of course, Tom Kane, tossing wisecracks.

We think that he deserves lots of credit for the way he went about it and put over a show right when things looked hopeless. But he's a showman who has had lots of experience. He knows Redwood City, and Redwood City knows him. Maybe that's why the show was so sensational a success. Who can tell? You'll all agree to this, though: Tom undoubtedly showed a great spirit in putting this show across.

Certainly the time will come when some other Round Table brother will get in the same kind of a jam that Tom Kane found himself. Carefully prearranged plans will topple like a house built of cards; hard work put in for several weeks in advance will all be for naught; and, then, call to mind this yarn of how Kane, with keen initiative turned what appeared sure defeat into a victorious evening's entertainment. Many thanks for your contribution to these columns, Tom, and let's hear from you again in the near future.

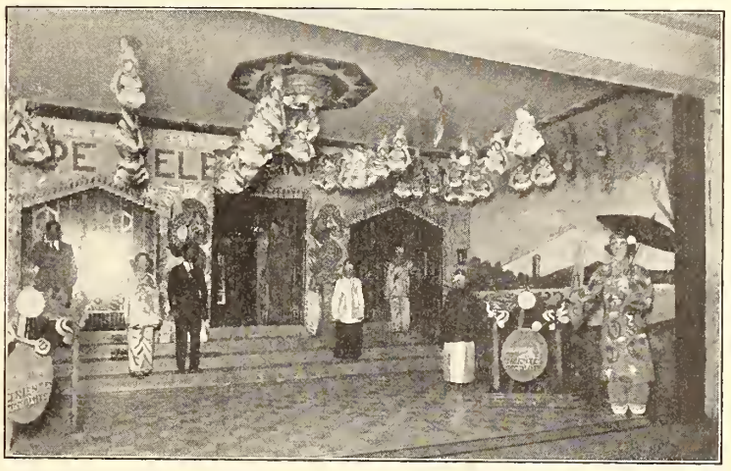
Forced to change his show plans within a few hours, Tom Kane also had to change his advertising. Note the attractive layout that Tom hastily devised. Also note the stories that crept into the society columns

Business Proved Oke For Owen As Result Of Schools Tie-Up

Who said that it doesn't pay to run a revival every now and then? If you want to find out just what "The Birth of a Nation" did for F. E. Owen, now manager of the Cameo Theatre in Atlanta, Ga., but managing the Ritz in Tuscaloosa when he played "The Birth," look at the smile he's wearing.

Owens effected an excellent medium when he played the picture, by tying up with the schools. The superintendent issued a proclamation to the effect that any one wishing to see the picture could do so and not be counted absent from school on the day the picture was viewed. 2,033 students saw the film at a special reduced rate. What do you think of that for a tie-up? The results along the adults patronage line were equally pleasing, especially in view of the price of admission that was charged them.

Owen, as we have stated, is now connected with the Cameo Theatre in Atlanta, and since he is always active, we are of the opinion that he is going to be represented often on our pages. So keep us posted, "F. E.," in order that we can pass along your work to the rest of the members of the Managers' Round Table Club.



Mexico City Stands Out When It Comes To Selling Shows

As our International Number showed, foreign showmen are certainly forging ahead in a progressive manner with their show-selling. More and more their work is complying to the standard of high-powered showmanship. While this account that we are here presenting might not be termed foreign showmanship since it is not across the Big Pond, we are sure that you will agree with us that Mexico has made rapid strides in its show-selling methods. Perhaps you recall the examples of the work we showed you just recently. If so, then you'll see that this showmanship, too, is along the same ace lines.

We are showing here a photo of the front display used at the Cinema Palacio in Mexico City, when "Oriente y Occidente," the Spanish version of "East Is West" played the house. Look the photo over closely and see how cleverly the display was arranged. A complete atmospheric front was turned out, and it was so made as to catch the eye and hold attention. Note the lanterns that are strung under the marquee, as well as atop of it A special pagoda was constructed on top of the marquee, and the title of the film plugged there, too. But not only was the front concentrated upon.

Look at the corking lobby display that was turned out. This, too, was atmospheric. We might even say that it packed more of a punch than the front, as it carried out the atmospheric tone to greater effect. Everything was there in complete detail. Even scenes were painted by which the locale of the picture, China, was portrayed. Miniature cardboard dolls, showing the star of the film in costume, were strung about the lobby. The life-sized cut-outs were placed alongside a gong, the face of which plugged the title of the picture. Ushers and doormen were masked and wore Chinese costumes. Beautifully painted compoboard further enhanced the display's effectiveness. Is it any wonder that the picture was sold to every one in the vicinity of the theatre. Keep your eye on our pages and see what else is being done along the showman line in Mexico City and the rest of Mexico.

Revival Nights!

Since they have been inaugurated recently, revival nights are going great. The West has been using them to fine success for some time. Here in New York it is the practice of showmen to secure for another showing re-issues of the first and most popular talkies, such as "Rio Rita," "Flight," "The Cuckoos," "In Old Arizona," "The Wolf of Wall Street," "The Doctor's Secret," "Madam X," "The Jazz Singer," "Thunderbolt," "Bulldog Drummond," "The Last of Mrs. Cheney," and the more recent "The Divorcee," and "Common Clay."

The pictures are generally run as an evening double feature, the revival—or request—film being spotted either before or after the last showing of the current film. Good plugging always helps these pictures to a better box-office business.

Davidson Helped To Found News Sheet As Local Stores Voice

Dave Davidson, connected with the Publix Michigan Theatres in Detroit, Mich., has gone and promoted a paper; not a newspaper, though it's just as valuable. This paper is in tabloid style and is run and distributed by the Bird Arcade, which houses the largest chain stores in Detroit, including the Bird Department store.

The paper is made up in tabloid style and carries many interesting items which include: advertising of the various stores' products; short stories; women's notes; theatre notes (written by Dave, who handles the movie page); and many other features. 25,000 papers are given out every other week. They are distributed by paid carriers. The merchants are signed for a specific period. The first issue of the paper, "The Arcadian," was greeted with plenty of favorable comment. And, as time goes on, it will probably prove a very, very valuable medium. Right, Dave?

Now on "Reducing," Dave turned out a corking campaign. He tied up with the manufacturers of a reducing apparatus and managed to cajole 20,000 circulars out of them plugging the dates at the Riviera Theatre (which you know is managed by Holah), and also sent out 100,000 post cards. 5,000 circulars were distributed for the Birmingham theatre's engagement of the picture. 20,000 postcards were also sent out, and, no doubt, as a result of the stunts, Giesmann turned in an ace week. A contest was run on the post cards in which persons were invited to guess the combined weight of Marie Dressler and Polly Moran. This served to stimulate interest still further.

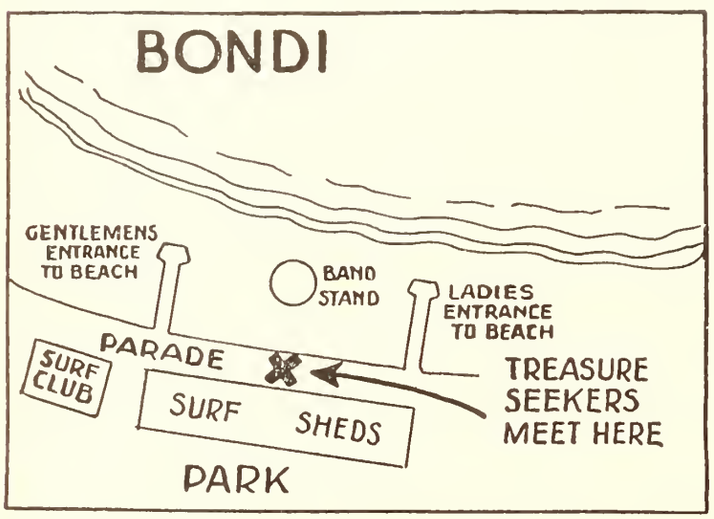
Listen, Dave! Since you are so active in your town, and hitting them out into center field bleachers, we want you to keep us posted on your future work so that we can pass it along. What do you say? You know your stuff always contains slants of interest, so we think it should be represented frequently. Oke?

Mel Lawton's Treasure Hunt!

Easily adapted to any locality

Credit this to one of Australia's foremost showmen.

And the beauty of the whole affair is the fact that smart showmen can tie it in with any picture which lends itself to such exploitation.



Lawton condensed the entire idea so that it covered a period of only six days from start to finish. Therefore, all chance for going stale was minimized and the high pitch of excitement which prevailed reacted most favorably at the box-office.

SELL YOUR NEWSPAPER first on this stunt. Because much depends on how thoroughly they get behind the idea and spread the necessary propaganda. And, as in the Treasure Hunt worked by Mel Lawton, the maps showing the meeting places of the treasure hunters was most effective.

GET THE CIVIC AUTHORITIES behind it as well. Especially the playground authorities and all others interested in child-welfare work. They should get behind you a hundred percent because of the out-door angle in connection with this Hunt.

PROMOTE THE CHESTS through some local agency, preferably some concern handling clothing and cedar chests, who can secure a half dozen small ones from the manufacturers who will naturally gain a lot of publicity for their product.

MAKE IT WORTH WHILE by packing each chest with many worth-while items including a pass for the theatre during the run of the picture to be plugged. And, as Lawton did, place a bill, from one to five dollars, in the chest as well.

This is one of the six charts which appeared in the newspaper to inform the treasure seekers the vicinity where the next "chest" would be buried. You will note that they were definitely told where ALL the seekers must meet. This angle is of great importance when working a similar stunt for your town.

ANNOUNCING THE TREASURE HUNT should be done via the newspaper, the screen of your theatre and cards in the windows of all merchants participating. Never let on where the succeeding chest will be buried. Make them wait for that information from the newspaper's daily announcement. See that the hour for all the kiddies gathering at a given spot is well advertised. No youngster is to be allowed to "steal a march" by going off ahead of schedule and trying to find the hidden chest.

KEEP THE HIDING PLACE A SECRET by permitting no one but yourself and a representative from the newspaper to know where the burying is to be. This can be done late at night, we believe, and always the night before the hunt at that particular location. This eliminates all possibility of someone geting wind of the approximate location and "beating" the kids to the finding of the chest.

PHOTOGRAPH THE DAILY WINNER and publish the picture in the newspaper. This will, naturally, build up considerably more interest in the entire stunt. You can also announce the winner on the screen each night and encourage others, not yet participating, to join in the following day's hunt.

INTRODUCE ALL THE WINNERS from your stage, announcing the fact in advance. This will tend to bring out many extra patrons, especially those who know or are related to the various youngsters.

With this brief summary of the Treasure Hunt Idea, we will now give you a little "dope" on how Mel Lawton publicized his to such excellent returns. Follow closely the progress of his newspaper cooperation and especially the effective manner in which the locations were published in the paper.

In the cut below you will note how the paper made up and published the meeting place for the treasure seekers. After they were all assembled the hunt started at a given signal. This lent a touch of fairness so that none of the youngsters or the adults who turned out in hundreds to watch the hunt could say that some kids had the jump on others by starting out earlier.

PICK THE RIGHT LOCATIONS. It is hardly likely that you will select the main traffic intersection of your town as a stage for one of the hunts. But at the same time you should be mighty careful of the spots selected, keeping in mind that the entire vicinity will be dug up plenty by the kids. In looking over the Australian campaign we note that parks and beaches were used all the time. You must select the same type of place for burying the chests. If you have no beaches available, take a field or the edge of a wood. Perhaps your local park department will consent to select the locations and supervise the kiddies. If so, you have a great angle. Play it up for all it is worth. Emphasize the co-operation of the park department or playground supervisors, whichever the case may be.

Avoid any disagreeable comeback from property owners. Or damage done by the kiddies in hunting for the chests. All these gentle reminders are of the utmost importance if you want to make a gag of this kind successful.

TAKE MOVIES AND STILLS of each meeting of the treasure seekers. It will be a great plug for business by injecting those shots into your newsreel. Be sure and take in slow shots of the adult onlookers. They will all want to see what they look like on the screen. The stills will come in handy for newspaper cuts and lobby displays too. Closeup of the winner each day is of great value for the same purpose. Keep all of these "little" angles in mind. Capitalize all the way down the line on every slant that merits attention. Properly handled you can make this one of the most talked-about gags ever pulled in your community. That it will pay big dividends at the box-office will never be doubted. Try it for yourself and see. Then if it clicks, be sure and send us all the dope, plus the pictures and tear sheets.

The attraction to which Lawton's Treasure Chest stunt was tied happened to be "Tom Sawyer," but there is no reason why it cannot be worked in conjunction with some other picture that lends itself to such a campaign. Since this type of newspaper tie-up must be planned well in advance, especially since local authorities have to be sold on the idea as well, it should be planned several weeks ahead of time, so that every possible angle can be covered. In boiling down the campaign for reproduction on these pages we have given you the salient factors of the idea. They were not all original with Lawton, but are a combination of our ideas with his, revamped to suit, what we believe to be, conditions as they will be found in the average town or city in this country.

Much obliged Mel for the details of your Treasure Chest Hunt. We're sure that many of the showmen here in the United States will find the information valuable.

N. Y. Hip. Celebrates

Have a piece of the Hippodrome. Here is shown the mammoth cake presented to the RKO New York Hippodrome, famed amusement Palace, by President Frank Doggan of the Hotel McAlpin, as part of the theatre's 26th Anniversary celebration. Left to right is seen V. Clement Jenkins, Vice-President of the Sixth Avenue Association, whose representative merchant-members took active part in the occasion and Major L. E. Thompson, Assistant General Manager of RKO.

The entire campaign, which included among it, tie-ups with some of the largest department stores in the world, advertising representation in New York newspaper ads run by the Sixth Avenue Merchants' Association, special guests at the theatre, a gala show running over three hours in length, was planned and executed by Johnny Cassidy, press agent for the Hippodrome working from the Main Office.

Here's Some More Of Laby's Art Work; Do You Like It Too?

Beauty in front displays, we might be so bold to state, is nowhere expressed in Boston so perfectly as is done at the Washington St. Olympia Theatre. But if it should be that there is superior work, we haven't seen it as yet. Here's the latest from the Massachusetts house managed by George Laby. And though the artist hasn't much space with which to work, you'll notice in the photos that every possible advantage is pounced upon.

The left photo depicts the manner of plugging the individual stars. Three photographic engagements were used, the pictures being those of Ann Harding, Clive Brook and Conrad Nagel. Illuminated cut-out letters identified the stars. These special photos were placed on two pieces of compoboard and suspended in front and a little above the box office.

The second and right photo portrays the wall and pillar display. Here is seen to excellent advantage the method used to get the most out of the art work. The long plaque, you will doubtless agree, is very well done, as is the pillar covering of compoboard. Alongside the pillar piece can be seen an easel holding 10 telegrams. This stunt was one of the highlights of Laby's campaign on "East Lynne." The telegrams came from the stars and the director, and that it meant something at the box office was seen in the fact that persons would stop, read, and buy. And don't they always, George?

Newspaper Advertising!

Long ago we stressed the importance of your newspaper advertising and called to your attention many angles that should have guided you out of the pitfalls to bad copy. This advice was aimed, especially at the men who had to make up their own newspaper copy, in addition to their many other duties.

We are not going to play "teacher," for the simple reason that YOU know your own conditions better than anybody who happens to be hundreds or thousands of miles from your town and theatre. But regardless of where you are located, there are a few common-sense angles worthy of more than passing considerating.

FIRST: Your preparation of copy. Remember, no newspaper composing room man can read your mind. Even though you may not have a thorough knowledge of type faces or sizes, you can show, by reason of the way you lay out your ad-copy, just what portion is to be played up. The best way to do this is to draw a box of the exact size of the ad you are making up. Then pencil in your copy, mats, etc., in proportion to the size you want it set.

SECOND: Mats. Can be broken up so that any part of them can be worked into the ad. Have a talk with your composing room man if this is not clear to both of you. Don't drop an effective mat because it won't fit your allotted space. Try to work out some way to use the most important parts of it.

THIRD: Proofs. Of course, the question of proofs is not so easy to discuss since every paper and theatre work the angle out themselves; but on all important advertisements, such as the advance announcements or opening-day ads, you should try to arrange your copy several days in advance so that the paper can show you a proof before it is run. You, at least, get a chance to alter or correct your advertising in this way.

We have published many newspaper ad layouts to show you what the other fellow is doing. We shall continue to do so because it's a great idea seeing how others make up effective newspaper ads and should guide you to many new ideas and angles along these lines.

Alertness Is Again Productive Of Copy From Mgr. E. E. Bair

Always has E. E. Bair been noted for his ability to capitalize on the reading he does. In many ways he has shown this, and passed his work along to us so that we, in turn, could give it to the rest of the Club. Bair used another ace gag recently and we are again giving it to the Club.

Bair, as many know, handles the affairs of the State and American Theatres, East Liverpool, Ohio. Recently he read an editorial on the movies in a New York paper. At the time he was playing "Charley's Aunt" and he immediately called into play a column he uses on special occasions, "Motion Pictures and Local Things Theatrical" and reprinted the editorial (as shown) on the same page as the ad. The copy in the special box reads:

> In a lengthy editorial about the movies, under caption, "TROUBLE'S ANTIDOTE," W. Livingston Larned, writing for "The Daily Reporter," White Plains, N. Y., among other things says the following:
> "The movie is our little hour of sweet release from the grim realities of life, and it must deal a trifle in exaggeration. Otherwise it would not achieve its objective."
> "It is amazing how many people go into a sort of trance after dinner in the average American home. They have a hunger for the vision and the happiness which a picture programme will bring, but they are "just too tired." Or something or other. And they don't go. And they should. They will profit by the experience. It will get them out of themselves.
> "The average motion picture talkie you will find is rather harmless. It may advertise itself as if it were an orgie of vice. It knows it will interest you, once it gets you in the theatre. But to get you there is the problem."
> "You are inclined to a game of bridge. Or you are sleepy. Or you are depressed. Or you think you would rather listen in on the radio. The movie theater must battle for its audiences. It must dig them out from a thousand indifferences."
> "Fifty cents will buy, in the open market, at any theatre, a hundred dollars worth of relaxation. It is the cheapest solution of an ugly problem.

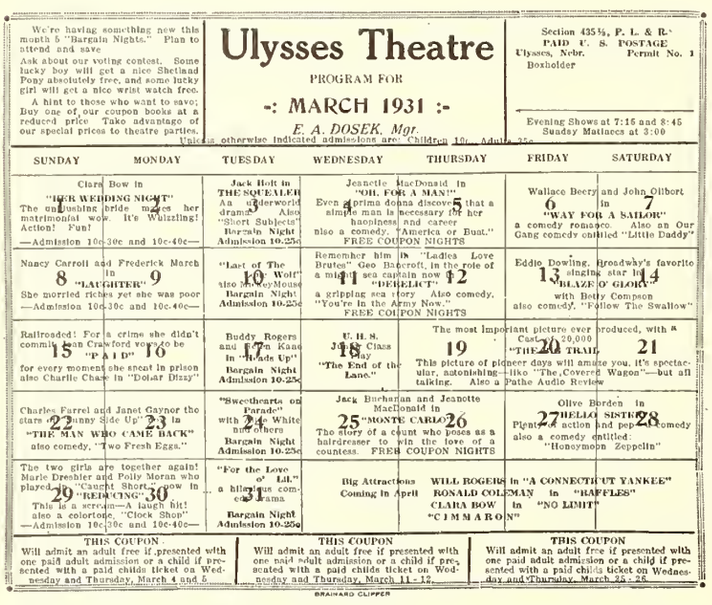
You can see in the regular theatre ad how cleverly the copy is tied into that of the special ad. How's that for being on the qui vive? Don't you think Bair deserves a compliment?

Not Eggs—actly, Gentlemen

A certain theatre in Mattoon, Ill., staged an egg matinee recently to disastrous results. The purpose of the matinee was to provide eggs for charity, and to accomplish this objective, the showman handling the house offered free admission to kids handing in an egg at the door.

Two thousand kids appeared. Trouble started when it was observed that but 1,132 kids could be taken care of. Those youngsters forced to remain outside due to lack of seating facilities resented the offense.

Splash! Smack! Spatter! A barrage of eggs, hurled by arms well versed in knocking tin cans off fences, plopped against the theatre front. Pedestrians appearing on the scene received the same treatment. A hurry call was put in for the local police. They, too, were made to resemble omelettes.



By this time, the egg supply was well nigh exhausted, and the manager came out front to make an explanation. Wisely, he noted that some of the kids still carried eggs. He decided upon a second show to which the kids not present at the first show would be admitted, eggs or no eggs.

It is reported that the manager is being considered for a diplomatic post overseas. And five kids have been picked out as prospective Chicago Cubs pitchers.

Monthly Program Is Made Up In Calendar Form By E. A. Dosek

He has only 460 people in his town, but, just the same, E. A. Dosek, manager of the Ulysses Theatre, Ulysses, Neb., tries to put his house over so that it will show a profit. And he succeeds. Which is a story all by itself.

Right at this time, though, we want to pass along the monthly program that Dosek uses and let you take a look at it. It is printed in black on yellow stock, measures 9 by 7¾ inches and carries the dates in red. A small sales talk accompanies each date. These programs more than meet with favor from the townspeople and those of the surrounding communities who are reached through the mailing list. The cards are not very expensive to print, and Dosek considers them an excellent medium.

We're having something new this month b "Bargain Nights." Plan to attend and save

BRAINARD CLIPPER

Incidentally, he plugs his house by means of an auto covered with theatrical material. Covering other towns, as well as his own, the car—as a result—is well known and people pay it plenty of attention. These activities that Dosek displays are just part of his work. He has to do plenty about town to keep the house filled. We are glad to see that he is hitting the line so hard out in Ulysses and we want him to know that we'd like to hear from him again. And why not include your photo with your next contribution, "E. A."?

Arnold Ran Novel Gag To Help Sell "Dracula" In Town

People often like to reminisce. Knowing this to be especially true in his town, J. Noble Arnold, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Rocky Mount, N. C., ran a "Creepiest Moment Contest," under the sponsorship of the local newspaper and in conjunction with the selling of "Dracula."

The idea of the contest was for contestants to express in writing their creepiest moment in their lives or, in other words, the event that frightened you most.

The letters were to be limited to not over 75 words and the letters were based on what was said rather than the way it was expressed. Ten guest tickets went to the first prize winner; five tickets to the next winner and individual guest tickets to the next 10 winners.

The contest was announced in the paper one week in advance of playdate and daily publicity appeared every day until the opening of picture. The contest was a huge success as was evidenced from the number of answers submitted. And there were undoubtedly many others not participating in the contest that were very much interested in who were the probable prize winners. It all helped to publicize the picture.

This type of stunt is always an interest getter and it is seldom that a newspaper will refuse the showman when he wants to pull a gag of the sort. Can you use it? And, oh, yes! Listen, Noble! We haven't a photo of you. Why not send one along to us, and at the same time include a little dope on yourself?

Greene's Campaign on "Dracula" Thrilled Brooklyn Play-goers

The public certainly had an eerie time of it when they entered the lobby of the Tuxedo Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., and got a load of the showmanship that Al Greene, manager of the house, had on display to sell "Dracula." Greene gave them a corking eyeful.

The campaign, though, was first started off by the distribution of heralds, showing "Dracula" in characteristic pose (the black cape spread out at arms' length). The copy read: "Dracula—Mighty Monarch of the Undead Creatures of Darkness—Leaves His Earth Home Between Noon and Midnight to Appear at the (theatre, playdate). In the center of the herald was placed a miniature cut of a coffin on which was spread real dirt. The herald was printed in red and black, and was calculated to catch the eye.

In his lobby, Green featured seven candles which he kept burning. The candles were placed atop an old chest. Cards, printed in red and black, were distributed. Persons were invited to strike out on the cards those letters of the name "Dracula," which represented candles, that they believed would burn longest. 100 free tickets were offered for the first 100 correct answers. The cards were to be signed on the back and deposited in a three-foot coffin in the lobby. Besides this display gag, Greene had another in the form of a 9 ft. woven spider's net with a blinking "Dracula" and victims. Cut-out letters were also used. The campaign's pulling power was seen in the crowds of people that flocked to the theatre to witness the film.

Oke, Al, and since we hear that you are knocking them over with your showmanship in your part of the country, we want to hear some more from you so that we can pass your work along to your fellow members and showmen in the Managers' Round Table Club. Right?

Nellis Shifts!

R. L. Nellis, long a contributor and member of the Managers' Round Table Club has shifted from his former post at the Von Ritz Theatre, Bedford, Indiana, and is now connected with the Bob Hudson outfit of Richmond, Indiana.

Nellis will handle the Strand and Princess Theatres at Kendallville, Ind. His former post in Bedford has been taken over by Bill Passon, of Jasonville. Nellis was with the Vonderschmitt Amusement Enterprises, operators of the Von Ritz and other houses in Indiana, for eight and one-half years.

Gonsior Gained Publicity on Film by Using Postcard Gag

A. Gonsior, manager of the Virginia Theatre, Champaign, Ill., used an interesting contest as the basis of the exploitation campaign he used to help put over his showing of "Inspiration."

Gonsior had 800 special cards imprinted with the picture of the star, the theatre and playdate, also copy reading "What creates the allure in Greta Garbo? Write a letter to the manager of the Virginia Theatre, giving your impression as to what sums up the allure in this exotic and fascinating star. Just a few words may be the means of your winning one of the 10 monthly passes which are to be awarded as prizes. See and hear her in her latest and most fascinating role as the idol of Paris in 'Inspiration.'" These were distributed in all the sorority and fraternity houses of the Illini University, and mailed to a selected list of undergraduates at the University.

A display tie-up was also arranged by Gonsior, with the local druggists' association, whereby they used the picture title, "Inspiration," in advertising Luxurio face powder which they were exploiting at the time. A number of stills from the production were used, and also special cards mentioning the theatre and playdate.

It is interesting to note that Gonsior took occasion to capitalize on the keen interest which the public has for a star such as the Greta Garbo type. This same idea will be found applicable to other well known players.

These activities tended plenty towards an excellent playdate. Listen, Mr. Gonsior! How about keeping us posted on your future work so that we can pass it along? And you might also include your photo with the contribution.

House Program Used By Kalix At Oxford Goes Over Very Well

Making a hit with the patrons is the four-page program plugging the attractions at the Oxford Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa., that J. J. Kalix, director-manager of the Oxford Theatre, gets out weekly.

We are showing here a copy of his program, which measures six by nine inches and is printed in black on buff colored coated stock paper of a good grade. The two inner pages are shown. They, as you note, contain the schedule for performances as well as the policy and prices of the house. The front page of the program contains either a weekly editorial or a chat by Kalix. This feature is one that has made a considerable impression on the patrons and they look forward weekly to see what the front page will contain next. Sometimes, it's an announcement on a special picture; at other times it's devoted to holidays such as Washington or Lincoln's Birthday and so on.

Schedule of Performances
(Doors Open at 6:30)

OXFORD THEATRE SPREADS HAPPINESS TO THOUSANDS, SO GET YOUR SHARE. A DIFFERENT SHOW EVERY DAY AT THE OXFORD

The back page of the program usually lists the coming attractions for the house. You can see that in his program Kalix doesn't miss out on his shorts. He plugs them because he has long since learned that they mean a lot towards the complete entertainment he strives to give the theatregoers. Which is as it should be. Right, "J. J."? And remember, we'd like to hear some more from you real soon regarding what else you are doing to sell your shows in Philly.

Showmanship—Fifteen Years Ago!

We cannot answer the riddle of when, where or who created the first double truck tie-up, but we can tell you that J. E. Rickards, manager of the Phoenix Amusement Co. in Phoenix, Arizona, worked the gag successfully back in 1916 . . . so if you have older proof . . . shoot it along. . . . As atmosphere for a circus picture, Swan and Swartz, owners of the Empress Theatre in Kearney, Neb., dressed their front to resemble the entrance to the "big-top" . . . and they added some of the necessary trimming such as barker and freaks to make it still more realistic. . . . One of the nicest programs to reach a trade paper fifteen years ago came from J. W. Brighton, director of the Morenci Club Theatre out in Arizona. . . . And since we are approaching the summer season, here's one from fifteen years back to again prove the contention that showmen in those days were just as resourceful as many of the boys today. . . . Joe McCready of the Fifty-sixth Street Theatre in Philly, Pa., erected a bar in their lobby and served cold drinks to the patrons . . . incidentally . . . it went over big. . . . Manager J. E. Bryant inaugurated a series of post card announcements for the many patrons of the Plaza Theatre in Waterloo, Iowa, who lived quite a distance from the theatre . . . most of the folks got to looking for the card each week so as to know what was playing . . . and thousands of other patrons would be doing likewise today if some managers would get wise and start a similar idea. . . . James J. Barrett, owner and manager of the progressive Knickerbocker Theatre in St. Louis, Mo., pulled a fast and smart stunt when he attached slips to his programs and asked the patrons to designate the type of pictures and the stars they preferred to see . . . this information was then used as a guide to future bookings back in those sweet days of 1916 when pictures were up to the theatre man and not according to block-booking. . . . Many other theatres throughout the country followed Barrett's stunt . . . (note: it's still being done with different trimmings) . . .Laugh this one off . . . Gene Upstill, besides being a good manager, was not such a bad cartoonist, so he made up a series of drawings for the back of his programs, newspaper ads and slides . . . all institutional plugs for his theatre . . . incidentally . . . his theatre . . . the Palace, in Long Pine, Neb., was one of those semi-atmospheric affairs . . . myomyomy . . . when will we discover something really and truly new in these ultra-modern days of 1931 . . . or what have you? . . . The Clifford Theatre in Urbana, Ohio, instituted a series of juvenile programs under the direction and supervision of Miss Bertha Thompson, which clicked to such excellent returns that they are still talking about it out that part of Ohio . . . a special play for the kiddies by securing fairy stories and similar stuff of youngster appeal turned the trick . .. try it yourself, boys . . . it's still Oke. . . . The American flag played a prominent part in the ballyhoo activities of Barney Rosenthal out in St. Louis, Mo., in connection with the serial "Liberty" . . . we would like to note the customers' reaction to a duplicate of that old chestnut in these days of modern up-to-date exploitation and bally gags. . . . And here we are back to the female of the species . . . and it's a pleasure, too. . . . step up, boys and girls and make the acquaintance of none other than Mrs. H. A. Jones, live-wire exhibitor extraordinary operating (in 1916) two fine theatres in Waukesha, Wis., the Unique and Colonial, by name . . . besides looking after the operation of those two houses, she watched over the bookings and film buys, handled the advertising and publicity as well . . . that's a man-sized task for anyone in this business. . . . Lee A. Ochs, then newly elected president of the Exhibitor's League of America, Inc., told the whole wide world that "Who's Guilty" was a great series and all exhibs ought to play it. . . . What was the series all about? . . . Well, it was released by Pathe and consisted of a batch of two reel dramas . . . they are still making the same things these days, only they stretch 'em out to six and seven reels. . . . And in conclusion of this week's ancient colyum we would like you all to know that fifteen years ago Frank Rembusch of Shelbyville, Ind., objected to the male leads smoking too many cigarettes in the pictures and too much nudity . . . goshallhemlock, what would he have to say in these more modern days when gunmen kill a baker's dozen each reel and the femmes show you everything but their dispositions . . . they save that for the directors . . . well, as someone remarked . . . times are changing . . . but they forgot to mention whether they are changing for the better or the worse. . . .

The Managers' Round Table Club wishes to acknowledge with thanks the prompt attention given to the requests for especial material for use in the Anniversary Edition. It is particularly gratifying to know how much we can depend on the various members, who, despite their manifold duties, find the little time necessary to comply with such requests.

Those members who have not as yet submitted their material are urged to do so at the earliest possible moment to insure publication in the Anniversary section.

Be sure to include photos, tear sheets, etc., so as to enhance the appearance of the articles and stories, where such photos, etc., tie in with the material submitted.

Kopplin Turning Out Ace Advts. In Miami; Here's Some Of Them

Now the advertising manager of the Capitol Theatre in Miami, Fla., Harold A. Kopplin, connected with the home office of Wometco Theatres in Florida, is turning out some ace work along his own particular lines.

Now, we aren't going to launch into an elaborate description and take up a few hundred inches of space to tell you all that Harold has been doing on his new job. We propose to let his work talk for itself; and with the exception of a few minor explanations telling you how and why and where he used the ads, you'll have to dope the rest out yourself and see whether you wouldn't like to use the slants in your own advertising in conjunction with either the pictures Harold plugged or some future films.

Just look at the corking teaser ads he used for "City Lights." Not bad, are they? And the best part of it is that you can use the same idea in conjunction with some other popular star, such as Fairbanks and players of like calibre. Then see how Harold has swung over to the black and white ads, made famous by Frank Whitbeck on the West Coast and subsequently used to excellent advantage by showmen everywhere. The ads stand out like a million dollars and more than pep up a newspaper page.

But here! We're going ahead with what we didn't intend to do. Suppose you look over the ads, and if there's anything in them that you want to make use of, go to it—with Harold Kopplin's compliments. Thanks, Hal.

La Bar's Displays Are Good Mediums In His Show Selling

We have often stated that one of the mediums F. LaBar, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., uses and thinks helps him a lot, is the ace display he turns out in the lobby and out front of the house for pictures playing the theatre. He had a very effective lobby display for "Dracula."

At the entrance to the lobby panels were used that gave the effect of an archway. On both sides (left and right) appeared cut-outs of man in evening clothes with a cloak thrown over his shoulders and one hand painting. The entire top of panel over entrance contained the huge letters spelling out the title of picture. And in the center under the title was a large cut-out head of one of the leading characters in the picture.

The display was considerably enhanced by a web-like effect being drawn on the panels forming the arch. The art panels in the frames on either side of the special lobby display also carried out the same web-like effect together with copy about the picture and play dates.

The art work was the subject of quite a bit of comment from the movie goers and doubtless that same talk helped put the picture across for a few extra dollars.

Slater Sells Shows In Convincing Way In Perth Amboy, N.J.

Give him a picture and he'll plug it. Who? Bill Slater, manager of the Crescent Theatre in Perth Amboy, N. J. Bill did some good work on "Great Meadow" when it played his house recently, and we are passing along a bit of it.

He effected a tie-up with the schools (emphasizing the Daniel Boone and historical angles). He approached the school authorities and secured permission to place displays in prominent places in school lobbies.

Slater also placed stills with tie-up copy in opticians' windows, gas and electric company's window, and three jewelry store windows. The angle used was a comparison between the merchandise of many years ago with the merchandise of the present.

These few stunts were but the highlights of his campaign, still they were enough of themselves to put the picture across. It is nothing unusual to see activity being displayed on the Jersey Coast where Publix holds a number of houses. All of the men located around the division whose publicity and advertising is handled by Bunny Bryan and Ray Puckett are live-wires. As the Club pages have shown! Keep up the good work, Bill.

Medd Continues His Fine Showmanship In Lumberton, N. C.

Just to show you that he is still on the active list and selling his shows with vim and a vengeance at the Carolina Theatre in Lumberton, N. C., we are passing along a couple of notes regarding some of E. R. Medd's recent work.

When he played "Hell's Angels," Medd had a novel display in front of his theatre in the form of a large cannon. He got the cannon for display by being on the alert and knowing what was going on around his local town. Learning that the cannon was to be transported to another spot in town, Medd contacted the proper parties and arranged to have the transportation jump broken by leaving the gun for a day or so in front of the theatre. This was readily agreed upon. And so, throughout the engagement of the picture, throngs crowded about the gun looking at it, and then going into the theatre. So much for that stunt.

On "Africa Speaks," a man was hired to dress in costume, similar to that used by big game hunters, and parade about the streets of the town. The man carried a banner on the picture which was affixed to a couple of spears. This stunt proved to be valuable as a procurer of business at the box-office. Which was exactly what Medd meant it to do. On the picture, Medd also secured some excellent window displays, one of which was a model of an African native.

Medd considerately sent us some photographs of his work, but unfortunately they wouldn't take for a cut. However, "E. R.," we want to thank you for the active interest you are showing and we hope to hear from you again in the very near future. Oke?

Allow Us to Introduce—

KENNETH T. COLLINS manages the Apollo Theatre in Indianapolis, Ind. Mr. Collins is the latest of the showmen from his busy city to join the Club, and at the rate we are signing up the showmen in that spot, it won't be long before we are hitting that 100% Round Table Club membership mark that we have set. Welcome, Ken, and listen—send us in a photo of yourself with your next work.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

J. CLAUDE KELLER is the manager of the Liberty Theatre in Eunice, Pa. In addition to handling the house, Keller is also part owner. So that makes his job all the more interesting to him. How about giving us some information on the way you sell your shows, Claude, so that we can pass it along?

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

MAC H. WILHEIT sends in his application from Cristobal, in the Canal Zone of Panama. Mac is a showman who believes in putting his house before the public at every possible opportunity. We are going to present, in the near future, an account of the ace front displays he turns out. Welcome into the Club Mac; and remember, we are always glad to look over your work and pass it along so that the rest of the Club can see what you are doing in your district.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

N. J. REED manages the New Fruitvale Theatre in Oakland, Cal. Followers of the Club pages will immediately remember the corking work that has come from Oakland (and in fact is still coming from there). Give us some information on what you are doing to sell your shows, too, "N. J." And how about a photo of yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

J. R. RODGERS assists Roy P. Drachman at the Rialto Theatre, in Tucson, Arizona. Rodgers is the assistant manager and handles all of the office detail and watches all ends of operation. He worked up through the service staff and then to his present position. Well, "J. R." working with a showman like Mr. Drachman should be an education in showmanship in itself for you. Keep us posted from time to time so that we can note your progress.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

M. THOROLD MOORE is the assistant manager in charge of publicity at the Strand Theatre in Parkersburg, West Va. He has been in the show game for quite some time and has attended to publicity at the theatre ever since the house opened. Give our regards to Mr. Barrett, the manager of the house, and let's hear some more from you, Thorold.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

WILLIAM P. ROSENOW manages Sheas's Elmwood Theatre in Buffalo, New York. Mr. Rosenow has been in the show game for quite some time, and is accordingly well versed in showselling. Located in a town that offers the possibilities possessed by Buffalo, he is no doubt turning out some great work. Keep us posted on it, Bill, so that we can pass it along. You might also include your photo in your contribution, too.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

BARNEY GURNETTE, we are of the opinion, will prove an active member of the Club. And how do we know? Because we've already seen some of his work. Barney, who manages the T. & D. Jr. Lodi Theatre, Lodi, Cal., recently had an ace full page co-operative ad on "Reducing" that went over very well. He used it in conjunction with the junior Lions midnite frolic. Incidentally, we figured out that Barney is pretty well known in his town, too. Keep your eye on his future work, and see if we aren't right.

C. T. KRAEGEL is the General Manager of the Metropolitan Amusement Company in Dodgeville, Wis. He looks after two houses, the Metropolitan and the Crystal; and though kept pretty busy filling the seats, we are of the opinion that he will find time to give us a little dope on his showselling. Are we right, "C. T."? And by the way, include your photo with the contribution.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SIDNEY MAGEN manages the Montgomery Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. We number a great many showmen from Mr. Magen's town and we want to wlecome him into the ranks. And at the clip we're hitting, Sidney, it won't be long before the City of Brotherly Love is 100 per cent Round Table.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAUL R. ALBRECHT manages the Avalon Theatre, White Bear Lake, Minn. He is situated in a spot where it is necessary for him to thoroughly study his town in order that he may successfully sell shows. Besides managing the theatre, Mr. Albrecht does all the buying and booking. But we think that in his rather busy existence, he'll find time to sit down and give us a little dope on the subject of his work. Right, Paul?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY A. SEFTON is the manager of the Fox Orpheum Theatre in Wichita, Kas. He has had a wonderful background in the show game, having been interested in it for the past 19 years, during which time he managed stock, vaudeville, and musical comedy shows. So we think, Harry, that you'll provide us with some interesting slants.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. C. MURRAY manages the Fox Miller Theatre in Wichita, Kas., and like the other showmen in the town, he is very active and tries always to sell his shows in a novel manner. We have a hunch that competition is going to be pretty keen from Wichita, and we look forward to some great stuff. Let's go, "C. C."

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAUL W. HILTNER manages the Fox Palace Theatre in Wichita, and according to what we have observed of showmanship from the Kansas spot in the past, there is plenty of activity always going on there. Welcome into the Club, Paul, and let's hear from you, too. And make it often.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

B. F. ADCOCK is the last, but by no means the least, of the Fox showmen in Wichita, Kas., to sign on the dotted line and become a member of the Managers' Round Table Club. Mr. Adcock manages the Uptown Theatre, another circuit house under the city managership of Nat Holt. We think that we have the Fox showmen in Wichita, all represented 100%. Which is what we are always aiming for in every city, "B. F." And now about photos of all you showmen?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. E. ABLESON is the district manager for Publix in Sioux Falls, S. D. Mr. Ableson is by no means a stranger to the members and readers of the Managers' Round Table Club, as his work is well known. Equally well known are the ace accounts of how he gets along with his men. Welcome into the Club, Art.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED BEECHER is the manager of the Publix Egyptian Theatre in Sioux Falls, S. D. His work really needs no comment here, as the showmanship turned out at Sioux Falls is well known. However, Fred, what we'd like is to hear from you soon regarding your latest show-selling, and include a little dope on yourself.

M. S. SUGGS manages the Paramount Theatre in Bristol, Tenn., and since he is located in a section that permits of some show-selling, he more than takes advantage of it. We are sure that he will want to prove an active member of the Club, since so many of his fellow showmen on the Publix circuit are already listed in that category. What do you say, "M. S."?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

T. J. KEMKES manages the Benham Theatre in Fairbury, Nebraska. Since he has been located at the house, Mr. Kemkes, we understand, has been turning out some good work. We have already seen some of his activities, and we look forward to passing along some of his future work. So keep us posted, "T. J." in order that we might let the rest of the showmen on your circuit see what you are doing to keep the house filled.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

STANLEY J. WNUK handles the exploitation for the Palace Theatre in New Britain, Conn. With a job such as yours, Stanley, we don't doubt but that you are doing some ace show-selling and are kept pretty active. But we think that you'll find time to sit down and drop us a letter containing some of your work so that we can pass it along. Oke?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES LEE HYDE is the owner and manager of the Grand Theatre in Pierre, S. D. He does all of his buying, booking, and selling of his shows, so you can see that he is very active. We like activity, Charlie, because it means that you will become an active member and contributor of the Club pages. Welcome into the Club.

WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?

Round Table Biographies!

Charles E. Wheland

He didn't start in the show game at an early age, but when he did start he more than made up for it. Wheland tried out various other professions before he decided to take a fling at the show game, and when he did make his decision, he proved that he had hit the right spot.

Circuits he has never been connected with or interested in. He has always been owner and manager of the houses at which he sold shows. These houses are the Grand and Ritz in New Comerstown, Ohio; Pictorium and Lincoln, in Dennison; the Opera House, Vale, and the State Theatres, in Uhrichsville, Ohio. Acting in the capacity of manager, buying and booking his shows, he soon learned the value of selling to the public only that which he knew for a fact they would be interested in. True, at times he made mistakes, but they were profitable ones for him. He is now a member of the Twin City Theatres Co.

Wheland's lodge affiliations are the Masons, Grotto, Shrine, Elks and the Knights of Pythias. He is unmarried. Wheland was born in Tuscarawas, Ohio, and educated in the town's public schools. If given a chance to pick another profession, and he was just starting out, he thinks it would be the show game. He doesn't know, though, just why he entered it. It seems that he wanted to try out the business he had heard so much about, and, once trying it, finding out that it was interesting and offered unlimited possibilities.

It is interesting to read the biographies of our various members and get their reaction on their attitude towards show business. Wheland says if he were to start all over he would doubtless choose the same game; on the other hand, he admits the thought is in his mind to some day get into other fields. You figure it out.

R. E. Archibald

At the age of 15, Archibald first came into contact with the show game. His father being the owner of two theatres, the son, quite naturally, fell into the job of usher. This he handled capably while pursuing an education.

After attending the grade and high schools of Pocatello, Ida., and the University of Oregon in Eugene, Archibald decided that he'd like to try some business other than the show game. Prior to leaving college, he had served as house manager of a theatre for a year. He next went to work for the Union Pacific R. R., where he clerked for the Union Pacific Railroad for two years. But this show game is a funny one; men swear by it and at it—get out of it for a time and then return. Again came the urge to enter the show game. He obeyed that impulse and took a position as assistant manager for two theatres in Pocatello, Ida. Later he was made manager of both Fox houses and today he is still selling shows.

Archibald was born in Boulder, Colo., and attended the town's public school, until the family moved to Pocatello, where in this town Archibald made many friends that were later to prove valuable. As a result of his being a local boy, he knows the town and its people pretty well—even to the extent of discerning their tastes in entertainment. He also figures prominently in the town's activities and is a member of the Masons, Elks, Pocatello Country Club, and a member of the University Club, and now president of the organization.

He is married and has two children, girls. Because he still retains the same liking towards the show game that was his when he first started, he intends to stay in the business; and should any one ask him whether or not he'd pick another profession if starting all over again, the answer would be in the affirmative.

R. T. (Dick) Kemper

Plenty of experience in practically all ends of the show game has been the lot of Dick Kemper. For quite some time he did a turn on the boards as master of ceremonies, acting in this capacity at the Vanderbilt Roof Garden and Night Club, Asheville, Tenn., at the Alcazar Roof in Miami, Fla., and with various circuits.

Of roadshow experience, Kemper has had plenty, having roadshowed over practically every circuit in the South and Southeast, working pictures and stage. For two years he roadshowed State Rights pictures through 26 states. He started in the business by producing home talent productions, minstrels, musicals and society shows.

Born in Fredericksburg, Va., Kemper was educated in the schools of Wellsburg, W. Va.; Smithfield, Ohio; Waynesville College, Waynesburg, Pa.; and High Point College, High Point, N. C. He entered the show game at the age of 20.

When he first became associated with his present employers, Publix, Kemper was stationed at the Stadium and Bijou Theatres, Woonsocket, R. I.; then he attended the Publix Managers' Training School in New York. He was shortly thereafter sent to the Capitol Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, where he was assistant manager of the house. Just recently he received a promotion, and is now managing the Victory in Salt Lake City, and we predict will keep on going up.

His organization affiliations are the Hotel Greeters of America and the Moose. Kemper is unmarried. He entered the show game because he felt that it offered opportunities and was a work of the type that best fitted him. He would pick the show game again if he were just starting out, and if you should ask him whether he ever intended to leave it, the answer would be an emphatic "no."

Ralph Cokain

He is one of the youngest members of the Managers' Round Table Club, but what he lacks in years he doesn't lack in experience. He entered the show game at the age of 14, changing fronts for theatres.

Possessing an aptitude for writing, especially advertising copy, at the age of 15 he turned out an ad that won for him a spot among showmen. Ever since then he has been doing theatre advertising. He is today connected with the Fourth Avenue Amusement Circuit in Louisville, Ky., and prior to this connection had worked for independents. As advertising manager for the company, he is in Marion, Ind., turning out some marvelous work.

Cokain was born in Kokomo, Ind., and attended its public grade and high schools until he moved to Marion, Ind., where he completed his high school education; and during its course he had an opportunity to get to know the town and observe its likes and dislikes regarding amusement. So when he set out to sell the theatregoers on the amusement attractions by means of newspaper ads, he was well qualified to handle the always difficult assignment of dealing with the public.

Nearly every one in town knows Cokain and as a result he is able to effect many valuable tie-ups and things of like nature that will be of aid in show-selling. Knowing that a connection with one of the local organizations would also help him towards showing the people what he thought of the town as well as the show business, he joined the local Order of De Molay in Marion; an excellent move, to be sure. He holds office in the chapter.

Cokain is unmarried. That he likes the show business and thinks a lot of it is seen by his statement that he would pick it out all over again should it be his province to make another choice of a profession. He doesn't expect to leave the show game for any other profession, either.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed acording to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

DEAR HERALD:

Following "LITTLE CAESAR" comes another gangster picture, "THE SECRET SIX," by M-G-M, with Wallace Beery, Marjorie Rambeau, Clark Gable, Johnnie Mack Brown, John Miljean and Jean Harlow. This picture, we presume, is based on the gangster warfare in Chicago, since it has to do in a measure with the committee of six of that city who are waging the fight against organized crime.

The cast in this picture is rather above the average in numbers of worthwhile people of ability. Usually they don't put that many in one picture. Were we to rate this picture from the standpoint of acting and direction we would have to class it far above the grist of entertainment that is being offered of late. Should gangster pictures be the type of entertainment for your audience, we very much doubt if you could find anything better, but we are wondering if they won't overdo the gangster subject. As we viewed "THE SECRET SIX" we would rate it somewhere around 70 per cent entertainment, and we believe you will agree that that is rather above the average.

Cracking Good Story

"SIN SHIP," Radio Pictures, with Louis Wolheim, Hugh Herbert and Mary Astor has a meaningless title tacked onto a cracking good sea story. Mary Astor does soem most excellent acting in this one, and in the passing of Louis Wolheim the screen has lost a very excellent performer and a lovable character.

As we view this picture we would class it as very satisfactory entertainment for the smaller communities. It's clean and is devoid of much of the rough stuff that enters into stories of this type.

Argument for Censorship?

"MEN CALL IT LOVE" by M-G-M. If you are looking for an argument for censorship this picture ought to fill the bill. It is based largely upon the infidelity of married women and is minus a moral ending. If a picture of two married women switching husbands and spending a night with them, even though that is only suggested, as in this case—if that is the kind of entertainment that will appeal to your audience, and if you feel that you can square yourself with your community, you will do well to play "MEN CALL IT LOVE." If that is what MEN call love then we are not broadcasting the fact that we belong to the masculine gender. A few more pictures like this one and we won't be able to fight off censorship, and whose fault will it be, if we may ask you?

Now Comes "Trader Horn"

When Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson made their African jungle pictures, and when the producers gave us "SIMBA" and "AFRICA SPEAKS," we supposed there was nothing more to be shown of jungles, wild animals, snakes, crocodiles, alligators, rhinos, hippos, elephants, kangaroos and monkeys, but now comes Metro-Goldwyn with Harry Carey in "TRADER HORN" and takes you into a natural zoo heretofore unexplored, and if they don't bring you back don't blame Harry, for he has all he can do to take care of himself.

We don't know how much of this picture was taken in Africa, it may have all been taken over there or it may have been taken in Florida, but it's a cinch that no part of it was taken in Nebraska or we wouldn't be living there, for we are just a little bit too close to those durned alligators and rhinos to suit us as it is, no matter whether it is Florida or Africa. We hope it is Africa.

We never supposed that a picture of this kind could glue us to the seat for two hours, for when the boa-constrictors get to wrapping themselves around things, and the rhinos, leopards and lions go to charging right at you at close range, we are inclined to want to shut the front door from the outside, but in this one we were afraid to move for fear some of those hippos and alligators would get their eye on us with an appetite for white meat.

If jungle pictures can be made into 100 per cent entertainment, "TRADER HORN" has reached that goal. You can tell 'em we said so and promise 'em the theatre if they are not satisfied.

Laughs and Doctors

The Fox organization has slipped another one over with Will Rogers in "THE CONNECTICUT YANKEE," and when Fox can't slip one over with Bill the slipping is getting pretty tough. Not that Bill is slippery, or anything like that. We saw Bill in "THEY HAD TO SEE PARIS" and it took us a week to get the kinks out of our transverse colon. We saw him again in "SO THIS IS LONDON" and the doctor told our wife that our hysterics ought to subside by 4:30 the next day (Fox still owes us for that doctor's bill) and now they have given us "THE CONNECTICUT YANKEE" with no guarantee against serious results, and 'taint fair, the public ought to be protected.

There was one thing about that picture we didn't approve of, and that was for King Arthur to give Bill a Knighthood and the title of "SIR BOSS" for that is most apt to swell him up like it did us when they dubbed us "Colonel," although the nearest we ever were to the army was when we tried to enlist in Coxy's army and he turned us down because we wore a white shirt and B.V.D.'s.

If you have a rugged constitution and are not subject to hysterics, by all means see this picture, otherwise better send the hired girl, for Fox doesn't guarantee anything.

Racketeer or Politician

According to a dispatch from New York the fish peddlers down there are paying monthly tribute to the racketeers for protection. They claim to be getting better service from them than they can from the city administration. We don't doubt that in the least. Out in Chicago it is said that the racketeers go halves with the administration and that's why the Democrats were so anxious to horn in on the Republican feed trough. There is this to be said in favor of the racketeer as against a city politician, he has no politics or religion and he shows no favoritism. The big boy on Wall Street looks no better to him than the widow woman with eleven children, as his demands are in accord with their ability to pay; that's why we favor the racketeer rather than the politician.

Thought on Story Material

There is this about the theatre business that we heartily agree with, and that is that anyone connected with the business has license and an annual permit to diagnose the disease and point a remedy. He can even perform an autopsy and hold a postmortem and when he gets through he may know less about what it was that killed the patient than when he began, but he has license to make his diagnosis anyhow and that lets us in without a diploma.

Were we to express an opinion as to who is responsible for the success or failure of this business we would say that it rested almost entirely upon the shoulders of three men, the one who selects the story for the picture, the one who casts the players and the one who handles the megaphone.

The best exhibitor in the world can't put a poor picture over, while any ordinary buckwheat can do business with a good picture. It is much easier to swim downstream with the current than it is upstream against it.

We may not know much about this business, in fact we are willing to admit it without argument, but we have made some guesses in our time that have turned out to be correct, and our guess is right now that if more intelligent thought is put into story material and less thought into bass drum publicity this business will right itself with surprising rapidity.

You can't give the public nothing and charge them for it and make them like it. They will take castor oil occasionally, but only for physical purposes, as Uncle 'Leazer said to Aunt Polly. Nobody ever heard of a GOOD picture being a universal failure. Nobody ever heard of a BAD picture breaking any house records. What we are trying to say is that you can't travel as far or as comfortable in a wheelbarrow as you can in an Austin although there is but little difference in the size. Give any punk exhibitor good pictures and he will make a success of his business. Give him bad ones and all the bass drum publicity in the world won't save him. Are we right or wrong? SHOOT.

Casting in the South Seas

A THOUGHT for Hollywood's casting directors is presented in the highly successful precedent of the French missionaries on the isle of Hivaoa in the Marquesas, where for sixty years the natives have been presenting a sincere version of the Passion Play. The Fathers cast lepers in the leper roles and annually seek out the biggest crook on the island to play Judas. The Catholic World records that for this reason it has been necessary to use bits of crockery instead of the genuine thirty pieces of silver, and that at the last season's production Judas looted the mission, tried to abduct the pretty Magdalen, stole a boat and escaped to the Paumotoas.

An Industry's Conscience

THE dramatic response of leaders of the industry to MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S exclusive presentation of the facts and status of the John C. Flinn prosecution in the Pathe studio fire matter, is an encouraging evidence that the world of the motion picture has conscience, sympathy and a memory. Mr. Flinn's long record of sincerity and rectitude has not been established in vain. An appreciation of his position and his proper merits is also an expression of the industry's own self-respect.

An Effective Machine

IN the flow of the new season's product announcements now bursting into the floration of published pages is observable a greater diversity of material for the screen than in any prior year's offerings. This is to be taken as a healthy development, whether it signifies a new independence of thought among producers, or whether it just possibly reflects a degree of uncertainty in anticipation of the whims of the market. The outlook for a general run of product of box office value is the more promising, too, since it may now be taken as proved fact that among the established producers the production machine has undergone its novice period with sound and dialogue and can be counted upon to deliver a competent product from any really worthy piece of material. The exhibitor can now accept an announcement of a production with as much, and perhaps more, assurance of what it will be upon delivery as he could at the high tide of quality production in the days of the silent picture. The product is definitely out of the experimental phases of sound's first two years.

Further, resulting in part from the box office stresses and problems of the depression period, it may be accepted that the industry's masters of production have for the coming season devoted an extraordinarily intensive attention to material. There are evidences now of an increasing tendency to put each picture squarely on its own responsibility as a unit of screen merchandise, with a considerably more clearly defined dependence on story and general entertainment quality and less of the old school commitments to sheer star name value for selling appeal.

Let's Go Places!

ONE of the basic human impulses is to go places. The motion picture theatre is a place to go, and in that sense can well be considered as an amusement investment somewhat apart from the question of the entertainment material presented on the screen.

The screen theatre has demonstrated itself as a "place to go" against the competition of all the other amusements on earth, including the radio and the home motion picture. It can also be counted upon to take care of itself if, when, and as we have television, and against the bravely promised invasion of the automat type theatre promoted by Trans-Lux.

Admitting the vital importance of screen product, it is still a paramount concern to the exhibitor to so establish and conduct his house as an institution in the community he serves as to make it a "place to go."

Mr. M. A. Lightman of MPTOA observed the other day that the manager who makes himself a personality in the community and his theatre a place with the air of welcome about it, "need have no fears of competition from robot theatres, whether the robot be a man or a machine."

"Not so long ago," remarked Mr. Lightman, "a bright young man of highly rated business ability came from the Pacific Coast to the management of an important theatre in the South. He was crisply businesslike in his manner and he affected the West Coast habit of plus fours and sport shoes. He was snappy and efficient. In cold figures he was a good business man, everywhere except at the box office. The community took offense at the golf pants and the young man was moved on to the elsewhere.

Not All Our Job

WRITING in Current History for March, Mr. George Kent appears pained to record: "The movies, become audible, are now national and seen to foster nationalism at its worst. Since the talkies arrived there have been riots or disturbances in almost every country of Europe. In Prague a theatre was bombed because it showed a film in the German language, although all the Czechs in Prague speak German. Approximately the same thing occurred in Warsaw, where anti-German feeling also runs high. In Paris a gallery of Montmartrois hooted a film in English until the manager was obliged to return the money they had paid for their seats. Even in England the talkie with its American accent brings sneers."

Now after all, while the motion picture has been lauded by its friends as the servant of all mankind, it is not entirely fair to assume for the industry a responsibility for the peace of the world.

More and more as the institution of the screen develops it must be recognized as a medium for expression, a tool and an instrument by which anything can be said. The responsibility for what is said is upon the sayer thereof, not the tools. The printing press is never denounced for the sins of the publisher.

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

ONE of the earliest victims of the new ban against visitors just ordered by practically all the studios was none other than Will H. Hays—himself—in person. Having an appointment with the chief executive at one of the studios, Mr. Hays walked up to the reception desk and, after waiting his turn in a line of six or seven persons, gave his name. The regular information clerk was at lunch, his seat being filled by a boy. The boy nodded his understanding and Mr. Hays stepped back to wait. He waited—and waited.

Ten minutes later he again proffered his name and business; again the boy nodded his understanding and again Mr. Hays stepped back and waited. Another 10 minutes passed. He again approached the desk and asked if any message had come from the office of the studio chief.

"I ain't had time to phone him yet," remarked the boy, nonchalantly. "I'll get him pretty soon."

Mr. Hays seldom loses his temper, but he was—well, a bit vexed. "Perhaps you didn't understand," he said mildly. "I am Mr. Hays—Will H. Hays."

"Oh, yeah?" replied the youth. "Well, that's all right with me."

And just at that moment another visitor, who knew Mr. Hays, leaned over the counter and said:

"That's right, kid. He's Will Hays."

Whereupon the youth announced Mr. Hays at once and spent the rest of the afternoon wondering how he was going to hold his job.

The Ocean Back of Him

A minor executive sitting in a chair which has to deal with a considerable array of creative personnel in production operations last week made a series of appointments involving problems, setting the date for last Monday. On the Saturday previous he sailed for Europe on the Isle de France, incidentally also leaving behind him letters dismissing two of the more ably combative members of the staff. One of the men disappointed in his appointment had come from the Pacific Coast for the purpose of the conversation that never will be had.

Dreams Invaded

Studio acquaintances of Rudy Vallee, who incidentally cinemaed just enough to get into this page, say that he always plants a pretty lady in sight off stage from the microphone when he does his heavy crooning. The presence of this stimulating inspirational personality should not be permitted to become known to the great unseen audience of romantically minded ladies who listen for their own personal purposes of reverie, for Rudy is theirs only, truly.

A NEWSREEL competitor interested in the progress of the Trans-Lux turnstile automat newsreel theatre project, has been clocking the weekly attendance at the first of these theatres, the Trans-Lux at Fifty-eighth street and Madison avenue. The clocker's reports for four weeks attendance were progressively: 18,000, 14,000, 12,000, and 10,000, with an estimated figure for this week, calculated after Wednesday's total, at about 8,000.

Springtime Story

It is related that Mr. P. G. Wodehouse, more in whimsy than in earnest, when he arrived in Hollywood on a writing contract announced plaintively to the management of the studio that he positively could write in only an English garden atmosphere. There was deferential attention and he was promised a writing garden. Two days later he appeared at the studio to find a tiny workshop cottage in a charming garden set, with a babbling brook thrown in. He grinned and went to work. Presently he had occasion to be absent from the studio for some days. He came back to find the garden, brook and all, had vanished. Presumably some efficiency man finding it idle had sent it back to the property room. Mr. Wodehouse then, so the yarn runs, made considerable protest. His art could bloom only in a garden. Now what should he do? There were reassurances and the next day there was an even bigger and better garden. Of such is the kingdom of art.

What Price Platitudes

James Nannery presently will break onto the newsreel screen with this line, "A life of crime does not pay." He got so much a word for facing the camera and microphone. Suspicious persons have been unkind enough to say the newsreel concern merely wanted Mr. Nannery on the screen, and that his platitude has all the merit of the old fashioned "moral lesson" finish on the dirty drama.

REpresentatives of the Soviet government film activities are reported to have made a deal with a New York newsreel studio for the synchronization and application of talk strips to an eight reel assembly of pictorial material setting forth the activities of Russian industrialism under Stalin's "Five Year Plan," the arrangement for sound studio treatment being in part payment for newsreel release of excerpts. The ramifications of policy involved are said to be causing considerable agitation in the minds of a number of persons in high places. The screen has had exceedingly little newsreel film from Russia under the Soviet and most of what has been offered has been heavily burdened with propaganda import.

Comedian Plays Heavy Role

One of the better known comedians in pictures whose weight is well over 200 pounds recently visited a casino in Hollywood.

The comic who plays roulette in a systematic manner found that whenever he played a certain combination the croupier leaned heavily on the right side of the table. When this happened the comedian always lost. Thinking that perhaps he might try this technique himself, he leaned on the table at the same time and, with about 100 pounds advantage in weight, found that he won more consistently. The croupier apparently tipped off the manager when he saw the big boy was onto his game, for it was not many minutes before the guest was brought a nice comfortable chair and urged to use it. This he declined with thanks and as a result won back all he had lost and a few dollars more.

A robust young executive was called to an important post in the New York office of a producer-distributor a few months ago in the hope that he could perform a miracle in the face of a difficult market. The miracle has not arrived and the young man is about to go on a long journey over the bounding sea.

Comes the Jungle Editor

A newsreel organization notable for its array of special "name" editors has acquired the service of "Mona," a chimpanzee, said to have marked ability, to appear in a series of five news stories. Presumably "Mona" will be announced as the simian-and-jungle editor.

JOHN C. FLINN GOES TO TOMBS AS INDUSTRY RALLIES TO HIS DEFENSE

Take Habeas Corpus Action After Surrender

Plea Based on Contention of Illegal Indictment Placing Former Pathe Official in Double Jeopardy

The long ordeal of John C. Flinn, these many months "on the spot" for the Pathe studio fire, now approaches the final chapter, whatever it may be, in the courts of New York.

As this issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD comes off the presses Friday morning, Mr. Flinn was to be in court before Judge Frankenthaler in a habeas corpus action, following his surrender on his bond, placing him legally in custody. The habeas corpus plea is based on the contention that the indictment of Mr. Flinn in connection with the death of Catharine Porter, one of the 10 fire victims, is illegal as placing him in double jeopardy, after the refusal of the first grand jury to indict him for the death of Edna Burford, another dancer victim of the fire.

If counsel for Mr. Flinn and his co-defendant, Henry F. Lally, prevail in the habeas corpus action the case is presumably practically ended. It is deemed unlikely that the political situation which motivated the persecution indicated by the drive for action by the second submission to a grand jury, under the thin legal device of using the name of another victim of the same fire, will again resort to such an expedient. It would clearly be a reductio ad absurdum to continue the persecution under the guise of prosecution down through the list of the 10 victims of the same fire.

Meanwhile should the habeas corpus action fail and not be made the subject of appeal or other legal device, the trial of Flinn and Lally would be called on May 21. It was set down for that date this week by Judge Levine in General Sessions, as a postponement of the original date of May 6.

Thursday morning Mr. Flinn appeared in court before Justice Frankenthaler of the Supreme Court and went through the grim formality of being taken to Tombs prison in custody and thence back to court to be released on a new bond until the next day as a result of a one-day postponement of the argument on the writ of habeas corpus.

Many Thanks!

Chicago—It's an ill wind that blows nobody good. Young bandits held up the box office of the house in which "Little Caesar" is playing, and got away with $1800. The publicity, according to the manager's estimate, was worth many times that amount.

Doubt Grand Jury Move Will Be Tried Again

Rejection of Habeas Corpus Application Would Mean Trial of Pathe Fire Case May 21

That was a gloomy, depressing moment in the life of this John C. Flinn who in years before as a reporter for the New York Herald wrote many a tale of the tragedies of both innocent and guilty men who passed through the great gates in that grim wall of gray stained stone.

The industry's numerous friends of Flinn have risen in sympathetic expression following the MOTION PICTURE HERALD's publication last week of its article by Lin Bonner on the background of the persecutions in this prosecution and the strange apathies of those who let Flinn become a victim of a political situation, without the raising of a voice in his behalf in the days of the beginnings of his difficulties. From the array of letters and telegrams a number of the communications received by the HERALD are presented on this page. Meanwhile, declining to make a statement for publication, officers of the present administration of Pathe Exchange, Inc., asserted that the corporation is paying the traveling

INDUSTRY'S LEADERS SPEAK IN APPRECIATION OF FLINN

"In my twenty-five years of motion picture experience, nothing has shocked me so profoundly as seeing John Flinn put on the spot, as you express it. This industry has been honored by having a man of his type active in its affairs. If it does not go the limit to bring about him complete vindication, it will shame itself forever.

"I know something of the mental torture he must have suffered all these months. On one occasion I was summoned to answer to a charge of manslaughter in a film fire and while the summons proved to be a mistake, I suffered as much as though it had been real. Your story of last week showed that this public pillorying of John Flinn is another grotesque mistake—but meanwhile the victim of it is living in a mental hell.

"I assume there is some purpose, some program back of the story you published. Whatever it is, if it will contribute toward the exoneration of Mr. Flinn, I am for it to the limit of my resources."

—R. H. Cochrane

"May I be one of the first to thank MOTION PICTURE HERALD for its enlightening defense of John C. Flinn's position in the matter of the Pathe fire. Your article contains real facts in the case, which I, together with many others in the industry, have felt for a long time should be known in connection with this persecution. It will be flagrant miscarriage of justice if John Flinn is not completely exonerated."

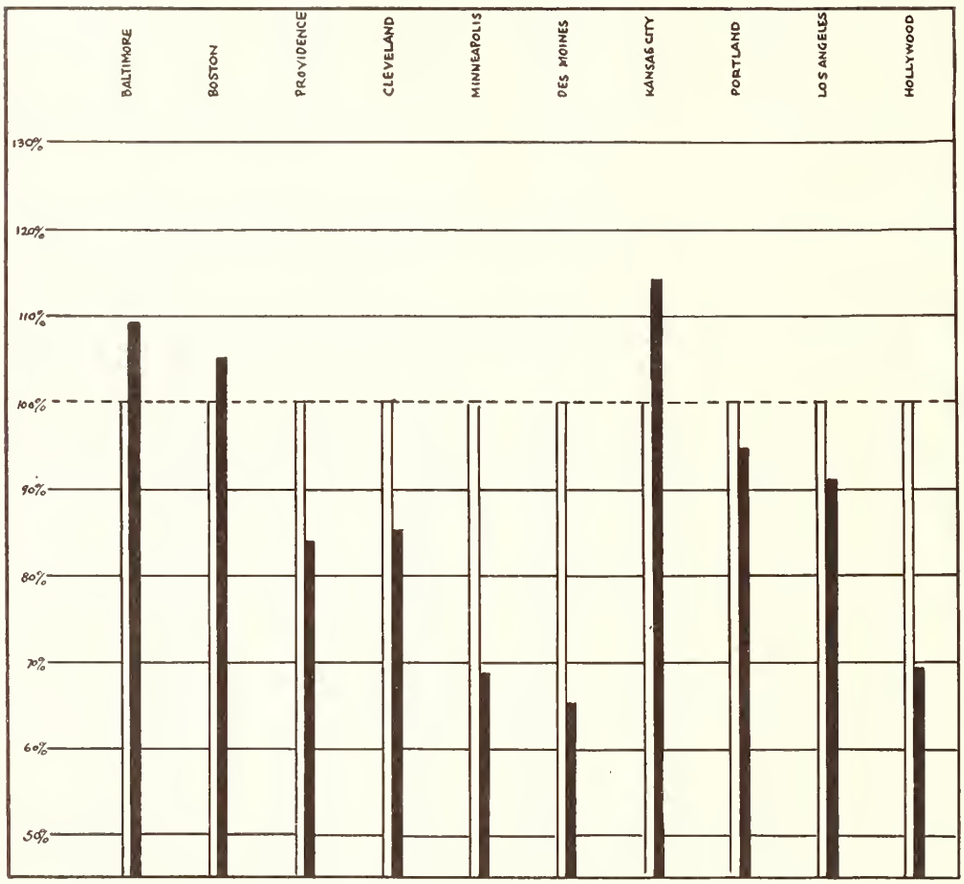
—Charles H. Christie

"May I heartily endorse the stand you have taken for John C. Flinn. It is time others than his friends know real facts."

—Al. E. Christie

"Your presentation of facts about John Flinn's position in the matter of the Pathe fire is a splendid piece of work. Everyone who knows him and knows the facts is convinced he is absolutely blameless and your article proves this by setting forth his exact position."

—E. W. Hammons



"I want to commend your defense of John C. Flinn against the continual published attacks on him in connection with the Pathe studio fire in New York. We who know John, realize the injustice of these attacks. I hope your courageous attitude may give him courage."

—Neil S. McCarthy

"John C. Flinn has been an intimate acquaintance of mine for the past fifteen years, and during much of that time, he was closely associated with me in our company. I know him to be a highly respected executive in the motion picture industry.

"There never has been any question as to his integrity and fair business dealings at any time, and I have always had the highest regard for him."

—Jesse L. Lasky

KENNEDY ENDS LAST FILM CONNECTION

Announcement of Resignation as Pathe Chairman and Director Follows Spectacular Activity

Joseph P. Kennedy, who for the last several years has been a figure of frequently spectacular activity in the motion picture industry, has severed his last film connection and is sailing for Europe this weekend for an extended sojourn. Official word of his action comes in a statement from the offices of Pathe Exchange, Inc., saying:

At a meeting of the board of directors of Pathe Exchange, Inc., held Thursday afternoon, Mr. Joseph P. Kennedy presented his resignation as chairman of the board and as a director. Mr. Kennedy for several months has desired to sever his connection with the company, but has continued at the request of the directors. It was felt, however, that with the consummation of the sale of certain of Pathe's assets to Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, the directors were not warranted in asking Mr. Kennedy to continue against his wishes. At the same meeting Mr. Stuart W. Webb was elected executive vice-president. Mr. Arthur B. Poole, treasurer of the company, and Mr. George Armsby were elected directors to fill existing vacancies.

Mr. Kennedy arose from East Boston. He went to Harvard and thence into the office of the state bank examiner of Massachusetts and became presently the president, succeeding his father, of an East Boston banking house. He married Rose Fitzgerald, daughter of Mayor John F. Fitzgerald of Boston. He established numerous contacts, financial and political, among them the banking house of Hayden Stone & Company. In the World War period he acquired a managerial post with Bethlehem Ship Building Corporation at the Fore River yards of that concern and there built up a personal staff which was destined to follow him through to Broadway.

Contact with Steve Fitzgibbons, exhibitor and exchange manager for the Robertson-Cole concern, brought him into contact with

Innerarity Quits Pathe to Enter Private Practice

Hollywood (QP)—Lewis Innerarity, secretary and general counsel for Pathe Exchange, Inc., now on the Coast for the corporation, has resigned on his own initiative and will enter the private practice of law in New York, with Pathe listed among his clients. Mr. Innerarity joined the Pathe executive staff May 20, 1918, 13 years ago. He, among executives, has been the sole survivor of the many swift changes of administration in the last decade of Pathe. In that period he has written contracts with many famous producers and stars running in millions.

Paramount Has Dreiser, So Goldwyn Takes Lewis

Sinclair Lewis yesterday joined Samuel Goldwyn in an agreement conveying to the producer the rights to "Arrowsmith" as a future story for Ronald Colman. It was for "Arrowsmith" that Lewis was offered the Pulitzer Prize in 1926, and which he summarily rejected.

Goldwyn has invited Lewis to Hollywood to prepare his own adaptation and treatment of the story.

"Lewis's probable acceptance comes at a time when his bitter enemy, Theodore Dreiser, is waging war on one of the picture studios (Paramount) for a controversial screen transcription of 'An American Tragedy,'" stated the Goldwyn announcement.

RKO Net for 1931 Quarter Is Off $608,651 from '30 Period

RKO and subsidiaries reported for the first quarter of 1931 net profit of $1,206,252, equivalent to 44 cents per share, compared with $1,815,903, or 87 cents per share in the corresponding period of 1930. The net is $608,651 less than the same period in 1930.

Profit from operations during the first quarter of 1931 amounted to $1,360,899, compared with $2,000,404 in the first quarter of 1930. Dividends on preferred stock totaled $193,034, compared with $208,280 in the corresponding 1930 period.

Cleveland—Due to high operating costs, the possibility of closing and reducing operating schedules is strong. Poor attendance is also blamed.

PATHE STOCKHOLDERS STAGE THEIR BATTLE ROYAL, NO HOLDS BARRED

Some of the minority holders were unable to join the Protective Committee in its fight because they lacked the ten cents per share fee assigned to each holder to cover expenses of the legal battle.

When Stuart Webb, Pathe Exchange executive vice-president, and chairman of the meeting, placed in work the machinery for electing an inspector of ballots, stockholder James P. Ferris asked Mr. Webb, "How many Pathe employees are included in the vote?"

"That's not pertinent," stated Webb (with face flushed).

"It may not be pertinent," Ferris replied, "but it would be interesting to know!"

Jacob Conn then offered in nomination the name of L. M. Vincent, author of the minority stockholders' $20,000,000 damage suit against Pathe.

Vincent was nominated following W. Fay, a former Pathe assistant office manager.

"What difference is there between Vincent and Fay?" bellowed someone in the ranks.

"None," was Conn's report, "except that Fay is a Pathe employee and Vincent is trying to save for the stockholders what little is left of the corporation."

When Stuart Webb was challenged as the meeting's chairman, he was asked by Conn how much Pathe stock he owned.

"None," replied Webb.

"I don't blame you," said Conn.

Mr. Webb, incidentally, will be found in charge of liquidating the assets of the much-fought-over company.

"Jake" Conn made a dramatic plea from the floor for "rights" of the minority group, addressing the rather dignified gathering in this manner:

"Ladies and gentlemen—and those who have been ordered to be here."

Dominick & Dominick, Kreeger stated, had joined the ranks of fighting minority stockholders. . . . "This Wall Street house has come in with 300 shares," he said.

George Armsby, director, arrived at the meeting just in time to be served with a summons in the stockholders suit. . . Someone introduced him to Conn, who suddenly turned away, saying, "Pardon, Mr. Armsby, I'll be right back." . . . And when Conn returned he brought with him a brand new 14-page legal document answerable in New York Supreme Court along with other defendants.

Conn told stockholders at their private minority meeting that the "A" may some day get $50 a share on an out-of-court settlement. But Kreeger told the same group that both "A" and common now are "valueless."

Webb Maintains Dignity In Stormy Session

Conn and Kreeger Lead Belligerents in Latest Round of Fight Over Sale of RKO

The stockholders of Pathe Exchange, Inc., met for their annual free-for-all and battle royal, no holds barred and no fouls forbidden, on Tuesday of this week.

The function was held in the arena of the last previous jousting at 25 West Forty-Fifth street, next door to the home of the grand old Rooster, the screen's oldest trademark. Stuart Webb, member of the board of directors through the Joseph P. Kennedy administration and newly elected executive vice president, presided with dignity and reserve through a stormy session.

The issue continued to be the sale of a considerable array of the active assets of the company to RKO, resulting in the new subsidiary concern known as RKO Pathe. Jacob Conn, an exhibitor of Providence, R. I., an eloquent, vigorous and spectacular figure in the last previous meeting when the stockholders were called upon for ratification of the sale, and Harry L. Kreeger, attorney for minority stockholders, led the belligerents on the floor of the meeting.

At the previous meeting two guardians of peace in the personage of detective agency operatives in field gray uniforms with heavy sidearms stood by the presiding officer's table, but at Tuesday's session one New York City policeman was the sole expression of force. Also the rear freight elevator service which was made available for the convenience of administration executives feeling the pressure and heat of conflict at the prior session was not requisitioned for this meeting.

Officials Noticeably Absent

Officials who were prominently identified with Pathe Exchange, Inc., in high executive capacities before the RKO deal were noticeably absent from the meeting, with but few exceptions. Officials in attendance were George Armsby, a director; Stuart Webb, L. D. Burton, a board member, and Arthur Poole, Pathe treasurer.

The many sensational charges of "breach of trust" hurled at Pathe directors went unanswered, the Pathe officers in charge of the meeting apparently being content only with reelection of the old board members and obtaining ratification of the acts of the board during the past fiscal year. Both purposes were finally accomplished after much hedging by both majority and minority stockholders and following considerable interference by complaining minority owners, who voiced loud and vigorous protests of the company's management and of the deal which sold to RKO practically all operating assets of the corporation.

Minority stockholders now have pending a $20,000,000 damage suit against Pathe

100 FEATURES FROM INDEPENDENTS IN NEW SEASON AS MARKET OPENS

Thirty Companies Lining Up for 1931-32 Race

At Least 300 Short Pictures Also Will Be Made For State Right Release

The independent producer-distributor is about to reclaim that position in the industry's structure which was his before sound and its intricate mechanical and financial workings placed him in a state of almost total inactivity.

Practically all important independent theatres have now equipped with sound; a more substantial response and favorable reaction has been felt from independents' bankers, while the condition of state right exchanges, after a hectic two-year period, now are beginning to assume a more healthy aspect.

The new season will start off with approximately 30 independent producers ready to hurdle the barrier which has kept many of them out of the race since 1928. Included in this group are at least a dozen new enterprises, among them ventures sponsored by Harry Asher, of Boston; M. H. Hoffman, Larry Darmour, M. D. Sikawitt, who organized Headline Pictures; I. J. Kandel, Ideal Pictures; M. H. Hoffman, Jr., of Allied Pictures; Hollywood Syndicate, Charles Hutchinson, Reed Productions, Liberty Productions and Welshay Pictures.

Many Others to Continue

W. Ray Johnston will launch his new Monogram Pictures Corporation. John R. Freuler has outlined an elaborate new feature schedule for Big 4 Film, while George Batchellor, of Chesterfield; Nat Levine, Mascot; Dave Mountain, Richmount; L. E. Goetz, Bryan Foy, Samuel Cummins, Irving Briskin, Larry Darmour, William Alexander, Congo Pictures, and A. Pollak, of Hollywood Pictures, are expected to complete plans shortly for the new season.

M. J. Weisfeldt will continue with Talking Picture Epics, and so will Harry Thomas with his First Division Pictures. Simple Simon Comedies, which started late this season, will release a series of shorts in 1931-32.

At least 100 features and more than 300 short features will be made by these independent companies and distributed through state right exchanges during the new season.

M-G-M to Make Sport Series With Famous Track Athletes

Exhibitors Find Boomerang In London Sunday Show Bill

Mass Meetings Held to Protest Compulsory Charity—General Council Is Pressed To Fight

By W. H. MOORING

London—Exhibitors are conducting mass meetings all over the country in protest against the compulsory charity feature of the Sunday opening bill, which has passed second reading and provides for Sunday amusements on a local option basis.

The draft bill actually reads to the effect that such amounts as may be determined by the licensing authority to represent the profits from cinema entertainments given on Sundays shall be paid to charitable objects approved by the licensing authority.

When at first it became apparent that legislation to regularize the Sunday entertainments situation would have to be introduced, leading members of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, hoping to minimize parliamentary opposition to a measure legalizing Sunday entertainment, laid special stress upon the fact that until declared illegal by the high courts under obsolescent statutes, Sunday shows in London and other cities had resulted in huge sums of money being paid to charity. The practice of charitable contributions from Sunday takings was started by the London county council many years ago, but whereas under conditions then obtaining there was no direct interference by the authorities, if the new bill becomes law, the authorities will not only scrutinize accounts but may even dictate what sum shall be regarded as representing the profit of any particular show.

May Regret Stand

The C E A is likely to regret that it did not turn down the charity idea from the beginning of this legal development, and go all out for the right to open theatres on Sundays as a natural concession to public rights and public demand.

There is a growing demand for all kinds of Sunday laxation, and but for the fact that the die-hards are organized to the teeth while the champions of a free Sabbath are not, the coming of the Continental Sunday to Great Britain would not be long deferred.

At the moment there is a strong group of politicians pledged to oppose the principle of Sunday entertainments. Their pledges have been obtained by the women's vigilance societies, the religious organizations, and the brewers, who have united long ago to oppose Sunday concessions.

C. E. A. Pressed to Fight

Until last week, the cinema industry has done nothing either to foster public resentment of a dull Sunday or to pull political strings towards getting a brighter one.

Now mass meetings of exhibitors are being conducted.

Something New for Ads

St. Louis—An experiment in theatre advertising is being tried out here as the result of an agreement between Advertising Director Milt Harris of the Fox and the Post-Dispatch, through which amusement ads appear on the same page with the daily radio programs. The aim is to determine whether theatre advertising attracts more attention on the radio page or on the regular amusement page.

One result of the experiment will be to test the theory that the reader tears out his regular radio program page to keep it by him during broadcasting periods. If this proves true, the argument is advanced that the amusement advertisements might attract more attention on the radio page.

Keep Organists If Double Shows Go

Balaban & Katz will retain all its organists if double featuring is abolished before June 1. Otherwise an order issued for a three-months "vacation," starting May 15, will become effective. At the end of that period, four will be reassigned for the largest theatres which will not use double features, regardless of whether an agreement regarding the policy is reached this summer.

Hays Members Told to Eliminate "Crime" in All Ads

Member companies of the MPPDA have received further warning against salacious advertisements and suggestive art, with home offices immediately relaying the order to local staffs and men in the field, particularly those on theatre assignments.

Salacious advertising, suggestive art and other factors of a character which makes an attempt to attract business by an appeal to indecency were again ordered out.

The Hays office, it is understood, has officially ordered that the crime element in all gangster pictures be played down.

Fox immediately dispatched word to theatre managers declaring taboo all guns or characters holding guns in lobby displays and out-front paper.

Thank You, Teacher!

Professor Winifred Cullis of the University of London, guest of the English Speaking Union here, said visits of English school teachers here are helping to dispel the idea prevalent in Great Britain that all American people are like the types seen in the American motion pictures. She said returning teachers tell the children of their experiences here, changing the impression "that the lives of Americans are one exciting adventure after another, that they all carry revolvers and are rather a queer lot and not quite so respectable at that."

Rejected MGM Boost of $600,000, She Says

Conference With Schnitzer Was on Renting Space for Next Picture, Declares Star-Producer

Gloria Swanson, in New York for a "purely business visit" this week denied various reports of business frictions in her producing affairs, specifically denying a rumor of a parting of the ways with United Artists. Making emphatic that she was continuing her present connection, she remarked that last summer, prior to the signing of her latest contract, she refused an offer from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer which would have given her $600,000 more than her present arrangement.

Miss Swanson made this statement when questioned regarding the reports of a conflict with Samuel Goldwyn over her next picture, just before she left Hollywood for New York. According to the actress, both Mr. Goldwyn and Joseph M. Schenck approached her with an offer relative to her next film, "Rock-a-Bye," which she planned producing as an independent member of United Artists.

They offered to buy her story, produce it, thereby relieving her of the attendant responsibility and "worry," and give her 50 per cent of the gross intake on the film. The proposition appealed to Miss Swanson, she said, but they offered her much less for her story than she already had expended in purchase and preparation, since she had had the story for eight months with two scenarists preparing it. "It is very nearly ready to shoot," she said. When she refused to consider their offer Goldwyn accused her of showing insufficient consideration for her associates.

Met Schnitzer on Renting Space

Her conference with Joseph Schnitzer before leaving Hollywood, she said, was relative to renting space on the Radio lot for "Rock-a-Bye," which she describes as "the best story I have ever had." Needing a great deal of space, Miss Swanson said she would make the film on either the Radio or Universal lot. Cast and director have not been chosen. Space was the sole object of her conversation with Schnitzer, she declared. Definite plans for space will be arranged through her attorney, Lloyd Wright, she said.

Miss Swanson said she has two contracts with United Artists, an "A" and "B." The "A" agreement has been in force since 1925, being the original contract made when she joined the first group of four, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin and David Wark Griffith. This calls for one film each year, United Artists to produce, and the actress to be paid a regular salary.

In order to enable her to make more than one each year, which is unsatisfactory, Miss Swanson has the "B" contract, by which

Pennsylvania Is First Picked for Erpi's New Plan

Electrical Research Products is understood to have actively launched its campaign to rehabilitate 5,000 theatres throughout the country, details of which first appeared in Motion Picture Herald in January.

Pennsylvania has been picked as the site of the first concentrated drive to rehabilitate theatres which are in a bad plight. Darkened houses are not the initial object of the plan, Erpi intending to negotiate the plan with those unstabilized houses which now are operating.

Fifty contracts have already been lined up in Pennsylvania, it is understood.

Pictures are arranged for by Electrical Research, which installs Western Electric equipment and reconditions the house on a percentage payment plan.

Owner Gomez also wants $5,000 for trespassing, $500 for counsel fees and $50 for costs. Maybe it's not so much fun being a sheriff, after all!

MGM SALES STAFF STANDS OPPOSED TO AD REELS AND DOUBLE FEATURES

Feist Sees Serious Injury To Buyer and Seller

Fifteen Stars to Make Half of 48 Features for Next Season— 197 Shorts Planned

By SHERWIN A. KANE

[Pictures and sidelights on M-G-M's Chicago convention are published beginning on page 62]

Chicago—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's sales force stands on record as opposed to the exhibition of sponsored reels and to double or multi-featuring. The MGM national managers' conference convened at the Drake hotel Sunday and Monday to receive the announcement of the company's production schedule of 48 features and 197 short feature releases, and to discuss sales and industry problems.

Both practices, Felix Feist, general sales manager, said, were opposed to the best interests of the industry at large and, if persisted in, could bring serious and lasting injury to the exhibitor and the distributor.

Exhibition of sponsored films, Feist said, comprises not only a form of "adulterated entertainment," but, in the long run, is offensive to theatre patronage which resents any commercial intrusion on its selected programs and will seek other forms of entertainment, if forced, to avoid such intrusions. Sponsored films in the theatre, too, he warned, will be directly responsible for dissipating the good will of such valuable agencies as newspapers and periodicals of general circulation, on whom the industry must rely for much of its public sales work.

Charges False Values

Double featuring, according to the objections raised, means a sale of a false value to theatre patronage and the permanent harm such policy might do the industry if persisted in and permitted to spread.

"The principal objection to the practice," Feist said, "is that there are not enough good pictures to permit double featuring on a large scale without resultant injury to theatre patronage. Whatever affects theatre business affects the industry at large, and we object to the practice for that reason.

"Double featuring is certain, eventually, to drive patronage away from the theatre. The dearth of good features makes it an impossibility to continue on a double featuring policy for any length of time without offering theatre patronage false value. Even one good and one bad feature on the same program is unsatisfactory. The exhibitor has sold his customers on the basis of a bargain show. If they are disappointed in one of the features offered they are more apt to feel that they have been victimized than that they have shared in a bargain. A few such experiences repeated and the exhibitor has succeeded in driving patronage away from his theatre and from motion pictures."

Metro's new short subject schedule will offer ample material for special children's programs, Feist said. Special efforts, it was decided, should be made by Metro salesmen and bookers to build up short subject selections which suitably would augment features designed for special children's shows.

M-G-M Locks the Door on Props of "Sin"

Hollywood—Outlawed by the State of California, but legal for film purposes only, many thousands of dollars in gambling equipment, firearms and other lethal instruments are stored under lock and key in a special compartment in the M-G-M property warehouse.

There are, for instance, enough gambling layouts to start a fair-sized Monte Carlo, roulette wheels, faro banks, chuck-a-luck cages, crap tables and other games of chance. These find frequent use in films but, as soon as removed from sets, are carefully dismantled and stored separately so that no one key would open all the doors in which the various parts are kept.

In the ordnance line are machine guns, rifles, tear bombs, pistols, swords, rapiers, spears, cutlasses and other weapons banned by law. They are stored "broken" so that, even if stolen, they could not be used. Cane-swords, illegal outside of museums, are put away with the cane portion missing. Revolvers are minus barrels and machine guns are stripped of actions.

Other illegal weapons, frequently used in pictures, are brass knuckles, blackjacks, sand-bags, "billies," sap-sticks, and tear-guns, while the legal collection of illegal equipment includes masks, handcuffs, gags, burglar tools, loaded dice, marked cards and daggers.

National Circuits to Slash Expenses in Big Economy Move

Approaching Slump of Summer and Desire to Increase Return on Investments Prompt Decision

Operating expenses and overhead charges of theatres belonging to the majority of national producer-owned circuits will be radically reduced, beginning immediately.

Widespread adoption of double featuring policies, the usual slump in summer receipts, coupled with unfavorable box office reaction to the present economic era of depression, and an attempt to increase the return on theatre investments are, it is understood, all important influencing factors in the new economy move.

One national circuit is understood to have ordered as much as a 50 per cent reduction in operating expenses of its theatres, while intended wholesale elimination of organists by Publix in Chicago and New England, and possibly other spots, is understood to be a direct outgrowth of double featuring, which has raised expenses considerably and necessitated cuts elsewhere in the house budget.

Denies Fox Has Gaumont Control

London—Official denial that Fox controls Gaumont Pictures, operating 300 British theatres, is made by Gaumont following release by Fox in London of a statement concerning the recent refinancing of Fox, in which it was pointed out that Fox owns 47½ per cent of the voting stock and approximately 75 per cent of all outstanding stock of Metropolis and Bradford Trust Co., Ltd., which, in turn, owns 65 per cent of the ordinary share capital of British-Gaumont.

Following release of the Fox statement, Gaumont announced:

"Apart from the implications in this statement that the Gaumont-British Picture Corp. is controlled by American film interests, which is entirely incorrect, it is also untrue that Fox Film Corporation, or any other American corporation, controls the Metropolis and Bradford Trust Co.

"The essential facts of the situation," states Gaumont, can be summarized as follows:

"The control of the Metropolis and Bradford Trust Company is vested in the 10,000 voting shares of that company, of which 4,950 are held by Messrs. Ostrer and 4,950 by Fox Film Corporation. The balance of 100 shares is held by the independent chairman, Lord Lee of Fareham, who was nominated and appointed by the two parties, jointly with whom, and in case of their disagreement, the ultimate control of the company therefore rests."

Mermaids having become screen players, of course, the casting is here being done by such modern folk — specifically, Roberta Gale, Rochelle Hudson and Lita Chevret of Radio, which probably accounts for various notable distinctions.*

BRUNETTE. (Left) Another new face among the screen's new beauties, Lita Chevret, who, joining Radio, joins the year's ranks of promising players.

IMPROMPTU GOLF. Not a new game. Indeed, an old one—at least, so many seem to play golf as though just on the spur of the moment. In this case, however, a bit of fun of Jack Warner's at the Warner convention in Atlantic City—perpetrated with Dan Michalove and Moe Silver looking on.

SCREEN'S NEW YOUNGSTER. A film player by inheritance, or association, or something, is Delmar Watson, for he is next to the youngest of the Eight Watson Kids, all of whom are in pictures. It is Delmar's work in First National's "We Three" that promises him stardom.

A General Theatres Equipment executive has stated that his company, a Harley Clarke enterprise, is in no way involved in the recent failure of Pynchon and Company, brokerage firm suspended from the New York Stock Exchange.

Stocks Recover from Low Figures With Biggest Market Rise In Over a Year

By THE ANALYST

After selling off to the lowest level since the 1929 stock market crash, motion picture shares recovered most of their losses late in the past week in the biggest market rise in more than a year. Active buying and covering, attracted by the early break, resulted in gains of from one to five points in leading issues during the Thursday session, bringing them well up from the lows of the week.

Suspension of two brokerage houses for insolvency had placed bears in the saddle the first part of the week and, with the rest of the list, motion picture shares had reacted to new lows for the year and longer.

However, aside from one issue, in which one of the suspended houses had considerable interest, the picture group was subject to less pressure than most other sections of the list, as, for example, steels, motors and specialties.

General Theatres was in the limelight and, incidentally, on the spot, in the stock exchange group as a result of a wave of selling that followed suspension of Pynchon and Company. GT, as it is known on the tape, sold down to 3⅜ and was the most active stock in the amusement section.

Fox reacted in sympathy and encountered further pressure as a result of dividend and earnings uncertainties, but the stock rallied about four points after touch-

Fox Film Loses In Contract Suit

Webster, S. Dak.—According to Charles E. Bailly, of the Lyric, the case in which Fox Film sued him for $800 on unplayed pictures arranged according to the standard contract, was decided in favor of the defendant, Bailly.

The court held that the standard contract was null and void owing to the fact that it contained the arbitration clause, and no damages could be collected in South Dakota on a null and void contract, reports Bailly.

This was the first old standard contract case tried in the state. Rex W. Harris handled the case for the Lyric.

G T E Buys $10,000,000 In Film Securities Preferred

General Theatres Equipment, Inc., has purchased $10,000,000 in seven per cent preferred stock of Film Securities Corporation from a syndicate headed by Chase National.

Film Securities owns the 660,900 shares of Loew's, Inc., formerly held by Fox Film. Voting control of Film Securities, however, is said to still rest with the Chase group.

48 PRODUCTIONS

2 from MARION DAVIES

Watch the calibre of vehicles that Marion Davies will appear in! Her latest release of the current season Fannie Hurst's "Five and Ten" gives an idea of what this versatile and beautiful actress can do with a role of dramatic intensity. Acknowledged to be the cleverest of screen comediennes, she has now shown a new power as a dramatic artist that is to be reflected in her new-season offerings. Marion Davies productions receive the greatest promotion of any starring pictures in the industry. There will again be extensive Marion Davies advertising and publicity campaigns in the Hearst nationwide newspaper chain.

2 from NORMA SHEARER

The position of Norma Shearer in the industry today is an enviable one. A succession of splendid pictures to which she has given the fullness of her distinguished artistry and her beauty—"The Divorcee" for which she won the industry's highest award, "Let Us Be Gay", "Strangers May Kiss" these have put her into the very top spot of money stars! "Strangers May Kiss" is at the moment breaking records in theatres everywhere. "A Free Soul" is completed and is destined to be another great success. There will indeed be a ready public awaiting Norma Shearer's offerings in the coming season.

2 from JOAN CRAWFORD

Careful selection of stories for "America's Dancing Daughter" have resulted in building her following greater than ever in the past season. "Paid" and "Dance Fools Dance" gave her fans the beauty, the exotic thrills they eagerly expect from her. Joan Crawford stands high among the leading box-office names of this industry. To keep her fans packing your theatre in the new season Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will present ravishing Joan in stories that combine thrill qualities with the de luxe glamour associated in the minds of the public with this popular star. M-G-M is pleased to announce that Joan Crawford has signed a new contract which will keep her for a long period among the celebrated starring names of this company.

3 from JOHN GILBERT

We sent the word broadcast to the complete showman personnel of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer! We sought for John Gilbert vehicles of dynamic thrill quality—stories apart from anything he has ever done—dramas to captivate and hold the world imagination. We are excited beyond description to know that we have obtained for this sterling actor vehicles such as he has never had. The first is "Cheri-Bibi" by Gaston Leroux, an enthralling action narrative in which Gilbert plays two distinct personalities, a member of the nobility and a convict. Innocently accused of murder he changes his face, his name and his personality to win back his honest name and the girl he loves. John Robertson is the director, Leila Hyams is the girl. Another vehicle for John Gilbert is "Candlelight" based on the sensational Broadway stage hit! We believe that Gilbert's steady march back to his top ranking, which was helped by the sturdy qualities of "Way For A Sailor" and "Gentleman's Fate" in the past season will be amply carried forward now with his forthcoming important dramatic offerings.

2 from GRETA GARBO

Gorgeous Greta Garbo's continuing success has served to convince the world that this unique personality is to the screen what Sarah Bernhardt and Eleanor Duse were to the stage! An actress whose sensuous, slumbrous genius can never be duplicated, whose beauty and voice and bearing are of an aristocracy all her own. This magnetic star forges ever ahead. "Romance" and "Inspiration" electrified her admirers in the past season. M-G-M is particularly fortunate in having for selection in the coming season a group of vehicles that are perfect for the rare talents of this star. Not since M-G-M first took Greta Garbo from obscurity into world-enveloping stardom has she had available stories of such magnitude and promise!

3 from WILLIAM HAINES

His clean, winning, smiling appeal never lessens! Bill Haines is one of the most representative American stars on the screen and that accounts for his great popularity with American audiences. That rare combination of good humor, unrestrained fun and at the same time serious, manly appeal is unfailing! The pace he set in "Remote Control" and "The Girl Said No" is heightened as this season ends with "A Tailor Made Man", now enjoying great business throughout the country. William Haines is to change pace in the coming season with a trio of high-powered dramatic comedies that will surprise you!

3 from ROBERT MONTGOMERY

The Star Makers of M-G-M have done it again! The company that carefully developed from obscurity the Garbos, Shearers, Haines, Crawfords and all the others have now brought Robert Montgomery to that point of popularity where public demand names him star in his own right! His ever increasing appeal won by happy performances in "Divorcee", "Big House", "Inspiration" and climaxed by "Strangers May Kiss"—to name just a few—has long been reflected in one of the largest fan mails of any star in Hollywood. "Shipmates" was his introduction to stardom—and a rousing one! In the new season he will appear in three great entertainments—among them "Huddle" a romantic drama of a boy from the steel mills who makes good at football; and "The Truth Game" by Ivor Novello, a fast-moving modern comedy drama that won a large success as a Broadway stage play. Robert Montgomery is a name to reckon with in the coming season!

2 from BUSTER KEATON

Talkies have lifted Buster Keaton into a newer and greater popularity. His stage experience came in for good use, his "dead pan" voice fits his unsmiling face, his acrobatic and dancing talents — this versatility permits him what no other comedian on the screen has to give. Every talkie he has made is better than the previous one, "Free and Easy", "Doughboys" and the latest laughing panic "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath". Buster Keaton has succeeded by persistent and conscientious delivery of really funny comedies to build himself up to the top rank of comic draws! In the new season, aided by a pair of hilariously different comedy stories, he's going to bring a flock of new money into your box-office!

2 from WALLACE BEERY

Audiences like that "regular guy" quality about Wallace Beery. His perfect naturalness as "Butch" of "The Big House" stamped this great actor immediately as a new popular favorite, bringing to the screen a refreshing down-to-earth personableness that was again evidenced in "Min and Bill" and as Scorpio in "The Secret Six". Wallace Beery has won a stardom that is more than a title. He's in the big money now as a box-office bet! One of his starring attractions in the new season is to be "Sea Eagles" by Lt. Commander Frank Wead, in which he plays a hard-boiled yet likable Petty Officer aboard an airplane carrier of the fleet. We think it's going to be another "Tell it to the Marines" for action and heart interest. The U. S. Navy is cooperating in production and for the first time a dramatic picture is to be built around the hitherto secret activities of an airplane carrier, with scenes and incidents actually filmed aboard the great U. S. S. Saratoga.

2 from RAMON NOVARRO

A star performer whose standard never wavers, whose charm and personality keep for him a loyal public. There is no one on the screen quite like Ramon Novarro. Magazine editors in this industry who base their opinion on reader receptivity tell us that probably no other player has maintained such a permanent hold on audiences. In the past season this handsome gentleman-star gave his public the delightful "Call of the Flesh" and now follows with "Daybreak," the strong romantic drama that won unstinted praise at its Coast previews. Novarro's vehicles for the coming year are exceptionally powerful choices, insuring bigness of scale and strength of story.

1 from Alfred LUNT–Lynn FONTANNE

When the announcement was recently published throughout the world that Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, the stage's most celebrated acting team, had finally agreed to enter pictures after countless refusals it was pointed out editorially in the trade that these stage stars had signed with the one company they felt could do justice to their names and reputations! M-G-M recognizes its obligation to these famed personalities of the great Theatre Guild of New York and to the thousands throughout the country who have witnessed their supreme artistry in road engagements! Lunt and Fontanne have appeared in more stage successes of importance, separately and together, than anybody in the theatre world! Their appearance in M-G-M's roster of Great Names is another indication of the ceaseless aggressiveness of this company in bringing you new and important entertainment factors.

1 from LAWRENCE TIBBETT

Lawrence Tibbett has brought to theatres thousands of patrons who do not customarily attend! He has been instrumental in "selling" the picture habit to new ticket-buyers because he represents an utterly different and stimulating appeal. Exhibitors have told us that "New Moon" was a tonic that resulted in increased circles of patronage. In "The Prodigal" (formerly titled "The Southerner") Lawrence Tibbett revealed that not only could he enthrall them with his thrillingly romantic voice, but that he was a personality to be reckoned with from the point of view of wholesome, appealing dramatic acting performance!

1 from Stan LAUREL–Oliver HARDY

By public demand! Laurel-Hardy in a full length feature comedy! Audiences can't get enough of them. With every additional release they become more and more a national institution, a sure guarantee of fun in the theatre. It was quite natural when M-G-M got the right story, a perfect vehicle for their first full-length talkie, to go ahead and make the production "Pardon Us". Hal Roach and M-G-M have been working on it for months. It will unquestionably be the funniest picture this industry has ever seen! No expense, no effort is being spared to make it just right! We owe it to the uncounted millions of Laurel-Hardy fans who will pack your theatre. "Pardon Us" is something to cheer about!

4 from COSMOPOLITAN

To name the hits that have been produced by M-G-M for Cosmopolitan Productions is to name the greatest successes the industry has known. "Broadway Melody", "The Big House" "White Shadows in the South Seas" are just a few at random. That label "Cosmopolitan" is a guarantee of Bigness! And Bigness backed by million-dollar advertising and publicity campaigns in the Hearst newspapers and magazines is something only M-G-M can bring the industry! In the new season Cosmopolitan Productions will be selected as usual from great novels, plays and stories. Vehicles of importance! Among them is "Skyscraper Souls" by Faith Baldwin. It is the drama of the city of souls that live in skyscrapers, their romances, the amazing web of thrill that is woven through those giant temples of steel! It will run in Cosmopolitan Magazine under the title of "Skyscraper" and will subsequently be serialized in the Hearst newspapers and published as a novel under the title of "Skyscraper Souls". Four Big Ones from Cosmopolitan!

Special information will be forthcoming about pictures from

MARIE DRESSLER

They love her! Three little words that paint the complete picture of the hold which this wonderful personality has on the hearts of audiences. Each marvelous character which she has portrayed has etched deeper the affection of her public. In "Let Us Be Gay", "Anna Christie", "Min and Bill" to mention a few highlights—how they applauded her! There is only one Marie Dressler and M-G-M is proud to have been instrumental in bringing her rich, human talents to your patrons. Watch for special announcement!

13 Exceptional Productions

based on celebrated stage hits, best-selling novels and stories—

FLYING HIGH (with the celebrated star BERT LAHR)

Here's a property! By McGowan, DeSylva, Brown and Henderson. M-G-M fought for it and outbid the field to get it for you. Not only because it's one of the best known stage hits the country has known in recent years, having run a year on Broadway. But also because it gives us the opportunity to bring you its star, Bert Lahr, one of America's greatest comedians who will be a screen sensation. That's a double coup! Produced on the stage by the "Scandals" creator, George White, the story is packed with aviation thrills, laughs and romance. Involving as its high-light a thrilling trans-continental airplane race. The importance of this vehicle brings to it as director Charles Riesner, at the top of his box-office form following "Caught Short" and "Reducing"!

BOARDING SCHOOL

It was Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer which pioneered into the field of modern youth with "Our Dancing Daughters", "Our Blushing Brides" and "Our Modern Maidens". It is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer which again finds fertile dramatic and audience appeal in a subject untouched thus far! "Boarding School" reveals a glamorous and colorful side of modern youth, rich in thrilling entertainment angles. It tells of three girls, each from different environments, coming together in a ritzy boarding school. It is really the story of adolescence with its flaming desire for a knowledge of life. The power of this drama, with its background of wealth and luxury and attractive young personalities, looms up as a production of money importance!

HONOLULU

There is no locale in the world today more richly laden with dramatic and pictorial punch than this setting out of which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is creating one of the lavish picture undertakings of the year. The world's most interesting and decadent civilization vivified in an action talkie! Here have come the wealthy of the world—those who have known every form of luxury—now settled in the tropic indolence of this amazing island city. Our story follows the destiny of a fascinating millionaire and his three daughters, caught up in the lure of Honolulu. Intense and spectacular, "Honolulu" is a showman's entertainment to anticipate!

NIGHT COURT

The authors have touched a gold-mine of drama! Destinies of luckless men and careless women rapped out at dead of night by judges, politically bought and paid for! Satire and comedy go hand-in-hand with breath-taking thrill in this stage play collaborated on by Mark Hellinger, noted human-interest writer of New York's Daily Mirror, and Charles Beahan, dramatist. And to complete the stamp of journalistic authority M-G-M got Edward Dean Sullivan, author of "Rattling the Cup on Chicago Crime" to adapt "Night Court" for the screen. The story involves an innocent girl, a newspaper reporter who fights for her, a couple of shyster lawyers at each others' throats, a judge's jealous wife and his sweetheart. "Night Court" rips into big city politics the way "Front Page" did into the newspaper game. You've got a big attraction here!

THE CHRISTIAN

It was inevitable that "The Christian," one of the greatest stories ever written in any language, should be made in the medium of talking pictures. It has been a top-money-maker in every medium—book, stage, screen. With the magic of talkies it will reach its crowning fulfillment. M-G-M will do it every justice with unstinted production and a cast of great names! What a soul-story is Hall Caine's "The Christian." Never a more deep-stirring love than that of John Storm for Gloria Quayle—he so noble, she so thirsty for delights of the world. Sensationally dramatic in each twist and turn of its mighty story, "The Christian" is to be the talkie for which thrill-seekers will pack theatres in the new season.

RED-HEADED WOMAN

We're congratulating ourselves! And we've got good reason! We were lucky enough to get a look at the advance proofs of the latest serial story by Katharine Brush, "Red-Headed Woman". That was even before it started serialization in the Saturday Evening Post and before it became the national story rage. We bought the talkie rights and we've got a box-office sensation without question! The story moves like a lightning bolt. Modern to the minute. The red-headed gal schemes to break up a marriage in order to get the luxuries of a wife she has always envied. She succeeds. But when she tries to enjoy her stolen treasures, she meets situations that tingle with excitement. A picture theme to pack houses. And it's going to get more national publicity when it appears as a book following its serialization!

Cecil B. De Mille's THE SQUAW MAN

What a response M-G-M got when it was first announced that "The Squaw Man" one of the greatest showman dramas of all time was to be made into talkies! No need to tell theatre men about the golden history of this gripping play. It has made fortunes, packed theatres, held audiences spell-bound in every part of the world. A narrative that sweeps across continents with power and passion! M-G-M is making a picture of it to be long remembered. A cast bristling with big names: Warner Baxter, Raymond Hatton, J. Farrell Macdonald, Victor Potel, De Witt Jennings, Julia Faye—just to name a few. Months in production already, it will be months more in the making! Lucien Hubbard, writer who won fame with "Wings", "Paid" and other screen successes collaborated in its adaptation with Leonore J. Coffee, and Elsie Janis. Put your money on "The Squaw Man" for the big winnings of '31-'32.

AFTER ALL

It is not hard to understand why this play by John Van Druten is a grea popular success in England, and is shortly to be brought to America. It is tol from the heart, and it reaches across the footlights to the heart of the audience It is the story of young folks who leave home in quest of adventure, are storm tossed by Life, disillusioned by love and return to the one real place in th world for them, home. The same qualities of human understanding that mak Van Druten a great playwright in the stage successes "Young Woodley" an "Unfaithful", and in "The Awakening" which he has also written for M-G-M are to be found again in "After All". Those human qualities transferre to the screen are an invincible drawing power!

BRIDGE VS. BRIDGE

Here's a strikingly unusual story. It was one of the year's greatest in Libert Magazine. A divorce has been granted to a woman by a Referee. The divorce husband goes to the Referee's house that night and at the point of a pist forces him to read certain letters and examine evidence not introduced in th case. They reveal amazing things in the lives of both the man and his wife. Th divorced husband's only desire is to retain custody of his young son. Th Referee's problem gives rise to a chain of absorbing episodes, resulting in th most powerful and vital treatment of the social question of children and c vorce yet put on the screen. A cross section of modern Society is pictur here, with its pathos, its restless excitement, its effect on a new generatio Strong story values that insure power on the screen!

THE AWAKENING

It takes a powerful, punchful story to make a picture that moves! And wh Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer signed up the noted playwright John Van Drute we knew we'd get a story with the thrill of his great stage successes "You Woodley", "Unfaithful" and "After All". Playwright Van Druten has c ated a throbbing drama of a young girl and her infatuation for a married ma A theme to be handled with delicacy and intelligence, but a theme that's rig out of life, deeply toned with human implications. You've seen it happe and when it does happen in this story it involves lives, situations and peo that make for a drama of vivid and compelling character.

GUILTY HANDS

Bayard Veiller is the author of "Paid" the remarkable dramatic success of the past season which previously was the stage sensation "Within the Law". His name is associated only with the greatest of box-office winners. "The Trial of Mary Dugan" and "The Thirteenth Chair" are samples of hits which brought him fame and fortune. Now he has conceived for the screen a unique story in which the audience is let in on the murder. The audience is permitted to experience the awful suspense of a hunted criminal, being tracked down by the police. Mr. Veiller believes that this is one of the most unusual plots he has ever devised, and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is going full speed ahead on what it, too, believes will be one of the outstanding dramatic smashes of the coming year.

WEST OF BROADWAY

Based on Zane Grey's popular Collier's serial story and best-selling novel "The Shepherd of Guadaloupe"! That novel was one of the most successful of Zane Grey's romantic thrillers and there's a public of literally millions who await its brilliant picturization on the screen. A swift-moving drama is this of the returned war veteran who finds his father's ranch taken away by trickery. Broken by the war he is compelled to fight a wily Mexican and the latter's unwilling American colleague. A girl, the daughter of his enemy, helps him regain his manhood and thereafter the fight is on in earnest! Zane Grey knows how to hold the absorbed interest of drama lovers. And M-G-M knows how to put action on the screen! The combination means a rousing entertainment!

ARSENE LUPIN

This news will warm the heart of every red-blooded showman! M-G-M is bringing to talking pictures the greatest of all crook stories "Arsene Lupin". That's what the screen is for! To take your thrill-seeking patrons and grip their minds with drama that pulsates, charms, amazes! And there's no story on earth better suited to the screen than the glorious tale of the master-thief who steals only from the rich, who wins hearts as gracefully as he robs, who reforms a world-worn beauty and is himself reformed by her. The creation of Maurice Le Blanc and Francois de Croisset has been read in every language of the globe. M-G-M has assigned Tod Browning as director. He knows how to thrill an audience.

"THE MARQUEE 5"

Showmanship is a thing that moves ever forward! It has ever been the watchword of M-G-M to present the new idea in production, to change the pace of the industry with entertainments far from the beaten track. "The Marquee 5" is to be a group of specially selected productions. Among them we plan to present stories that link up to the moment, in the same sense that "Caught Short" reflected a timely angle. As well as important vehicles that the psychology of the entertainment hour suggests. M-G-M's quick thinking capitalized on red-hot timeliness with "Caught Short" and M-G-M's foresight will again take advantage of any "trend-of-the-times" idea that may occur during the coming season. Certainly, it's a pioneering step, but we'll always pioneer in this business. "The Marquee 5" are to be important box-office pictures. Depend on that.

IT FITS BETTER THAN EVER!

FOX CALLS ON EXHIBITORS TO HELP BUILD STAR VALUES FOR NEW YEAR

Academy Seeks Additional Data On Release Print

Los Angeles—Every projectionist in the country has received a questionnaire from the Technical Bureau of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences, in which the Academy seeks additional practical information on how to improve the Standard Release Print, which was placed into effect several months ago.

The Projection Advisory Council and the American Projection Society are cooperating.

While many pictures now being shown were cut and released before the Standard went into effect, the number of non-standard prints is decreasing at a rapid pace.

A Facial for Milton

Maybe mice are mice, and nearly all are alike in real life, but in motion pictures it's different.

And so, if Milton Mouse and his girl friend Mary are going to continue scrambling across the screen, they've got to change their looks.

That's what the Federal Court ruled in California when it decided the first round of the copyright-patent suit of Walter Disney against the Van Beuren Corporation.

Van Beuren's legal battery will appeal their contention that Milton Mouse and Mary were born in Aesop's Fables before Disney originated Mickey and Minnie Mouse.

As it stands, the court has forbidden further distribution of five issues of Aesops Fables because Milt looked too much like Mickey and has held that Van Beuren's mouse must undergo an operation to alter its appearance.

The court's verdict does not interfere with the distribution of Aesop's Fables, the established Van Beuren cartoon reel, except as to the five particular issues in which Milt looked so much like Mick.

Direct Checkup Planned To Decide Billing

Clarke, Sheehan, Grainger and Michel Address National Convention of Sales Staff

[Pictures and sidelights of Fox convention are published beginning on page 48]

Fox in 1931-32 will place heavy concentration on star values and the development of starring material.

A direct check-up with exhibitors will be made to determine which featured players score sufficiently to warrant elevation to stardom. Where players who are featured as support create a favorable box-office impression they will be given opportunity to appear with heavier billing.

Fox salesmen, branch and division managers and home office studio executives now are meeting in New York at the annual sales convention. The conference opened Monday morning with addresses by Harley L. Clarke, president; Winfield Sheehan, studio chief; James R. Grainger, in charge of sales, and W. C. Michel, and will terminate on Saturday.

Clarke discussed future company plans. Michel talked on general organization, while Sheehan and Grainger outlined new product and sales policies, respectively.

Regarding the new drive for starring material, it is the intention of Fox executives to continue with featured billing on certain teams and players who have not yet had their chance to prove their worth at the box-office, and where the exhibitor check-up, made shortly after release, shows that the players have box-office power, future billing will be of a star nature.

As previously announced in Motion Picture Herald, Fox will copyright future poster and paper material in an attempt to prevent their misuse by poster exchanges for theatres not playing Fox product.

48 Features Planned

While 48 features are planned for the Fox 1931-32 season, the production policy calls for elasticity in order to provide for any changes in the public's demand.

Will Rogers will make three comedies, the first, "Young as You Feel," being by George Ade. In the cast will be Fifi Dorsay, Rosalie Joy and Donald Dillaway, Lucile Brown and Terrance Ray, as well as Lucien Littlefield. Frank Borzage is director. Rogers' second is with David Butler's direction from Booth Tarkington's "The Plutocrat," and the third is "Ambassador from U. S.," based on Vincent Sheean's Saturday Evening Post story, Sam Taylor directing.

Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell will co-star in three, one titled "Delicious" and directed by Butler with El Brendel as comedian. George and Ira Gershwin and Guy Bolton are writing the incidental music and story. The two others are "Merely Mary Ann," from Israel Zangwill's novel and play and directed

TWO AD REELS ON ONE BILL IS CALLED UNWISE

Details of Paramount Contract With Advertisers Show Film Must Run As Long As Feature

Complete expansion of Paramount's present policy of booking and distributing sponsored advertising reels will be an outgrowth of the company's decision to sell ad shorts to theatres other than Publix houses, beginning August 1, when Paramount exchanges, as previously announced in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, will undertake to sell, in block, 52 sponsored films directly through exchanges. The block, released one each week, will carry a cancellation clause of one short.

Announcement of plans to include 52 sponsored reels on the 1931-32 program verified the opinions of insiders that production of more than one short weekly by a producer-circuit operator is practically impossible because of the fact that the majority of key houses of the major circuits are weekly changes. The inclusion of two ad shorts on the same weekly bill is held impractical.

Although Paramount will attempt to sell to theatres other than Publix, its present contract with advertisers specifically prohibits the booking in any competitive theatre in zones in which Paramount operates. The contract further states that Paramount is not required to exhibit in more than one Publix theatre in any city or zone. Nor will Paramount exhibit in a theatre that ceases to be a Publix house, or in a theatre where exhibition of the picture is deemed detrimental by the theatre management, the present agreement specifies.

Partners Can Reject Reels

In all contracts, present and future, where theatres are not entirely controlled by Publix, the contract states that Paramount is not obligated to have the ad picture shown in theatres owned or controlled by any partly owned or affiliated corporation unless the affiliated party consents. Managers of houses owned 100 per cent have no say in the matter, all bookings going from a division office; but Publix partners have the right to turn thumbs down on the reels.

Upon completion of each reel, the advertiser receives a print for approval, but Paramount's contract states it is not obligatory on its part to make changes in the picture, if, in the opinion of Paramount executives, the entertainment value or quality of the picture is impaired by changes of the advertiser.

The ad reel must run as many days as the current feature booking, and must be ready for exhibition six months following date of contract. All distribution, states the contract, must be completed within six months of production.

Paramount must provide prints within 30 days after production, with the advertiser also contracting to buy additional prints from the company. Charges for prints are as follows: 7½ cents a foot in quantities of 50 prints or more; 10 cents a foot for less than 50 prints.

The advertiser pays actual cost incurred in making changes requested by him, in addition to a circulation charge of $5 a thousand audience, actual transportation costs from Paramount's exchange to the theatre and $1.50 each time a print is shipped or reshipped to New York for handling, shipping and repair charge.

Upon completion of each picture, Paramount provides the advertiser with a complete list of all Paramount and Publix theatres available for exhibition, the client providing from this list the names of theatres where he desires his picture to be exhibited. Approximate play dates are furnished by Paramount, which finally determines the dates. Seven days after receipt of the list of available theatres, the client contracts to notify Paramount of approximate dates and if these are not available the advertiser selects other days that shall be within a period of four weeks from the dates first designated by the client.

In addition to a flat production cost, which runs between $12,000 and $18,000 and is payable ten days after submission of statement by Paramount, the advertiser must guarantee a minimum distribution cost, averaging $15,000, for which Paramount guarantees an audience of 3,000,000. In case the advertiser does not select sufficient playdates to give the picture an audience of 3,000,000 within the contracted six months playing time, the client must pay the difference between the number played to, at $5 a thousand, and the contracted minimum.

Laemmle Jr. Made Vice President

At a special meeting of the board of directors of Universal this week, Carl Laemmle, Jr., general manager of production at the Coast studio, was elected second vice president of the corporation.

R. H. Cochrane wired young Laemmle the news, to reach him on his twenty-third birthday. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, arrived in New York Wednesday, when he heard of his son's election, to complete the lineup of pictures on the schedule for 1931-32, prior to the first of Universal's three regional conventions, the first to be in New York early in May.

Two other meetings, one in Chicago and the other in San Francisco, will follow soon after.

The "Poor Author"

Toronto—The Performing Right Society, an association similar to the Society of Composers in the States, is all set to battle legislative leaders in the current fight to amend Canada's present copyright bill, which would give to authors and composers greater leeway in claiming copyrights through assignments.

Lobbyists who are bucking the society in the battle contend that the "poor author" is no longer poor, what with some writers securing as high as $125,000 for picture rights.

Flinn to Tombs; Industry Rallies To His Defense

expenses and legal fees of Mr. Flinn and Mr. Lally. There was a definite refusal to enter into a discussion of the internal background of the case and the fact that the corporation at no time had made a public statement in behalf of Flinn, despite the realization of the entire industry then and now that conditions at the studio and scene of the fire were such that only the faintest wisp of legal pretext could hold Flinn responsible for the fire and the deaths that resulted.

Meanwhile John C. Flinn, a man of home and family, is living in a small hotel room in Forty-fourth street, seeing there a few of the intimates of happier days and associates of his vigorous motion picture career of the last 15 years.

Up in Yonkers the Flinn house is closed, and up in the countryside of Pawling, New York, where his country place was building into a homestead retreat when the fire tragedy intervened, the springtime has come with greening grass between the stones of neglected garden paths. Flinn's family is on the Pacific Coast. His life, his business and his dreams, have been torn to tatters by the whim of an unjust, unkind fate. The man himself carries the bravery of a smiling faith that is sorely tried by the frailty of some of his fellows, and he still is torn with the hurt of accusation, broadcast to the world, of a failure of administration, a fatal failure, fatal to so many young lives, that was not in truth his at all. A vindication will find him vigorously capable for the reconstruction of his life and career.

Tobis, German Company, To Open New York Office

Tobis, the German film concern controlled by German, Dutch and American capitalists, will establish its own renting office in New York, at 595 Madison avenue, to work with American producers and distributors.

Milton Diamond, international film man, and member of the Tobis board, is due here shortly to proceed with the formation of American Tobis, of which he will be chairman. Diamond is said to have interested a group of Americans in Tobis product.

SCORE CHARGES NOW CUT DOWN TO COST OF MUSIC BEFORE SOUND

Volunteers Are Finishing Draft Of Rules for Organizing Agents

Expect It Will Result in Elimination Of Abuses That Have Barred Solicitors From Studios

Hollywood (QP)—A tentative draft of a constitution and bylaws for organization of artists' agents and managers will be completed this week by a volunteer committee of agents, who then will issue a call for a general meeting to which all agents will be invited.

Elimination of many of the abuses, in such forms as cut-throating, "ambulance chasing,, tactics and the splitting of commissions, which resulted in a general barring of agents from the major studios is expected by the committee to be a result of the program.

Agents desiring to join the new organization will be asked to subscribe to the constitution and bylaws and pledge themselves to live up to the standard of business routine which it will outline.

The work of the committee has been watched with interest by officials of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences as well as executives of the producers' association. Artists as well as producers have long hoped that agents would get together and control the abuses within their ranks, and for the first time they feel that such a movement is likely to crystallize into a working organization.

Members of the committee drafting the proposed constitution and bylaws include Ruth Collier as chairman, Morris Small, Dave Thompson, Phil Berg, Harry Weber and Eddie Silton.

Paramount Chiefs Return from Coast

Executives of Paramount Publix will arrive in New York Saturday after a three-day visit at the company's Hollywood studios, where they stopped on their way home from the organization's annual convention in San Francisco last week.

The group includes: Sidney R. Kent, vice president in charge of distribution; John D. Clark, western divisional manager; Herman Wobber, district manager, far West; Charles E. McCarthy, director of public relations; Dr. Emanuel Stern, head of the welfare division; M. H. Lewis, Pacific Coast district manager; John Cecil Graham, of London; Ike Blumenthal, of Paris; A. O. Dillenbck, Hanff-Metzger, advertising counsellors; C. A. Neeper and Leslie Whelan, representatives of Harold Lloyd; Russell Holman, advertising manager, and Stanley Waite, James A. Clark, G. B. J. Frawley, Harry Flynn, and William Sussman.

Connolly Drops O'Brien, Hogan When He Sails

Jack Connolly, general manager for Courtland Smith in connection with his operations in Pathe News, Inc., and the Trans-Lux theatre projects, sailed for Europe on the Isle de France last Saturday. He left behind letters terminating the services of Joseph O'Brien, sporting editor and former chief cutter and film editor of Pathe News, one-time star news cameraman, and Thomas Hogan, also a star of the news camera and more recently director for Pathe Audio Review in the production of musical and topical material.

Nicholas Cavalieri, who in the last two years had risen to prominence as a cinema pictorialist in his work for Pathe Audio Review, also left the Pathe organization and subsequently joined Amedee J. Van Beuren's expedition to India and the Far East for the picturing of Frank Buck's wild animal pictures under the direction of Clyde Elliott, who directed the Knute Rockne football pictures for the Pathe News and Review organization under Terry Ramsaye's administration of that enterprise.

Michon and Oliver With Fox

John Michon of Pathe News cutting staff, and David Oliver, long connected with Pathe News on major assignments, have joined the Fox Movietone News staff.

Connolly's excursion to Europe is said to be for the purpose of setting up plans for European news coverage for Pathe News, which has been variously and intermittently dependent on arrangements with Melophone-Film Gesellschaft in Germany, occasional offerings from Societa Anonima Stefano Pittaluga in Italy and Pathe Gazette in England. With increasing activity in the large array of Fox Movietone news reels in Europe, and Paramount's new projects in the same general field, the foreign field as a source of material for the American news screen becomes highly competitive.

Truman Talley, the Fox news chief, is represented in Europe by Benny Miggins, who scored the triumph of capturing the King of Spain and Mussolini for Movietone, while Paramount has acquired James Wright, the Englishman who landed Bernard Shaw for Movietone.

Censors Okay Columbia Film

Chicago (QP)—Columbia has been given censors' permission to distribute "Last Parade" on a "white" permit. The picture has been held up by the board for weeks.

Small Town Minimum of Paramount $3 a Day

And Warner-First National in Some Spots Permits Bookings With $2.50 and $3 Levies

While score charges will not be eliminated on the 1931-32 product, they will be whittled to a point where they will become almost negligible and represent less than or the equivalent to the exhibitor's former cost for music before sound, a check-up shows.

When executive leaders of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, headed by M. A. Lightman, met in special session a few weeks ago in New York they were given definite assurance by sales chiefs of major distributors that score charges would be lowered, but that no attempt would be made to completely eliminate the fee.

Investigation now shows that action to reduce the charge, including a lower basic minimum, has already been started.

Paramount Charge Is Cut

A close checkup among exhibitors reveals that Paramount's charge is now down to a $3 a day minimum in small towns, while Warner and First National, both always vigorously defending a reduction, have, in some small spots, permitted bookings with $2.50 and $3 charges for scores.

The investigation also disclosed the rapidly growing tendency of distributors to figure on one lump rental sum which includes score. The majority of companies heretofore have charged for scores as an item separate from rentals.

Prior to the Pathe deal for transfer of assets to RKO, that company was included in the small group, comprising Universal, Columbia and Tiffany, which made no charges for scores, both rental and score being figured in one price. This policy will be changed by the parent Radio company, beginning with the new sales season, when a $5 minimum will be charged.

At theatres other than those in small towns, the average minimum charge for scores by RKO, M-G-M, Fox, Paramount, Warner, First National and United Artists, has ranged between $5 and $7.50, the rate for smaller houses being lower in some cases.

Discussion of score charges and reductions has been avoided at sales conventions of the national companies.

English Firm in Market for 100 Houses; May Rent Circuit

London—Lannon Brothers, who control Paget Guarantee Corporation, are in the market for 100 houses, and may possibly rent a circuit of theatres.

The firm is said to be acting for an influential group, with the main consideration not a matter of price but value of houses.

33 MILLIONS SPENT ON EUROPEAN FILMS

Production in 1930 Far Exceeds That of 1929—478 Theatres Built During the Year

Washington—That sound has definitely superseded silents in large European countries is revealed in a survey of the European industry by the Commerce Department.

According to George R. Canty, American trade commissioner at Paris, 1930 was a period of unusual activity in the industry in Europe. Production was high; there was a notable expansion in studios; and a substantial number of new houses were constructed.

The restrictive effect on international trade in films resulting from sound development was evidenced by a marked decline in exports from producing countries. At the same time a marked impetus was given to domestic production. In 1930, approximately 600 features were made in European studios at a total estimated cost of $33,000,000. Included in this total, however, were old silents which were scored for sound. German production costs were highest, totaling $12,500,000; cost of British was $10,000,000 while French production costs were the lowest of leading producers, amounting to only $7,200,000. With one or two exceptions, production was greater in all European countries during 1930 than in 1929.

Based on statistics of censored films, the report shows that of features exhibited in Germany, one half were domestic and 30 per cent American. in France 478 were shown, of which 19 per cent were domestic and 50 per cent American. In Great Britain, out of 747 features, 519 or approximately 70 per cent, were American.

The year was outstanding in the matter of theatre construction in Europe, 478 new houses having been built with a total capacity of 467,000. There was a noticeable tendency, according to Canty, to build these theatres with an eye to the future and to see that they were well located. As might be expected, a large number of the smaller theatres were forced out of business as a result of sound, but the lessened capacity resulting was more than offset by new theatres and by enlargement and renovation of the old.

From the standpoint of the industry, perhaps the most outstanding event which featured the year 1930 in Europe was the German-American sound patents conference. This provided for an exchange of patent rights throughout the world between interests involved, thus putting an end to lawsuits between them.

It also established exclusive regions in which the equipment of one or the other can be sold. It is believed that this action will have a stimulating effect on sound equipment sales.

Referring to the present status of American films in Europe, Canty points out that the number of American releases in 1930 was lower than for many years on the Continent. In Great Britain, on the other hand, the situation was reversed and business in American films was the best on record. The steady progress in equipping cinemas for sound pictures, and the absence of any language barriers were factors favorable to the progress of American pictures in that market.

According to Canty, the demand for motion pictures in Great Britain is approximately the same as in the United States. On the Continent, however, he declares it is apparent that the demand is for films of the silent picture type with dialogue that can be understood. Other things being equal, he believes, it is films of this character which will find the greatest appeal in the larger markets. It is certain, he declares, that they now constitute the single hope of redeeming the lost confidence of the smaller European markets.

That Florida Tax

Tampa—Last week Representative Smith, Columbia county, which has but one city in it with a picture show, introduced a bill in the legislature to tax theatres and all forms of amusement and sports 20 per cent.

Representative Smith stated such a tax would yield an annual revenue for the state of over $1,000,000 and said he cannot see why theatre managers oppose the bill, for, says Smith, "Theatre owners would merely increase admissions and the people patronizing shows, baseball games, prize fights or other attractions, should be able to pay a little more for their tickets."

"All of which," said a local theatre man, "is a pretty wet argument."

Wehrenberg Wins Verdict in Patron's $15,000 Damage Suit

St. Louis—Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, Missouri and Southern Illinois, won a jury verdict as defendant in a $15,000 damage suit brought by a man claimed to have been forcibly ejected from Wehrenberg's theatre.

Patrons corroborated Wehrenberg's statement that the plaintiff was asked to leave for disorderly conduct, and the judge instructed the jury to favor Wehrenberg in their decision.

45 Paramount Features for Stanley Runs

While the extent of the Warner-Paramount reconciliation has not been officially announced, unofficial sources reveal that close to 45 Paramount features are expected on the Stanley-Warner programs this season, with 15 first runs going to the Mastbaum—the Warner flagship in Philadelphia, and the rest being split among other Stanley-Warner downtown houses.

The first Paramount picture to play a Stanley-Warner house since the split, made its appearance this week at the Capitol, a second-run downtown, where "Unfaithful" was shown.

Stanley-Warner is said to have been desperately in need of product and is presumably welcoming back Paramount pictures. On the other hand, Paramount has not had nearly sufficient outlet for its product in this territory, particularly the outlet that a Warner hookup would give, in view of the more than 200 neighborhood houses Warners control in this territory.

Whether or not Paramount—through the Moon Amusement Company—will continue to operate Keith's, is still an unsettled point. For the present, there appears to be no change in the policy of Keith's, or Publix houses recently acquired by lease, which include the Tower, Nixon, Frankford and Roosevelt, all large neighborhoods.

Keith's further complicates the booking system by announcing "The Front Page," a United Artists film to play here on May 8. Originally announced for the Stanton, a Stanley-Warner house, it developed later that Warners had not closed for the film in this territory.

Meanwhile, the Stanley-Warner company is reported to have acquired the Germantown, a large uptown neighborhood theatre, previously independent.

Deny That Hughes Is Buying Control of United Artists

Hollywood—Responsible quarters have denied published reports that Howard Hughes has renewed negotiations to purchase a half interest in United Artists Corporation, United Artists Studio and United Artists Theatres Corporation.

The reports have been current for some time in the film center.

W. E. Sees Patent Position Firmer By Reis Ruling

M. A. Schlesinger of General Talking Pictures has stated that the company's suit against Western Electric charging infringement of General's Reis patent will, if necessary, be carried to the United States Supreme Court.

This follows a decision of the United States Court of Appeals denying General Talking a rehearing of the case, which Western Electric points out as solidifying its position in the talker recording and reproducing field, and marking the end of the patent litigation which has been hanging fire in the courts more than a year.

General Talking Pictures had brought suit in the Wilmington district court for infringement against the Stanley Company for use of Western Electric equipment on four patents. Three were decided in favor of Western and in the fourth, the Reis, the court decided there was an infringement. The ruling was reversed last March by the circuit court of appeals. On this decision, General Talking Pictures has asked, and been denied, a rehearing.

Western Electric infringement suits against General Talking Pictures are now pending in United States district court, Southern district of New York.

Washington Apathetic On Anti-Trust Law Revision

Washington—Anti-trust law revision, being urged at the Atlantic City convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce, is exciting little interest in the national capital.

Congress will not meet for seven months, and several more would have to elapse before action could be taken, so that the Atlantic City resolutions will probably have little effect on any possible legislation to revise the Sherman anti-trust laws.

Canadian Commissioner's Report Delayed Two Weeks

Ottawa—It is understood the report of Peter White, commissioner in the Canadian film industry investigation, will be delayed another two weeks for further consideration.

It had been expected that the report would be filed last week.

Henry Kaufman, publicity man, has been made general press representative of Capital Film Exchange, distributing "The Foresters Little Christina," German screen operetta, at the Belmont.

Warners Starting On $25,000,000 Building Program

San Francisco—Jack L. Warner has stated that Warners are starting on a $25,000,000 theatre building program. He made the statement during the Western sales meeting at which Gradwell Sears, Western sales manager, is presiding.

Included in the program are houses in Los Angeles, Beverly Hills, Sacramento, Youngstown, O.; Erie, Pa.; and Milwaukee. The statement is regarded as setting at rest reports that Fox West Coast would take over operation of Warner Coast houses.

Appeal on Patent Suit Due in Week

San Antonio, Tex.—Hearing of the appeal of Aleograph Company against Electrical Research Products for patent infringement has been set for May 14 by U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. As the Aleograph Company also seeks an accounting of profits, there is $50,000,000 involved in the litigation.

Suit is the outgrowth of a talker machine invented by Allen Stowers and Leo De Hymal, of this city, patents on which are held by Aleograph. The latter claims the ERPI machines infringe on Aleograph patents.

When the case came up for trial in the local court many months ago, Judge Duval West held for ERPI. It is the appeal from this decision that will be argued in New Orleans on May 14.

RCA Facing Patent Suit Claims of $48,000,000

Washington—RCA is facing patent suits to the extent of $48,350,000 for triple damages under the Clayton Act, following the Supreme Court's denial of a petition for a writ of certiorari in the radio tube test case brought by DeForest Radio Company.

Tubes used in sound recording and reproducing apparatus are involved in the action.

Four "Titans" Head List, Conventioners Told

Company's Projects Mean Steady Work for 2,000, Schnitzer Says At Hollywood Meeting

[Sidelights and pictures of Radio's Hollywood Convention are published beginning on page 54]

Hollywood—Presentation of prizes by President J. I. Schnitzer to the champion salesmen of Radio Pictures in the past year was the final action of the convention that brought with it the news that the organization is making its production one-third larger to cover the plans for next season's output, and that the company plans to give steady employment to at least two thousand individuals.

Titles and details of four "Titan" productions as well as 32 additional pictures for the coming year were made known by Schnitzer at the week's meeting.

Richard Dix and Irene Dunne will star in "Marcheta," first of the "Titans." "Frontier," aimed to parallel "Cimarron" and picturing the Black Hills of Dakota and the settlement of that territory, will have the same starring team. Dolores Del Rio will star in "Bird of Paradise," recently announced as having been purchased from Richard Walton Tully. There also will be an original drama of Hollywood, called "Miracle City," written by Wesley Ruggles, director, and Howard Estabrook, the screen author of Edna Ferber's "Cimarron." Ruggles will have the direction.

Besides the stars already mentioned, Radio plans to feature the following in at least one production: Ina Claire, Hope Williams, Lowell Sherman, Lily Damita, Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Dorothy Lee, Edna May Oliver and Hugh Herbert.

Lily Damita will star in "The Woman Between," directed by Victor Schertzinger.

A second picture for Dolores Del Rio, in addition to "Bird of Paradise," will be "The Dove," by Willard Mack.

"The Slander Girl" is still to be cast, as is "Traveling Husbands."

An original by Fannie Hurst, "Symphony of Six Millions," is also on the schedule.

J. P. Kennedy Ends Last Connection In Film Business

the motion picture industry and into fiscal relation to that motion picture enterprise. With the late Guy Currier, noted lawyer and capitalist of Boston, he bought F. B. O., which was the successor to the Robertson-Cole organization.

In December of 1927 Mr. Currier sold to interests identified with the Radio Corporation of America, personified in David Sarnoff, an interest in F. B. O. Meanwhile Mr. Kennedy was engaged in selling an interest to Keith-Albee-Orpheum. In this period came the historic collapse of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in which K. A. O. held substantial interest. In February of 1928 Mr. Kennedy went into the management of Pathe, to assist J. J. Murdock of K. A. O. in the difficulties of that situation. Soon thereafter K. A. O. bought an interest in F. B. O.

In June a deal was made for a syndicate, with Kennedy and Currier as one component, and the Pathe bankers, Elisha Walker and Jeremiah Milbank, as another, in conjunction with Lehman Brothers, bankers of K. A. O., which bought control of K. A. O. from the late E. F. Albee, and Kennedy became chairman of the board.

Invited Into First National

Now, Mr. Kennedy, riding the rising tide of his fortunes, was invited by the franchise holders of First National into the management of that concern. At about the same time he engaged in maneuvers aimed at securing the management of RCA Photophone, the Radio subsidiary concerned with the manufacture and purveyance of sound recording equipment for motion pictures.

Westward in the course of empire, Mr. Kennedy took his way to California, with a vision of something that might be called the parallel of General Motors Corporation for the motion picture industry, with F. B. O., Pathe, First National and K. A. O. and an equipment concern, RCA Photophone, as components. Meanwhile he had formed Gloria Productions, with the steller Miss Gloria Swanson as the center of that picture, as an additional and somewhat independent project.

That marked the zenith of this long and brilliant sequence. One night in August of 1928, Mr. Kennedy sailed for Europe. He had that day come to a breaking of relations with Guy Currier over aspects of the Pathe Exchange deal. And simultaneously he had come to a parting of the ways with First National. While Kennedy was in Europe Currier maneuvered the transactions by which control of both Keith and F. B. O. were acquired by David Sarnoff for the Radio Corporation of America interests, from which was born the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, or RKO as the trade knows it today.

Soon after Mr. Kennedy returned from Europe he had his office at Pathe and a salary of $2,500 a week for management, his Gloria Productions, engaged in an ill-fated investment of $800,000 in a picture entitled "Queen Kelly" and a number of plans and projects. Conspicuous among these projects was a combination with the Shubert theatrical enterprises, which did not survive the promotional preliminaries.

Meanwhile Mr. Kennedy had gathered about him at Pathe, from F. B. O. and elsewhere, the personal staff which he had built up at the Fore River yards in shipbuilding days, and from Boston, including Edward Moore, former secretary to Mayor Fitzgerald, E. B. Derr of Bethlehem, Pa., Thomas Delahanty and John F. McAloon, formerly of the Boston office of the Department of Internal Revenue, and Clinton J. Scollard, formerly of Braintree, Mass., also Stuart W. Webb, previously of the Old Colony Trust Company, the Eastern Manufacturing Company and other New England industrials, with whom he had established contact through Guy Currier, and Arthur Poole, an honor graduate of Harvard and the Graduate School of Business Administration.

Steadily the fortunes of Pathe Exchange, Inc., declined and it is closely contemporary history that the sequence which Guy Currier set in motion by drawing Radio into the picture at F. B. O. swept on, surviving its author, and presently overtook Pathe through the acquisition of its active operating assets and activities by RKO. As this culmination drew closer and closer Mr. Kennedy divided his time chiefly between California and Florida, having about a year ago effectively withdrawn from intimate participation in the operating affairs of the concern. The announcement of April 24 assumes therefore only the significance of a formality.

Is That Gratitude?

Chicago—One of the country's better known salesmen, a steady-going capable chap, is on the staff of a prominent distributing company, which for many years has promised him the managership of its local exchange as a reward for faithfully serving the company.

"The next time there is an opening," has now developed into just a stock phrase, having been repeated by company executives on numerous occasions. Each time, including the most recent of a few weeks ago, an outsider has been ushered into the company and right into the vacancy. And the old veteran is left to plug along with his dimming hopes and active disappointment.

Hughes Starts Work on "Ground Hogs," Air Film

Hollywood (QP)—Howard Hughes starts work on his air comedy, "Ground Hogs," on Wednesday, with Edward Sedgwick directing. Hughes purchased six French and American airplanes of the fighting and training types. The air scenes will be shot at March Field, Riverside.

Schnitzer Returning East

Hollywood—Joseph I. Schnitzer, Radio chief, will return to New York within a few days for home office conferences, immediately after which another Hollywood visit is planned.

51 Technical Papers Lined Up by SMPE

Hollywood (QP)—Fifty-one papers are already scheduled for presentation at the Spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, held here May 25 to 29.

"While it is possible that the final program may show some changes, present plans indicate that the program will be the most important and inclusive yet to be given by the Society," reported O. M. Glunt, Chairman of the Papers Committee. "The papers cover practically every phase of the industry from a technical or engineering standpoint and their authors are recognized authorities in their particular fields."

Dr. C. E. Mees

Five papers have already been scheduled for the special color session at which Dr. C. E. K. Mees, Director of Research of the Eastman Kodak Company, will preside. These papers and their authors are "Techni-Color" by J. A. Ball; "Hand Coloring of Motion Picture Film" by Gustave Brock; "Design and Construction of Multi-Color Equipment" by Bruce Burns; "M-G-M Color Process" by O. O. Ceccarini; and "Multi-Color Process" by R. M. Otis.

Southeastern Owners Will Start Cooperative Buying

Atlanta—At the annual summer convention of the Southeastern Theatres Association, it is understood, a proposal will be made for a buying cooperative, to be considered with double-featuring, protection, opposition to block booking and score charges.

The organization's bulletin said: "Cooperative buying are words of fire to unthinking distributors. But if cooperative buying is good for the exhibitor, it is good for the distributor. The distributors' welfare is directly dependent upon the theatre man."

Threatens Court Action If Universal Sells a Picture

Chicago—Ben Judell, independent distributor who has territorial rights to Liberty's 1930-31 product, threatens court action if Universal attempts to sell "Mothers' Millions" in this territory.

Liberty has delivered its first film, "Ex-Flame" to Judell, but has not forwarded the second, "Mothers' Millions." He controls Indiana, Northern Illinois, Wisconsin and upper Michigan.

Anna Q. Nilsson Returning

Anna Q. Nilsson, injured three years ago, is rapidly recovering at Nice, France, and is expected in Hollywood in June to resume her screen work.

Tempering Tempers!

Hollywood—Bad tempers are troublesome any time, but they are especially obnoxious on the set. The M-G-M company filming "Girls Together" claims to have discovered a remedy for most of the trouble by stopping the annoyance at the source. The means: a shiny piece of metal which looks like a medal and costs about 25 cents. When anyone, technical or prop men particularly, makes a mistake, the medal is quietly pinned on him, indicating that someone is wrong without the guilty one being publicly criticized. An Expert Says Okeh!

Berkeley, Cal.—Chief of Police August Vollmer, who enjoys an international reputation as an authority on crime, has returned from a trip to Hollywood to preview six gangland pictures at the invitation of Will H. Hays. He was given unlimited authority to "cut" at will, make changes or order complete abolishment of the pictures. He ordered but one "cut" in the entire group. He suggested that producers use a type of police executive in their pictures who has been prominent in ridding the country of gangsters and racketeers and this suggestion was accepted by Hays.

Fox Will Urge Theatres to Help Build Star Values

by Henry King, and "Salomy Jane" with Raoul Walsh directing from Paul Armstrong's play.

Miss Gaynor also will have a special in "Heart Free," with David Butler and George DeSylva as co-directors, DeSylva here making his first as an associate producer.

Farrell will have two. In "Surrender" he is paired with Joan Bennett under William K. Howard's direction, and Hardie Albright in the cast. S. N. Behrman adapted the story from Pierre Benoit's novel. In "Sob Sister," directed by Sidney Lanfield, he is assisted by Linda Watkins, Una Merkel, Warren Hymer, William Collier, Sr., Marjorie White and Allan Dinehart.

Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe will be on the police force in "Disorderly Conduct," Raoul Walsh again directing them. The story is by Barry Connors.

McLaglen has four other productions. In "Wicked" he shares the honors with Elissa Landi and Spencer Tracy. Allan Dwan will direct from Gordon Rigby's story, adapted by Adela Rogers St. John. "While Paris Sleeps" will have him teamed with Joan Bennett and Fifiy Dorsay, the cast also including Virginia Cherrill, Gaylord Pendleton and Joan Castle. "Rogues Gallery" will be based on Peter B. Kyne's story and directed by Rowland Brown. Lois Moran will assist in the fourth, "The Heir to the Hoorah," John Ford directing from Paul Armstrong's play.

Lowe will star in three. Lois Moran, Greta Nissen, Myrna Loy and John Halliday will be with him in "Transatlantic," directed by William K. Howard from the Guy Bolton original. Warner Baxter will be his crony in "Silver City," and the cast for this picture, written by Quinn Martin, will include Miss Nissen and Miss Loy, Irving Cummings directing. Virginia Cherrill and Allan Dinehart will be with him in "The Midnight Cruise," Hamilton McFadden directing this mystery melodrama.

Four to Feature Baxter

There will be four featuring Warner Baxter besides "Silver City." Elissa Landi will be with him in "In Her Arms," to be co-directed by William Cameron Menzies and Kenneth MacKenna, with Paul Cavanagh also having a part. The story is by Pierre Frondaie. The same trio, as well as Una Merkel, and the same directing duet will be in "Cheating," Gene Towne's story. "Alimony Queens" is to be directed by Seymour Felix. The story, by Vernie E. Connolly, was written for the screen by Leon Gordon. The fifth is Barry Connors' "A Ticket to Hell," with Walsh directing Sally Eilers, Hardie Albright, Cecilia Loftus and George E. Stone.

Spencer Tracy will have five starring pictures. Following "Wicked," in which he costars with McLaglen and Miss Landi, Tracy will star in Charles Francis Coe's "Swindle," William K. Howard directing Humphrey Bogart, Cecilia Parker, James Kirkwood and Peggy Ross. Henry King will direct "Devil's Daughter," with Misses Loy and Merkel. In "Price No Object" Tracy teams with Warren Hymer, Allan Dwan directing. Louise Huntington and Dixie Lee also are in the cast. "Sugar Daddies" has El Brendel and Marguerite Churchill featured, Seymour Felix directing.

Elissa Landi will be starred in five pictures. Besides "Wicked," "In Her Arms" and "Cheating," she will be in "The Yellow Ticket," from Michael Morton's stage play, with Alfred Santell directing and Hardie Albright playing opposite. The fifth will be "Some Girls Are Dangerous," with Donald Dillaway and Rosalie Joy in support and Alfred Werker directing.

Barrymore the Maestro

John Barrymore bowed to Broadway on Thursday in "Svengali," and his splendid, highly dramatic performance as DuMaurier's maestro so far overshadows all other production factors as to create a wide gap between the show which is staged by the star and that to which the support and remaining production parts contribute.

It's heavy, with but very few and widely separated snatches of laughter, and these interspersed through only the initial reels.

Picturegoers who are fond of the dramatic will find in it much to their liking, thanks to Barrymore, who, as the erratic and egotistical genius of musical composition, rises from the depths and from the filth of a dirty attic to operatic heights with his young student and wife, "Trilby." A ruined career and death for both climaxes Svengali's unreciprocated love for the singer.

It's Barrymore's show.

CUNNINGHAM

Greta Nissen, besides her roles in "Disorderly," "Transatlantic" and "Silver City," will play opposite Paul Cavanagh in "Human Toys," directed by Lanfield.

George O'Brien has four new productions. Zane Grey's "Riders of the Purple Sage" will be directed by Cummings, the cast including Misses Cherrill and Churchill and James Kirkwood. In Grey's "The Rainbow Trail" the players also include Linda Watkins, Allan Dinehart, Gaylord Pendleton and Rosalie Roy, John Blystone's direction. "The Royal Road to Romance" will be from Richard Halliburton's story, Benjamin Stoloff directing and Maureen O'Sullivan and Frank Albertson also in the cast. "The Great Air Robbery" will be directed by Alfred Werker, with Miss Dorsay opposite and Terrance Ray in support.

Mae Marsh Returns

El Brendel will have four. First comes "Delicious," next "Sink or Swim" with Henry Lehrman directing Marjorie White, Cecelia Parker, Rosalie Joy, Peggy Ross, Dixie Lee and Joyce Compton. "The Hysterical Age" is directed by Lanfield and includes Frank Albertson, Joan Castle and Rosalie Roy in the cast. The fourth is "Sugar Daddies."

Mae Marsh returns in a talking version of "Over the Hill," King directing a cast including Howard Phillips, Kirkwood, Dillaway, Dixie Lee, Gerard Stewart, Virginia Sale and Nat Pendleton.

Sally Eilers will have the title role in Vina Delmar's "Bad Girl," Borzage directing. Thomas Meighan heads "Skyline," written by Kenyon Nicholson from Felix Reisenberg's story. Direction is by Taylor, and Albright, and Misses O'Sullivan and Loy are featured. "She Wanted a Millionaire" is an original by William Anthony McGuire with Blystone directing. Warner Oland will be Charlie Chan in "Charlie Chan's Chance," MacFadden directing, and another with the same detective role, under Stoloff's direction.

Other stories and their directors include "Young America," John Ford, from Fred Ballard's story; "Son-in-Law," Edwin Dail Torgerson story and Stoloff direction; Maude Fulton's stage play, "The Brat," Ford directing; "Lipstick," Menzies; Peter B. Kyne's "Thoroughbreds," Blystone; "Champagne," MacKenna; "Panama," Santell; "Honeymoon," MacFadden, with Yvonne Pelletier one of those in the cast.

A. R. Wylie; "Love Affair"; "The Other Passport," with Irene Dunne; "Dance, Gigolo, Dance," with Ricardo Cortez; and another Rex Beach story.

Flexible percentage agreements will be the policy for the year, the sales staff was told. It was stated that the percentage contract will form the bulk of the company's agreements.

The entire sales organization of Radio Pictures in the United States and Canada was brought to the Coast for this convention, the concentration of selling forces bringing together 150 men to plan their campaign for the next half year.

One of the important developments of the convention was the opening of a centralized effort for cooperation by the salesmen toward improved reproduction of sound in theatres with which they contact.

Speakers at convention sessions, besides Schnitzer, have included William Le Baron, vice president in charge of production, Charles Rosenzweig on sales policy, Louis Brock and Harry Scott of Van Beuren Corporation on short product, Frank O'Heron on exchange operations, Lou Gaudreau and Jack Pegler of Lord, Thomas and Logan, on cooperative advertising, and by Phil Hodes, Cleve Adams, Jerry Safron, Henry Cohen, Clifford Wallace, Harry Michalson and Percy Taylor.

ing a new low of 16¼. Renewed uncertainty regarding the Paramount dividend accounted for most of the drop in that issue, which hit a low of 28½, where it compared with the year's high of 50¼.

Although showing considerable losses, rallying tendencies cropped out in Eastman Kodak and Loew's, the latter having been subject to some selling on the report showing net profit for 28 weeks ended March 13 amounted to $6,879,960, compared with $8,243,584 in the corresponding period of 1930. However, the figures were above the like period of 1929, when $5,251,958 was reported.

Warners was weak, selling off to a new low of 7⅛ in the general decline and showing slight rallying power. However, opinion in the street is that Warners at the present level has been worked into an oversold condition and has about discounted recession in earnings and other unfavorable factors. New lows on comparatively small declines were made by Consolidated Film and Pathe.

Making their first appearance on the tape late in the week, Columbia Pictures common and voting trust certificates were subject to sharp downward price readjustments, both touching new lows. Aside from a sympathetic dip in General Theatres preferred, other curb issues were fairly steady.

Crash Not Fault Of Public : Spring

Sam Spring, former general counsel for First National, writing in the current Atlantic Monthly on "Whirlwinds of Speculation," deals with the three great booms and subsequent collapses in commodities, land and securities within the past 10 years.

Spring holds that the public merely sought guidance from those who claimed themselves to be experts in finance and investment, and refuses to place the blame for the investment catastrophe on public madness, to which it has been often attributed.

"Unless our investment and commercial banking leaders prudently and courageously maintain our investment banking machinery in balance as it distributes new securities," he says, "and unless they restrain it at critical times from ungoverned frenzies of self-destroying speed, our newly won world economic and banking mastery will bring neither America nor the world happiness or profit."

Trans-Lux Not Expected To Enter Cleveland Zone

Cleveland—No steps have been taken to enter Cleveland with Trans-Lux theatres. The territory is not regarded as fertile soil for houses of this type first because there are not enough transients to support them, and because several first-run deluxe theatres are offering 25c morning shows. In order to compete with these, it is believed, Trans-Lux would have to cut prices to 10 and 15 cents. And desirable locations here cost too much to make it profitable at such low admissions.

It is further understood that the company is quietly establishing itself on the continent. One report claims Paramount will have the biggest circuit in Europe in five years.

With Al Boyd, president of Moon Amusement Company, and prime mover in Paramount activities here, as chief advocate of the system. The idea has favorably impressed many exhibitors, particularly among independents.

The Boyd plan, which has worked out successfully at Keith's, is that the exhibitor, instead of separating his shopping for features and shorts, accepts the judgment of the feature exchange for the best bill to balance his program. If the feature happened to be a Paramount feature of dramatic nature, the Paramount exchange would regulate the surrounding bill to suit, not drawing alone from Paramount shorts, but from all companies. Henceforth the show would travel entirely as a unit, with at least 400 days guaranteed to the complete show locally. The advantage to the exhibitor would be an elimination of all worries as to what sort of shorts he should use to fill his program. The disadvantages, of course, would be the logical impulse of the feature exchange to use only its own shorts.

On the other hand, Keith's has been winning popularity in the last several months by reason of its well balanced programs, and by no means has used Paramount shorts exclusively. The policy of the Keith management is to fit the feature with a balanced surrounding bill, that is, a heavy feature with light shorts, and light shorts with novelty features. The plan has received considerable support from exhibitors.

Expect Quebec to Modify Ban on Child Attendance

Montreal—It is expected that the Quebec government will shortly arrange to modify the law prohibiting children under 16 from attending film performances, with the provincial elections very near.

The ban, two years old, is the direct result of the disaster in Montreal in which 78 children lost their lives.

No Holds Barred As Stockholders Of Pathe Battle

Exchange, Inc., for which a receiver is asked and in which the plaintiff's allege improper, neglectful and wasteful acts of directors in regard to the company's operation and the transfer of its assets. Because of this suit it was expected that a more vehement protest against Pathe operations would be voiced at this meeting. The demonstration, however, was purposely avoided, according to Kreeger, of the minority legal forces, until further headway is made in the court action, or until preliminary court examination of the defendants who are named in the suit, including: George Armsby, Frank Callahan, Paul Fuller, Jeremiah Milbank, J. J. Murdock, Elisha Walker, Joseph P. Kennedy, Stuart Webb, E. B. Derr, C. J. Scollard, C. A. Reynolds, L. D. Burton, R. C. Hunt, Lewis Innerarity, and Pathe Exchange, Inc. The suit will not reach trial for several months according to Kreeger.

Say Suit May Never Be Tried

Kreeger and Conn, who owns 300 shares of stock, said however, at a minority stockholders meeting, which followed the general Pathe session, that the suit may never come to trial, Conn declaring that "they won't dare to have this mess stirred up," and stating that he already had been approached with a substantial settlement "to keep my mouth shut," but refused it on the grounds that he "would be a cur and unfaithful to my brother man, if I sold out now."

"However," stated Conn, "they can't afford to go to bat in court, but must effect a settlement before it reaches that stage." He told minority holders that "Pathe will buy off all of them rather than defend this action."

That Pathe's management already has eliminated important minority oppositions by purchasing stock at prices above current quotations was admitted from the floor by Stuart Webb, who, as Pathe's chairman of the meeting, acknowledged as accurate a statement by Conn that the company had purchased from lawyers the stock of clients who threatened vigorous legal action against the RKO sale.

It later was disclosed by a Wall Street broker attending the private minority meeting that as much as $15.50 a share had been secretly paid to prospective plaintiffs for their "A" stock, an unusually high price in view of the fact that the stock, which is now selling at about $4.50, sold for as low as $3.87½ within the past two years. It was said that $125,000 had been paid by Pathe to buy up stock of opposition groups.

"Steamroller" Tactics Charged

At the meeting both Conn and Kreeger charged Pathe with "steamroller" tactics. "They have filled the meeting with employees and friends," said Kreeger, "who are ordered by the powers that be to crush and vigorously fight against the poor and unsuspecting stockholders."

Conn on the floor compared the directors and executives of Pathe with "Benedict Arnold, the betrayer," and with "Judas," "both of whom," he said, "betrayed their trust even as the men in whom we placed our utmost confidence have betrayed us."

At the minority stockholders' private meeting Kreeger told of the "many old men of failing sight and feeble hand who come to us for an explanation of this betrayal which has cost them their life savings."

The propriety of the resignation of J. P. Kennedy last Saturday from the Pathe board and the subsequent "closed" election of Webb as his successor and as executive vice-president was questioned by Conn, who challenged Webb's right to act as chairman of the meeting. "Our directors quit," Conn said, "without taking into consideration the obligation which they owe to the stockholders who have elected them."

The meeting, scheduled to open at 2:30 p. m. on Wednesday, finally convened at 3:25, following a threatened adjournment. There are outstanding 1,199,842 shares of stock, necessitating 399,949 shares for a quorum which was lacking by 1,577 shares. The majority forces hurriedly sought for a week's adjournment which was opposed by Conn and other minority holders. Kreeger then asked for a four weeks adjournment, which, as he explained later, was "intended for the purpose of completing certain investigations into company activities which have a bearing on the stockholders suit."

Recount Discloses Quorum

Webb then took a recount of shares represented and reported a block which had not been recorded and which sent the total represented well over the mark necessary to legally conduct a meeting.

Final count revealed the following shares represented:

SHARES REPRESENTED

	In Person	By Proxy
8% Preferred	50	4,981
Class A	1,087	83,770
Common	4,835	309,989
Totals	5,972	398,740

The company's directorate comprises 15, of which the 8 per cent preferred elects 8, the "A," 4, and the common, 3.

Final balloting, in which minority holders were urged to refrain by their leaders, resulted in the following:

Directors elected by 8 per cent preferred:

And He Did!

Cincinnati—Just to prove that you should always wait for the other fellow to finish his story before you begin to make your comments. Here's a real case in point:

A local theatre supply salesman was making his report at the office following a customary trip through his territory.

"And this exhibitor," he said, mentioning the name, "gave me two orders."

"Great!" exclaimed the sales manager, "That's fine work."

"One order was to get out, and the other to stay out," was the salesman's amplification of the statement. Curtain!

Conn, Kreeger See Steamroller Tactics at Meet

George N. Armsby, Lester D. Burton, Richard C. Hunt, Jeremiah Milbank, Robert Nelson, Karl Panthen, Charles A. Stone and Elisha Walker.

Directors elected by "A" stock: Franl Callahan, Charles G. Cushing, Paul Fuller Jr., and Arthur Poole.

Directors elected by common stock: J. J. Murdock, Huntington D. Sheldon and Stuart W. Webb.

Poole is the only new member of the directorate.

Final tally which elected the directors and okayed last year's activities of the board was as follows:

	For the New Directorate	Ratifying Acts of Board
8% Pfd. Shares	4,981	.....
"A" Shares	83,770	83,820
Common Shares	309,989	310,028

It was upon the ratification of the board's acts of 1930 that minority holders voiced the loudest protest. And although the opposition mustered only 2,015 shares of "A" and 10,306 common shares against ratification, Kreeger made a highly dramatic and fiery plea on the record, against the ratification. He charged the activities of board members as being highly questionable, and stated that they planted their employees and friends in the meeting so that nominations could be offered and seconded so quickly that opposition had no voice. "It's a fake," shouted Kreeger as he told the stockholders that "minority owners no longer have confidence in the board."

"They have placed hundreds of innocent men and women in a tragic mess," he concluded.

"Destroyed Millions"

Conn followed Kreeger on the floor and reiterated many of his previous charges amplifying them with the declaration that "the present management has destroyed millions which rightfully belong to 13,000 stockholders."

"We're going to show the whole thing up," said the Providence theatre owner, who in a tirade attempted to belittle what he termed the "ridiculous" manner in which the recent annual financial statement had been compiled. "Figures don't lie," advised Conn, "but liars figure!"

In an exclusive interview following the meeting, Kreeger said that "at present we have between 100 and 200 minority stockholders lined up in the legal fight against Pathe. They represent about 20,000 shares. As a result of renewed activities launched by our Protective Association, we expect to have 1,000 names, representing upwards of 500,000 shares to append to the complaint before the case is called."

Kreeger observed that his group felt gratified over the inability of Pathe Exchange to bring to the meeting barely more than the quoroum necessary to convene. He stated: "It is indicative of the fact that the stockholders now realize they have been duped in believing that the transfer of Pathe assets to RKO would benefit their stock."

DAYLIGHT FIGHT CUTS TOTAL TO 483 CITIES

Losses to exhibitors by daylight saving, which became effective this week, runs into thousands weekly. The extra hour of daylight means hundreds of empty seats in each house nightly, cutting business severely at early deluxe performances.

Four hundred and eighty-three cities in 17 states, and others in Canada have daylight saving from late April to September. The total has been considerably reduced under last year due to vigorous battles staged by exhibitors and others in amusement fields who are hit the worst of any branch of business.

The Outsider

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Splendid Screen Version

[Reviewed in London by HERALD Representative]

"The Outsider" is the first British picture produced by the new independent unit financed by Eric Hakim, London theatre owner, and is directed by Harry Lachman, American director with several British films of high calibre to his credit. Based on the stage play by Dorothy Brandon, it is the best picture made by Lachman, and at times rises to a level unequalled by any previous British production.

It represents a magnificent example which producers contemplating the filming of stage plays ought to study earnestly.

Its embellishment on the screen makes the stage production a puny affair. Story is of a beautiful crippled girl, daughter of a leading British surgeon. She is in love, but her physical deformity prevents her sharing the social life of her young hero, and darkens the prospect of marriage.

There comes to her Anton Ragatzy, a foreign and unqualified practitioner whose electrical rack is said to have effected wonderful cures. He is ostracised by the medical profession on account of non-professional status and refusal to work as the "shadow" of a recognized surgeon. Against her father's will the girl, fascinated by Ragatzy's personality, and grasping at the thinnest straw of hope goes to his nursing home for treatment. Here Ragatzy and the girl are thrown together closely for a year; meanwhile the cub for whom she prays to regain her health is playing with other girls. Ragatzy, stifling his own feelings for the girl, lies to save her from the ill effects of disappointment, but just as the cure is declared to have been effected, and eminent medical men summoned to see the girl walk, the duplicity of the boy is revealed. Overwrought, the girl fails to walk, and the doctors denounce Ragatzy as a fraud. Just as he is about to leave the girl, she realizes her love for him, and totteringly walks after him—the confidence which is to establish the cure revealing that Ragatzy has done for her what her surgeon father and his colleagues had all failed to do.

Harold Huth who plays Ragatzy is well known on the British stage and in pictures, but "The Outsider" proves him to be outstanding among all British male artists. Joan Barry, a pretty blonde as the cripple girl, is always an object of pity, but her style is forced and as a cripple with "nothing to live for but music," is just a trifle unnatural at times. Norman MacKinnel as her father is a strong actor of good stage reputation, as is Frank Lawton, the young lover. Lawton will be remembered in stage and film versions of "Young Woodley." In "The Outsider" he does magnificently. Lachman has developed the story in amazing fashion, and his direction is at times brilliant. The production is excellently dressed, and detail has been studied with a thoroughness which is not too common in British pictures. £30,000 was put into the job, and for once it seems to have been justified by results.

Produced by Eric Hakim. Distributed by M-G-M. Directed by Harry Lachman. From the play by Dorothy Brandon. Adaptation by Harry Lachman. Running time, 90 minutes.

Good Story

This picture, which has been widely publicized as being the first all-women cast picture, lives up to this reputation only so far as not showing the faces of men is concerned. In several shots portions of men's bodies are actually brought into the picture and in a couple of scenes they are indicated by off-stage voices.

These scenes, not being necessary to tell the story, will probably be eliminated in the final cutting and the picture, therefore, live up to its advance publicity.

The picture is a depiction of the lives and loves of nine girls attached to a canteen unit behind the front which accidentally wanders into No Man's Land. The central thread of the story is the conflict between the fiancee of an aviator and a lady of loose morals who has seen him once and fallen madly in love with him. The rivalry between the two girls is brought to a head by a snooping character who tells the fiancee of the indiscretions of the aviator, and then to a further culmination by a threat to inform the matron of her affairs. This would naturally result in her being sent home and she maneuvers to have one of the other girls unknowingly kill the snooping girl with an unused grenade. She redeems herself by sacrificing her life to bring help to the beleaguered women.

The story is an excellent one, but the too frequent touches of comedy interrupt its continuity at times. The pace is fast, a bit too fast in fact, as some of the lines are spoken with such rapidity as to blur them.

The photography is poor and the director has not made the most of his talent in telling the story. Further cutting will undoubtedly eliminate these defects.

Lilyan Tashman stands out in an excellent performance of a wise-cracking, cognac-drinking, much-married woman with a heart as big as all outdoors. Louise Fazenda is her usual self in a comedy part and the balance of the cast is adequate.

Play light musicals or comedies for best program balance.

Traveling Husbands

(Radio)

Highly Entertaining

"Traveling Husbands" is an all 'round good picture. It has plenty of humor to balance the heavy drama and provides a good evening's entertainment. The picture is well cast and the performances for the most part are exceptional.

Paul Sloane, the director, has been able to keep the talker moving at a speedy tempo throughout. In places where the story might have been rather dull he has inserted some lively humor that makes the picture sparkle. Several times the dialogue demanded long speeches on the part of various players but in each instance, happily, the delivery of these speeches was such that they were at no time uninteresting. It is the direction that helps the picture move fast for in some spots the story was not wholly adequate to carry the action.

Evelyn Brent has the leading role, which she handles in her usual adept manner. Her scene with Dorothy Peterson is a splendid bit of acting on the part of both women, and a scene that in lesser hands could have hurt the picture immensely. Constance Cummings is fine in a romantic role. Hugh Herbert as the comical Jewish salesman is outstanding. Others who do fine work are Carl Miller, Frank McHugh, Frank Albertson, Spencer Charters, Purnell Pratt, Stanley Fields and Rita LaRoy.

The story opens with Herbert, Miller, Charters and Albertson in the club car of a train. Albertson is planning a sales campaign on a particularly "tough" customer and the other boys are planning for a good time. At the office of the "tough" customer Albertson meets Miss Cummings, as the customer's daughter. They plan a date but Albertson fails to appear when he finds his expense check has not arrived. Miss Cummings, ready for a good time, accepts the proposal of Carl Miller and they go out to see the town. Albertson is told by Brent, a former sweetheart of Miller's, that Constance is with Miller. When the pair return to the hotel Miller makes a play for Miss Cummings and in the battle that ensues he is shot, apparently by Albertson.

The whole gang is then held incommunicado in the hotel while Stanley Fields, the detective, tries to find out who fired the shot. When Albertson is about to be led to jail Brent confesses to the shooting and tells Miss Peterson just what kind of a chap her husband Miller is. It all ends with Brent going free as Miller refuses to press any charges against her. As a result Albertson is free to marry Miss Cummings and the traveling men as well as their women companions, learn a lesson.

Use musicals or travelogues here to balance program.

Gripping

[Reviewed in London by HERALD Representative]

To the present generation the famous Dreyfus case which startled France and the outside world in 1894 is but a page of history; just a few of the more mature cinema patrons will recall the period when Capt. Dreyfus was accused of treason, tried, found guilty and sent to Devil's Island.

Thousands however, will have read the story of the ill-fated captain's subsequent suffering, of the untiring efforts of his friends to prove his innocence, and of his final vindication. To all these the title will make an instant appeal. But even to those whose grasp of history is such that they accept this extraordinary story as fiction, this will prove a gripping picture.

It suffers somewhat from the attempts of the producer to speed up movement through vigorous cutting; this is scarcely the subject on which to undertake experiment of the kind attempted. The opening (2,000 feet) is jumpy to a degree, and the repetition of court scenes —there are two trials as well as two military "Drumming" ceremonies—goes near to confusing the spectator. Yet apart from matters of detail such as the treatment and behaviour of witnesses, in which occur many flagrant inconsistencies, the picture holds right through. This is due mainly to the magnificent acting of Cedric Hardwicke, well-known stage actor who here makes his start in motion pictures. His study of Dreyfus is a delight, and all through he holds the heart strings of every watcher.

To those who still believe in the guilt of Dreyfus, this picture will offer an affront, because throughout the picture, no effort is made to conceal the wretchedness of the system which condemns him on less than flimsy evidence, mainly as it seems because "he is the only Jew in the artillery unit which harbors a traitor among its officery." British International and F. W. Kraemer (German) were bold to undertake the subject, which they have made in German as well as English. They were not bold enough to make it in French, presumably taking their lesson from the fate of the play "The Case of Dreyfus" which was banned in that country.

According to authorities, the picture is fairly close to historical detail, though court scenes are not shown to be quite as disorderly and as crowded as they actually were, and the assassination of counsel for the defense in the trial of Emile Zola, writer of the famous "J'Accuse" letter exposing the military habit of perverting justice, is shown as taking place in court; it actually took place in the street.

The strong point about the picture is acting. Every member of the cast manages to convince. Outstanding work is forthcoming from George Merritt as Zola; Leonard Shepherd as Clemenceau; Garry Marsh as the real traitor Esterhazy who fled to England where he died a natural death in poverty many years later; Fisher White as Pellieux and Sam Livesey as Labori.

"Dreyfus" has its great moments. Its main weakness is spelled "episodic." Lack of smoothness may have been due to the presence on the floor of two directors, each of whom had ideas of his own. It is not a great picture, and one feels it went so near to it as to make one murmur "pity."

"Dreyfus" will probably not quite shatter the box-office, though it will be remembered when lots of other British pictures have been readily forgotten.

Produced by British International. Distributed by Wardour Films. Directed by F. W. Kraemer (German) and Milton Rosmer (British). Dialogue and adaptation by Reginald Berkeley and Walter Mycroft.

The Reckless Hour

(First National)

Highly Entertaining

Hats off to Warner-First National studios for their splendid production, "The Reckless Hour," starring Dorothy Mackaill! This picture has an excellent cast and exceptional dialogue which makes it an unusually entertaining film. The direction of John Francis Dillon is fine and the adaptation of Florence Ryerson is also noteworthy. Conversations abound with witticisms and comedy is rampant. A Glendale preview audience laughed heartily and applauded sincerely at the conclusion of the presentation.

The star gives a performance that would be outstanding were it not for the calibre of her supporting players. Joan Blondell and Joe Donahue present perhaps the most refreshing characterizations as the two wisecracking sweethearts.

H. B. Warner portrays the old-fashioned father with considerable skill. Dorothy Peterson is good in a small role as the mother eager to give her daughter what she, herself, cannot have.

Conrad Nagel is splendid as the artist in love with the girl. Walter Byron is well cast as the suave millionaire's son who swerves her from the straight and narrow path.

The plot concerns a fashion model who is overwhelmed by the apparent love and sincerity of a millionaire's son, and gives him all. Her old fashioned father discovers her philanderings and goes to the boy's father.

A family conference is held and the girl arrives in time to hear the boy deny that he asked her to marry him. It is a powerful scene. Heartbroken, she quits her job and goes to a rest home where a child is born to her, dead. Her father speculates in the market to keep her at the home and loses all his money. She has been posing for an artist who is in love with her. He asks her to go to Paris with him, but she refuses.

Learning of her father's misfortune, she decides to accompany him for remuneration. At the same time he arrives at the conclusion to marry her. An unpleasant situation is avoided when the couple agree on a marriage at sea as the irate father arrives on the scene.

It is a whale of a good story and carries a great kick!

Use light comedies and cartoon numbers with this feature.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by John Francis Dillon. Based on the play "Ambush" by Arthur Richman. Adaptation by Florence Ryerson. Photographed by James Van Trees. Edited by Harold Young. Running time, August 16, 1931.

SHORTS

Wings of Tomorrow

(Visugraphic)

Rates High in Interest

Programmed as "the first complete and authoritative film-story" of the new airplane, the Autogiro, this reel abounds in entertainment and packs interest aplenty, due, principally, to its appeal to an air-minded public. Made in silent form and intelligently synchronized with voice, its production and staging are of the best, combining numerous splendid air shots with an absolute minimum plug of an obvious nature.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Scared Stiff

(Universal)

Forget It

Apparently an attempt to build a comedy drama short from old shots of animals in the Universal files. Takes place in Africa, and fortunately it is short. Two stupid detectives are ordered to discover the diamond thief at the diamond mines. The animals are supposed to frighten them until they are scared stiff. A sigh of relief when it is over. Just another short mistake.—Running time, 17 minutes.

The Spirit of 76th Street

(Vitaphone)

Great Comedy

Helen Broderick, as usual, keeps her screen audience tickled from the word go. A spiritualist seance is the excuse, and Helen takes full advantage with smart remarks which disconcert the medium and give the audience a pleasant dose of laugh-tonic. Arthur Hurley, director. A good laugh anywhere.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Sultan's Cat

Fine, Original

The sultan kills his cat, by drowning in the well, and he suffers for it with a horrible dream, involving cats, mummies which dance, and skeletons which do tap routines. It is a terrible night mare, but the cartoon comedy and the antics of the figures are great. Original, funny and a clever idea. Worth while in the short line.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Midnight in a Toy Shop

(Columbia-Disney)

Entertains

A Silly Symphony number which has the merit of lightness, and general amusement. A spider gets badly mixed up in a toy shop. All the little whatevers in the place sing in different keys as the spider spoils their play. The youngsters should enjoy it very much, and the oldsters will be entertained.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Gossipy Plumber

(RKO Pathe)

Weak

The plumber with all his antics and carrying on succeeds only in becoming vastly boring as the supposed comedy, one of the last of the current season, goes on. Charles Lamont directed but it might well have been left undone.—Running time, 20 minutes.

ALAN CROSLAND says . .

"Dress up a picture in Technicolor and you enhance its value 50 per cent.

"Color does more than lend beauty and distinction to a production; it intensifies dramatic interest—tones up an ordinary story.

"Technicolor, under the leadership of Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, has made tremendous improvements in its process, and still greater advances are imminent.

"There is a definite place for Technicolor in motion pictures—and that place is at the top."

That is the judgment of the man who directed "The Jazz Singer," "Don Juan," and "Viennese Nights," current all-Technicolor hit, and many other box-office productions.

Here's Luck
Slim Again, and Great

Universal has a great comedy series in the Slim Summervilles. Each one is better than the preceding and this number is no exception. Slim and the top-sergeant, played by Tom Kennedy, and this time, Gretchen, for the soldier comics are in Germany, supply the amusement, and it is worth billing for itself alone. Best spot: Slim, tinkering with a great shell, which rolls down the street, blows up the brewery. The boys of the A. E. F. all but wallow in the flood of beer. As usual, here and there an off-color shot or two, but they move rapidly without offense. Play it hard, it is far and away worth it.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Don't Divorce Him
Some Laughs

Clyde Cook almost loses his job when, as the clerk in the office of a divorce lawyer, he persuades women to return to their husbands, while the boss is out. He is given a chance, however, if he is successful in bringing a famous doctor into court by a certain hour. His experiences in the hospital, being thrown out several times, and running about in night clothes and various disguises, is amusing enough. When he gets his man, he spoils it for the lawyer again, and is chased down the street in nightcap and gown for the fadeout. Several good laugh spots.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Maid to Order
(Vitaphone)
Clumsy

Too much effort is expended by the players to inject humor into this comedy for it to be a successful short. The idea is ancient and the lines no less so. An impertinent maid spills the soup down the guests' necks, and the like. The maid gets her mistress to do the work while she talks to her beau on the phone, which is a good idea, but is here poorly handled. A light touch is decidedly lacking.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Second Hand Kisses
(Radio)
Great Youngster Stuff

When the youngsters are invited to the newlyweds for a week-end, they do their best to tear down the house, and the youngsters out front should get a real kick out of the short. When Louise Fazenda and Jimmy Finlayson marry, they suddenly discover that each has a child in the orphanage, and on adopting offspring they disapprove each other's choice. In the end the orphanage burns and they are forced to keep all the youngsters. Good.—Running time, 20 minutes.

No Privacy
(Vitaphone)
Weak

Lloyd Hamilton in another of the queer roles. No reason for it, however, the short being slow and lifeless. Almost a reel while he buys a hat. Peps up a little when creditors remove his clothing in his girl's home. Very old, and most audiences will look for the end. —Running time, 20 minutes.

Sunny South
(Universal)
Only Fair

Oswald the Rabbit does his trick this time with a very few new stunts, but many old ones. Animateds must have plenty of originality to score. This hasn't enough. Cannot rate very high.—Running time, 6 minutes.

SHORTS

The Last Straw
(Vitaphone)
Good Idea

A clever comedy idea is spoiled here by poor voice recording for the most part, which ruins the lines. A school of pharmacy is the theme, where concocting sandwiches is the lesson. When a graduate takes his first drug store job, the rush of customers drives him almost insane and a tumble completes the job. He is amusing in his mumblings while getting first aid, but the recording here does its damage. Alf Goulding directed.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Tex in 1999
(Paramount-Texaco)
Good

Another Texaco Company industrial on the usual comedy cartoon style, and rates well with the others. This time, filling stations as they might be in 1999 are pictured with numerous new and amusing twists. The finish is smart. A lad and lassie pull up to the station, operate the machinery, and in quick succession are provided with marriage license, ceremony, a pair of twins delivered through a chute, and a divorce. Real laughs and plenty of them.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Naggers at the Dentist
(Vitaphone)
Gets By

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth, the Naggers, in another of their series, this time with Jack having a chance to revenge himself on his wife when she comes to him as a patient. He uses his instruments, and how! Overacting, however, weakens the short to a great extent, and Jack's running clatter of talk wears a bit. A few laughs, but not overburdened. Arthur Huley, director.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Thou Shalt Not
(Paramount)
Good

Through his own comic ability, Bill House, as a stupid waiter in a night club, succeeds in garnering numerous laughs, despite a story which is decidedly feeble. Two couples leave without paying their bills and Billy follows them home. The four try to keep the occurrence a secret, which is the plot. Good enough. —Running time, 19 minutes.

Air Tight
(M-G-M—Roach)
Only Fair

One of the Boy Friend numbers, but outside several good laugh moments, is too lengthy in sequence, but noticeably lacking in real punch. Deals for the most part with the attempts of an amateur to reach terra firma after accidentally embarking on a glider hop. Long shots show what is meant to be the glider whirling through space, but it is obviously a plane. Not much.—Running time, 17 minutes.

23—Skidoo
Too Old

Lew Fields' type of comic chatter is rather out of date, or at least it appeared to be so according to the reaction of a Broadway audience. The comedy idea was also noticeably lacking, giving Fields a difficult time at best. As a comedy short, cannot rate very much.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Ghost Parade
Amusing

Andy Clyde tries to sell an old house, believed to be haunted. It turns out that the "ghosts" are merely a couple of crooks who attempt to scare the building from Andy without troubling about money. Marjorie Beebe plays the secretary who does much frightened screaming, and Harry Gribbon as the constable, makes his fright look real and makes faces in general. Frank Eastman steps in when the crooks are uncovered to clinch with Marjorie. Andy probably does the best comedy job. Will draw plenty of laughs, use it.—Running time, 22 minutes.

The Hudson and Its Moods
(Paramount)
Satisfactory

Herein the scenic beauty of a Hudson River trip is pictured, but it is weakened by a particularly sentimental talk by the boat's captain taking his last trip. The interior of Sing Sing, West Point and Vassar College are the shore shots. Fair general interest and the photography is splendid. Howard Bretherton directed. —Running time, 9 minutes.

Not So Loud
(RKO Pathe)
Poor

There is far too much monotony in this alleged comedy effort for it to be even nearly funny. The comic detective was supposed to clean up the beer runners, but there is little enough reason for the whole thing. Laugh spots are few and far between.—Running time, 19 minutes.

A Trip to Tibet
(Vitaphone)
Excellent

One of those film tours through the "forbidden" territory of the East, which fascinates and intrigues any audience, regardless. Most interesting are details of the praying machines, the natives and their strange customs and dress. Interesting, great appeal. Use it.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Animal World of Make Believe (Talking Picture Epics)
Splendid

The appeal in this interesting and attractive nature study should be well-nigh universal. Unusual shots of strange undersea life are especially good. For example, fish which are able to change their markings at will, some which excrete "smoke screens" on attack and crabs which hide from enemies in empty sea shells. Decidedly worth while.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Somebody Stole My Gal
(Paramount)
Poor

One of the Paramount screen song numbers, in the animated cartoon style, but, like the others of its kind, has a very limited appeal to a certain type of audience only. Intelligent people will probably find it discouraging entertainment.—Running time, 6 minutes.

The Mad Melody
(RKO Pathe)
Great

Here is an Aesop Fable cartoon comedy which will get over for real laughs anywhere and any time. The animated animals put on an opera performance, while others act as musicians. The lion is the orchestra leader and he is more than funny. A good laugh short.—Running time, 8 minutes.

FLASHLIGHTING FOX CONVENTION

A Day With Those Attending the Week-Long Sales Meeting in New York City

Foreign salesmen, Clayton Sheehan, foreign manager, and Truman H. Talley, with models used in newsreel fashion sequence.

One of the high-spots of the Fox convention is represented in this group of pictures—a visit of all those attending, to the headquarters of Fox Movietone, as the guests of Truman H. Talley, commander of the newsreel sector. There the conventioneers were tendered a buffet luncheon served in the editorial room, and they also witnessed the filming of a sequence for the newsreel under the direction of Vyvyan Donner, fashion editor. Convention activities in general were under the supervision of the office of General Sales Manager James R. Grainger.

Producing Movietone News fashion feature, "Around the Clock in Pajamas," for benefit of convention delegates.

SIDELIGHTING THE FOX CONVENTION

WHAT a whale of a difference just a few months make! At the last convention, the new management had only just started to sell itself to the boys in the field. But now—oh, well, ask the salesmen.

What a party! What a party! Referring to that big golf game planned for Friday afternoon, after which the gang will motor to Far Rockaway for a shore dinner.

Clayton P. Sheehan, foreign manager, parlez-voused with his gang on new product. And how!

Will Rogers tickled the ribs of the delegates with his first for the new season, "Young As You Feel."

Witness the enthusiasm of the field crew when they board homebound trains on Sunday. It's all due to the announcement that the company will pay $5,000 in awards to the manager, assistant, salesmen and bookers of the branch which closes the greatest number of individual contracts on new product in proportion to possibilities by July 4.

Another $5,000 goes to the office that closes the most deals on new product between July 4 and August 15. Deals closed by the home office will not be included.

Prizes will be divided as follows: Manager, $2,000; Assistants, $500 and $2,500 divided between salesmen and bookers.

Any branch is eligible to win both prizes.

Vic Shapiro, generalissimo with Glendon Allvine of Fox publicity and advertising on both Coasts, will return to Movietone City via the Panama Canal.

Vic is taking the long route back so that he may have plenty of time to think things over.

With Vic will go Eddie Cook, of the Los Angeles office. Eddie pals about with Jimmy Grainger's son, Eddie.

From Fox to Tiffany to Fox. The Evers-to-Tinkers-to-Chance triple by Roy Miller, now of the Milwaukee office.

Lanky ("Continuous-Prize-Winner") Morrison, Denver office, was on hand to get the lowdown on rules and regulations governing future sales contests.

Clyde (Chicago district manager) Eckhardt spent his spare time in New York digging up old Chicago pals who are now in this town.

Clyde will no longer share duties as division and branch manager in Chicago, 'cause, on Monday, Moe Levy moves his toothbrush from Minneapolis to Eckhardt's office as branch chief.

Twenty-five years with Fox! That's the record of Izzy (Cleveland manager) Schmertz, who celebrates his silver anniversary on Saturday. 'Twas in 1906 that Izzy walked into the Fox employment office in answer to a "want ad."

At the luncheon for those attending the Fox sales convention, when they were the guests of Truman H. Talley, general manager of Movietone News, at the newsreel headquarters. Between the tables, which were laid in the editorial room, are shown James R. Grainger, general sales manager; Talley and Winfield Sheehan, general manager of the corporation.

Ask Clayton Sheehan to tell you of the old days in Buffalo when he managed that branch. With him was Bill Gehring, who only recently rejoined the company after a long affiliation with another major distributor. Bill, too, is on the roster of delegates attending the New York sales confab.

The English contingent, which includes R. Sutton Dawes, and J. H. Craine of London and J. G. Smart of Leeds, indulged in silver sides of beef and boiled carrots at Dinty Moore's.

Reduced to New Yorkese, "silver sides" of beef are nothing more, nothing less, than corned beef and cabbage.

A five-hour session devoted exclusively to the newsreel started at 4 p. m. Wednesday. Among the speakers were Harley L. Clarke, James R. Grainger and Truman Talley.

Leave it to Truman H. Talley, general manager of Fox Movietone News, to put things over in a big way. It's a cinch that one of the memorable highspots of the 1931 Fox Film Corporation convention was the visit of the delegates to the headquarters of the newsreels on 54th Street and Tenth Avenue, two blocks down from the new Home Office.

For long a leading figure in the fight to obtain recognition for the newsreels worthy of their important place in the industry, Talley conceived the idea that the time devoted to the discussion of the newsreel by the convention be spent at the reels' headquarters. Vice President James R. Grainger, who runs all the Fox sales conventions, liked the idea and it went over with a bang. And, instead of a few hours being devoted to the newsreel, Movietone News was the host to the delegates for a day. When the managers left they said it was the biggest "eye-opener" they had received since their visit to the Fox Studios in Hollywood last year. All admitted that they had no idea of the greatness of the newsreel plant, and the vast effort it took to get out 42 weekly editions, for distribution in 37 different countries.

Two of the latest sound news motor camera units were shown to the delegates to the convention, with Edmund Reek, news editor doing the honors as host. Reek gave the group a real description of the intricacies of the newsgathering processes.

A buffet lunch was served after an inspection of the big five-story building in which Fox Movietone News holds forth. The delegates were taken first to the projection rooms presided over by Managing Editor E. L. Harvey, where a newsreel makeup was in progress. Here they saw the negative of news shots edited, titled and its cutting directed. The cutting room was next visited and Chief Cutter Ben Loweree explained the workings of this department.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN A THEATRE MANAGER AND HIS WIFE:

April 3, 1930.

Dear wife:
I have sent Isabelle a rocking horse for her birthday. Thank you for reminding me. Is that our girl with the blond hair? An usher in the theatre who recently came from New York says that when he worked in the New York office he heard a rumor that theatre managers were trying to lobby a bill through Congress making it impossible for a manager to work more than 16 hours a day. Imagine! Tell the children. Love and kisses,

Dear Sam:
I can't tell you how glad you make me when you say such things. I do hope you'll be home before Christmas at least once. Last year you were only home four times. Why can't you let some one take your place for just one day? Goodness, the New York office wouldn't complain of just one, teeny, weeny day. Oh, yes, my sister Ruth is going around with a sailor. I told her, "Goodness, don't marry a sailor; they're never home." And she said, "You're telling me, sister." I think she's getting a little deaf lately. Love and kisses,

Dear Mr. Silver:
Four of the chairs in the theatre need new plush. I was wondering if you would o. k. the enclosed estimate for these seats, amounting to $2.70? Business isn't so good right now on account of the opening of a miniature golf course, a trout farm, a horseshoe pitching game, a merry-go-round and a penny Arcade on our block. The circus is coming to town next week. Baseball starts in two weeks. Sincerely,

Writer-Producer Contract Draft Shows Progress

Hollywood (QP)—Very satisfactory progress is reported by the committee of writers which is working under the sponsorship of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on a standard form of writer-producer contract and a proposed code of practices.

Approximately fifty of the most prominent writers now in Hollywood are engaged in working out plans, either on the main committee, which has seventeen members, or on one of the nine sub committees. The main group meets each Monday night at the Academy to receive reports from the sub committees and to fit them into the general program which is being worked out. Later, when the sub committees have completed their work and the general committee has shaped together the various angles under consideration into a complete plan, a general meeting of writers again will be called, and the whole program submitted for consideration and adoption. It is then anticipated that a committee of writers will be delegated to meet with a committee of producers for a series of conferences out of which the writers hope will come a complete bill of rights and form of contract to cover writing for pictures.

The general committee is headed by Waldemar Young as chairman, and Alfred A. Cohn is a member ex-officio, being chairman of the writers branch of the Academy. Other members of this main committee are Clara Beranger, Ralph Block, Martin Flavin, Oliver H. P. Garrett, Benjamin Glazer, Howard Green, Percy Heath, Bradley King, Gerrit Lloyd, John Meehan, Herman Mankiewicz, Jane Murfin, Richard Schayer, James Seymour and Frank Woods.

The sub committees so far appointed are as follows:

ETHICS: Ralph Block, chairman; A. P. Younger, Bartlett Cormack, Harvey Thew, Horace Jackson, Maurine Watkins, Dudley Nichols, Becky Gardner.

GENERAL SURVEY: James Seymour, chairman; Jane Murfin and Gerrit Lloyd.

FREELANCE WRITERS: Clara Beranger, chairman; Edwin J. Mayer, Zoe Adkins and Ernst Vajda.

CREDITS: Herman Mankiewicz, chairman; Richard Schayer, Carey Wilson and J. L. Mankiewicz.

STORY SELECTION: Howard Green, chairman; John F. Goodrich, F. Hugh Herbert, Gladys Lehman and Julien Josephson.

LEGAL ASPECTS: Benjamin Glazer, chairman; Bayard Veiller and Elmer Rice.

WRITER-SUPERVISER RELATIONS: Percy Heath, chairman; J. Grubb Alexander, Douglas Doty, Salisbury Field, Grover Jones.

WRITER-DIRECTOR RELATIONS: John Meehan, chairman, with other members of committee to be selected.

ORGANIZATION: Oliver H. P. Garrett, chairman, with other members to be selected.

Other sub committees may be appointed.

TITLES OF WARNER-FN FILMS ARE ANNOUNCED

Morris Presents Production Details At Close of Three-Day Western Convention on Coast

San Francisco—Titles of the seventy pictures to be released next season by Warner Bros. and First National, 35 from each, were announced by Sam E. Morris, vice president and general manager, at the close of the three-day sales convention of the Western division, held at the St. Francis hotel April 29 and 30 and May 1.

The production program follows:

William Powell will appear in three pictures. The first will be "The Other Man," based upon a play by the English author, Roland Pertwee. Marian Marsh will have the leading feminine role, and Alfred E. Green will direct. After "The Other Man" Powell will star in "Divorce Detective," from a story by Dashiel Hammett, author of "The Maltese Falcon." Several scripts are under consideration for the third Powell vehicle.

George Arliss will be presented in "Alexander Hamilton," a screen version of the stage drama written by Arliss in collaboration with Mary P. Hamlin. In the supporting cast will be Doris Kenyon, Dudley Digges, June Collyer, Montagu Love, Lionel Belmore and others. A second Arliss picture, also in preparation, will be announced later.

John Barrymore is to be starred in "The Mad Genius," based upon a play by Martin Brown. Marian Marsh has the leading feminine role, and also in the cast are Charles Butterworth, Carmel Myers, Donald Cook and others.

Barbara Stanwyck is to be starred in three pictures. "The Purchase Price," by S. K. Morehouse, is the story of a girl who started in poverty and fought her way to a place in the sun, but only after she had paid a price. "Betrayed," an adaptation of the play "Top of the Hill," by Charles Kenyon, is described as a typical Barbara Stanwyck vehicle with a strong denoument. Miss Stanwyck's third picture will be "Desirable," from Houston Branch's play, "Safe in Hell," and will have a West Indian locale.

Constance Bennett will be presented in "The Dangerous Set," by Gregory Stone. The role to be played by Miss Bennett is described as that of a woman of many loves and one conquest too many.

At least three starring vehicles for Kay Francis will be produced, of which "The Hungry Wife" will be the first. It has been adapted from Arthur Richman's play, "Heavy Traffic." Her second picture will be "Exclusive," by Carolyn Sharpe, described as "a story of our modern women, their intrigues, their mad quest for excitement; a story of the moth and the flame, which carries a powerful climax." The third Kay Francis vehicle will also have a strong dramatic story centering around the life and love of a beautiful woman.

Dolores Costello is returning to the screen after two years' retirement in "Expensive Women," from Wilson Collison's novel, "The Passionate Sonata." Warren William has the leading masculine part, and Anthony Bushell, H. B. Warner, Joe Donahue, Morgan Wallace and Billy House will be in the cast.

There will be three Winnie Lightner pictures. "Side Show," an original by William K. Wells, who wrote "The Cock-Eyed World," is a story with a circus background which will also feature Charles Butterworth. Then will come "Big Hearted Bertha," by Leona Wilkins. Her third picture is as yet untitled.

Frank Fay will be featured in "Mr. Hercules," from the novel by Gwen Williams. It is the story of a series of occurrences on a foggy night in London.

"Paid to Dance," by Arthur Caesar, will be produced as a comedy-drama of the adventures of a Parisian gigolo. This will also probably be a Frank Fay vehicle.

"Pleasure First," by Marjorie Fischer, a novel about easy-going husbands and wives of today who take their pleasure first and the consequences later, will be acted by an all-star cast.

Two lovers who dare not fall in love are the principal figures in "Honeymoon Hotel," by Steuart M. Emery. The story has mystery and romance, its setting being a popular hotel.

"The Star Witness," by Lucien Hubbard is an action story dealing with a phase of big city life.

"The Mouthpiece," by Frank J. Collins, is the story of a criminal lawyer who dominates the lives of many shady people of the underworld. This drama is identical with the life-story of a notorious legal light.

"The House of Seven Sins," by Nicholas Armand, will be a society-drama of many women, many men and their ultra-modern lives.

"Man in the Case," a story of a man whose secret controlled the lives of an entire family, is by Harry Leason.

"Wings of the Sea," by Fred J. Russell, will center about the U. S. naval flying service, with the U. S. S. Saratoga appearing. The work of the navy fliers in all kinds of weather, taking off from airplane-carriers at sea and landing on a deck space 60 yards long during a great storm, will form the background for a dramatic love story.

"Society Lane," by Catherine E. Knox, will tell of a debutante who knows her Park Avenue. This story will be the first authentic expose of intimate life among certain wealthy circles of New York.

Another naval picture will be "The Submarine Commander," by M. J. Jones, an adventure story which will probably be made with the co-operation of the U. S. Navy.

A human story of particular interest to women is promised in "For Sale," by Frederica Descrau.

Booth Tarkington has written "The Yankee Kid," a boy-and-girl story which will be played by a cast of youngsters and grown-ups.

"Midnight Subway," by Owen J. Barnes, will have a highly unusual locale.

"Larceny Lane," by Lubec Glasmon and John Bright, author of "The Public Enemy," will have a cast including James Cagney and Marian Marsh.

From Germany comes the story of "The Green Cat." This play by A. M. Willner and E. Rubricus is a mystery drama focused on the life of a woman of many loves.

William Almon Wolff's "Manhattan Nights," will be presented as a dramatic panorama of the life of New York.

"Beauty and the Boss" is at present a title without a story: a contest is being conducted by Photoplay Magazine for a story to fit the title. The winning plot will be acted by an all-star cast.

The First National program follows:

Richard Barthelmess is scheduled to appear in two pictures, the first "Spent Bullets," based on John Monk Saunders' serial novel, "Nikki and Her Ward Birds." For the second, three scripts are under consideration, from which Barthelmess will make the final selection after the completion of "Spent Bullets."

Dorothy Mackaill will be starred in four productions. First is "Rival Wives," from the novel by Ann Austin. Next, "As Good as New," based on Thompson Buchanan's stage play. Her third, "The Single Lady," an original story by Howard I. Brooks. The fourth picture has not yet received a definite title.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., is also to have four vehicles, the first being "I Like Your Nerve," an original by Roland Pertwee, with a South American setting. The second will be an aviation romance, "Flying Eagles," written by John Monk Saunders, author of "The Dawn Patrol."

Bebe Daniels will have three pictures. "The Honor of the Family," a modernized version of Balzac's novel, will be the first. Her second will be "Bed and Board," written for Miss Daniels by Lenore J. Coffee, the featured role calling for a comedienne. A mystery thriller, "The Name on the Register," by H. H. Long, will be her third vehicle.

Edward G. Robinson will have three, of which the first, "Five Star Final," is ready to start production. It is based on Louis Weitzenkorn's current Broadway play, dealing with tabloid newspapers. Robinson will play the managing editor, portrayed on the stage by Arthur Byron. His next picture will be "The Inside Man," by Melville Crossman, giving Robinson a new type of character. Both will be directed by Mervyn LeRoy, who was director of Robinson's "Little Caesar." In "The Hawk," by Chester M. Bennett, Robinson will play a detective.

Marilyn Miller is to star in three pictures. All are being written especially for her: "Blondie" by Courtland Brown, "Our Social Whirl" by Sari L. Barnes and "Mamie" by John Phillips, and each a dramatic comedy.

Lil Dagover, new foreign star, will star in "I Spy," by Baroness Carla von Jenssen, a romance of international espionage and intrigue, to be directed by Wilhelm Dieterle.

Three Joe E. Brown pictures are planned. "Local Boy Makes Good," by Walter De Leon; "The Tenderfoot," a screen revival of the musical comedy in which Richard Carle once starred, produced as a straight comedy picture. Brown's third film will be "The Bouncer," by Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby.

Leon Janney, the 13-year-old actor, will play Penrod in "Penrod and Sam," from Booth Tarkington's series of stories.

Walter Huston will be the star of "Upper Underworld," a drama of rackets and racketeers by Roland V. Lee and Donald W. Lee, with a cast that includes Loretta Young, Doris Kenyon, David Manners, John Halliday, Dudley Digges and others.

Huston is also scheduled for "Blue Moon Murder Mystery," a story written for the screen by S. S. Van Dine in which the author has created a new detective. Loretta Young will be leading woman. "Blue Moon Murder Mystery" is Van Dine's first work written directly for picture production.

"Fellow Prisoners," by Sir Philip Gibbs, will be a drama of the prison camps of the war.

"The Lady Downstairs," by Frances Lathrop, is a story with a plot that runs through the affairs of two generations.

In more frivolous vain will be Robert Lord's "Merry Wives of Reno," pageant of gay women having a great time in a wide-open town, waiting for the final papers.

Wilson Mizner, playwright, has depicted in "The World Changes" the present-day social system.

"Pent House," by Bernice Babcock, is a story of intimate life above the eighteenth floor, said to strike a new tone of modernism.

"The Gay Ones" will be the screen version of the novel by Charles Hanson Towne, editor and author. It is a society story.

"School Days," by Walter De Leon will picture the pleasures of a normal childhood.

"We Three" is from the play by Edith Fitzgerald, author of "Illicit." Rose Hobart, Ben Lyon, Claude Gillingwater, Emma Dunne, Juilette Compton and Bert Roach will be in the cast.

The title "Fame" will be used for the screen version of Philip Barry's Harvard prize play "You and I," in which Lewis Stone, Doris Kenyon, Charles Butterworth, Evalyn Knapp, Una Merkel and others will appear.

MGM Executives Oppose Ad Reels, Double Features

"It is as unreasonable to design all production for the child mind as it is to ignore the child's requirements entirely," said Feist. "There will be plenty of material suitable for juvenile audiences in our new schedule, and this is particularly true of our short subject lineup. We will have a wide variety of shorts available to balance any program designed for children."

Score Charges Discussed

Other subjects which were discussed in open forum at the conference were, MGM's sales policy of last year, score charges, "Trader Horn" sales and promotional work, the necessity of selling the exhibitor the idea of exploitation, sales managers' contributions to sales, deadline booking, changes in the 1931-32 contract, Film Boards of Trade, and the Copyright Protection Bureau.

Company officials refused to comment on the discussions. Many of the views, it was further explained, were conflicting, but it was admitted that the discussions will serve to guide home office executives in formulating policies.

Metro's national managers' conference opened at the Drake hotel on Sunday. The first informal group meeting was addressed by Norma Shearer and Irving Thalberg, who stopped off en route to New York and a European vacation. Thalberg stated the studio organization would continue its policy of grooming new personalities and casts for popularity and stardom in the same manner in which it had elevated Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery, Robert Montgomery, Polly Moran and others to a new prominence.

Concentrate on "Trader Horn"

New picture screenings and the convention banquet occupied the remainder of the first convention day, and the entire convention business was completed in a ten-hour business session Monday. Individual meetings of district managers with Felix Feist were held Tuesday morning, and every convention delegate was en route to his home city that afternoon.

It was, in the opinion of Metro officials, the briefest and at the same time the most complete sales conference the company has held. Dictating the brevity of the meeting and the restriction of attendance to sales managers was Metro's extensive campaign on "Trader Horn," now in progress. The same consideration decided the company on returning the sales managers home as soon as possible.

The Monday business session was opened and presided over by Feist, except for brief intervals when W. F. Rodgers, Eastern sales manager; T. J. Connors, Southern sales manager, and E. M. Saunders, Western sales manager, occupied the chair.

The convention first was addressed by Harry Ross and Claude Saunders of Federal Theatrical Accounting Service, national independent theatre checking organization. The organization and workings of the checking service were described by the two officials, who asked the cooperation of the Metro sales force in their company's checking work. An open forum followed.

The afternoon session was opened by Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity. This year, for the first time, Metro will have no year book, Dietz told the conference. Instead, the company will increase its efforts to reach the public direct through newspaper and magazine advertising. A continuation and expansion of direct to the public advertising of Cosmopolitan productions in the Hearst newspapers was also promised by Dietz. He said several new promotional stunts of a unique character would be introduced and will serve as institutional promotion along the lines of the touring Leo and the "Trackless Train."

Triple Tieup of Services

E. B. Hatrick, Hearst International and Cosmopolitan Productions manager, described to the meeting the triple tieup of newspaper, radio and newsreel services to be incorporated in the new season's releases of Hearst Metrotone News. The plan involves complete utilization of 25 Hearst newspapers in eighteen cities and the International News Service for the gathering of material for Metrotone. In addition, the Globe Trotter, Hearst radio discourser, will be made available for running dialogue accompanying the news shots in addition to cooperative work for Metrotone on the radio. The first Globe Trotter broadcast was then tuned in.

Fred Quimby, short subject manager, stressed sales angles which have proved themselves in national competition.

Hal Roach discussed comedy production plans, comparing them with competitive product.

A summary of what was expected of managers and field men during the year was made by Feist, who then made the formal announcement of the company's new feature and short subject program.

Fifteen stars make more than half of the features for the new season.

Gloria Swanson Denies Parting of Ways with U. A.

she makes two more a year, handling her own production, which is financed by Art Cinema Finance Company. In this case United Artists is only the distributor of the film.

She has found, she said, that United Artists is the least expensive of all studios at which to make a picture, since it charges only 25 per cent for production, leaving Miss Swanson 75 per cent. Being a member of the United Artists company, she also receives one-eighth of the 25 per cent.

Questioned on the retirement of Joseph P. Kennedy, under whose auspices she formerly produced, Miss Swanson said, "Mr. Kennedy's retirement from the industry has nothing to do with me."

Borrowed From Kennedy

She did reveal, however, that when "Queen Kelly" was made, she borrowed the necessary money from Kennedy, something, it is believed, in the neighborhood of $800,000. "Queen Kelly" was never released, and is still somewhere "on the shelf."

Her practice, and that of others in the same situation, she said, was to pay such a loan out of the picture's profits, but where there were no profits, as in the case of "Queen Kelly," it had to be paid from the following film. Consequently, practically all that Miss Swanson realized out of "The Trespasser" went toward reimbursing Kennedy for his loan on the ill-fated "Queen Kelly."

"Rock-a-Bye," which will go into work shortly after Miss Swanson's return to the Coast, is a highly dramatic story centering around mother and daughter, she said, with a conclusion which, though not necessarily the usual "happy" one, is "satisfactory." She seemed enthusiastic about the type of role the daughter part offers her in characterization.

Big 4 Will Use Star Names In 1931-32 Product Lineup

Hollywood—Big 4 will follow the star name policy in its 1931-32 production schedule, shortly to be announced. An advisory committee will pass upon stories before they are accepted.

"Riders of the Cactus," Wally Wales Western, is ready for release and another is in preparation. John R. Freuler, president, is on a mid-western trip, prior to his return to New York, for the production announcement.

Bradford Forms New Firm For Synchronization Work

James C. Bradford has formed the James C. Bradford Corporation, with offices in the General Motors Building, New York, for the preparation of synchronized scores, dubbing dialogue and creating sound effects.

Special scores will also be composed, not subject to copyright charges or royalties.

Bonns Fully Recovered

RADIOITES IN STUDIOLAND

Hollywood—Now the Radio boys are going to school, and it's all because the powers that be at the studios feel that the salesmen can have a lot to do with improved reproduction of talking pictures in the theatres where they sell pictures. The idea was advanced in the concrete form of a test reel which points out faults in reproduction and also demonstrates the contrast between the new noiseless recording and the old type. And the boys are mighty happy to have the new ammunition for the convincing of skeptical exhibitors.

Claud and Earl Penrod, who insist that they never did appear in the Fat Men Comedies, but are willing to admit at the same time that they couldn't substitute for the Human Skeleton at the circus, even in a pinch, got together on the special train at Newton, Kan., and compared obesity charts. Claud is from Indianapolis and Earl from St. Louis, and a mighty fine pair of kinsmen they are, too.

You know how the Penrods don't tell themselves apart, don't you? You hand Earl a contract and if the exhibitor doesn't sign it, then you know that it's neither Claud nor Earl that started the transaction.

The stock market and why "the old hoss she aint what she used to be" were the subject of some deep conversations between Frank O'Heron and Louis Baum.

Speaking about "Daisy" Halligan, manager at Albany,—and if you don't speak first, Halligan will keep you listening while he goes into ecstatic exuberations over the whys and the wherefores of the north woods of New York—well, what we began to say was that Halligan started right in on Jack Pegler, Joe Skelly and Bill Dahler with some yarns that were highly entertaining if perhaps not classical.

Take, now, this business of playing poker. There's a game for you! But not for me, said Manager Pitkin of New Haven, after he had seen the Philadelphia group in action, including Manager Rosen and salesmen Tyson, Schaeffer, Palan and Perlsweig.

Jerry Safron and Louis Baum stood on their bridge at midnight, and later than that, but Charles Rosenzweig and Cleve Adams stood high at the end of the lesson. Whereupon the Safron-Baum combination called it a day.

That man Sam Rosen from Philadelphia just can't resist putting one over. Take, for example, his stunt of separating a fire marshal's shield from Earl Penrod and then bounding into Tom Smith's lean-to. What he found in the medicine cabinet or thereabouts is nobody's business but Rosen's.

Some day Bill Dahler is going to miss his homemade 9:30 curfew and sleep right through the breaking of the dawn. And Joe Skelly says he hopes that's the next time that he is Bill's bunkmate.

This from Phil Hodes. There's an exhibitor down Charlotte way who boosts his attendance by using theatre tickets as currency in paying off the help, so that all the employees have to do to buy groceries is to sell the tickets in order to turn them back to legal tender. You remember about the little boy who was paid a nickel each time he took his castor oil so that when he had made a dollar it could be used to buy another bottle.

Sailsman Sailor Smith believes that charity should start only one place, and when the others all had passed he let a two-color layout go by—just didn't want to hurt the others, of course. But Halligan kept his feet on Smith's toes so that he wouldn't throw away his sox, too.

Manager Art Schmitz of Milwaukee said that when Salesman M. Anderson of that famous (Pabst yes, Pabst not) town on the banks of Lake Michigan saw the women barbers in Chicago, the Wisconsin Viking threw away his outfit for self-made crinal abscission.

AFL Session Will Settle Dispute

Chicago—A conference called by President William Green of the American Federation of Labor for May 27 in Washington, is expected to settle an internal disagreement of long standing between local theatrical unions.

The dispute centers about the classification of union labor which will handle spotlights and stage lighting in film houses. The electricians' union wants its men on the work, while the Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators' union feels its members are entitled to that employment.

15 Connecticut Exhibitors Receive "Blackmail" Notes

New York officials are investigating threatening "blackmail" letters received by 15 theatre managers in Connecticut, each letter demanding $1,500 be left at a designated spot. In no case was the decoy package claimed.

The attempt is believed to be a mere publicity stunt, the letters obviously having been written by an intelligent person trying to create an impression of illiteracy.

Radio Delegates Saw Films In Making at Coast Plant

Hollywood—Delegates to the Radio convention were invited to visit the studio where six or seven features were in production.

They include "Nancy's Private Affair," "The Next Corner," "The Splendid Crime," "Strange Women," "Helga," "Consolation Marriage."

Warner Sued for Half Million on Dunning Process

Hollywood (QP)—Papers were served Wednesday in a suit for a half to three-fourths of a million dollars by Dunning Process, Inc., Paramount Publix and Roy J. Pomeroy, against Warner Brothers and First National and all their various state corporations and Fred Jackman, alleging infringements of Pomeroy and Dunning process patents.

The patents are transparency composite photographic patents and the Pomeroy patents are controlled by the Dunning process.

No comment was forthcoming Thursday from the home office of Warner-First National regarding the Dunning-Pomeroy suit launched Wednesday on the Coast.

Publix Officials Inspect Famous Canadian Theatres

Ottawa—Paramount Publix officials have made a rapid tour of Famous Players theatres in Eastern Canada. John Balaban, J. J. Fitzgibbon and Clarence Robson made the trip. There is a possibility that their visit had something to do with the report, expected shortly of the government commissioner who handled the recent film probe in which Famous was involved.

Warners Invading Texas; One Leased; After Others

San Antonio—Warner is invading the Texas field. Despite repeated denials, it has been learned that they have already leased the Empire, 1,550-seat independent house here. They are also reported angling for the Hollywood in Fort Worth and for houses in Dallas, Houston and Amarillo.

In order to sidestep the summer depression, Warners will not take over the Empire until October 1.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

That the picture is the thing is evidenced more and more in the high grosses which features of the type of "Skippy," "Trader Horn," "The Public Enemy," "City Lights," "The Front Page" and numerous others have piled up at box offices of the country. All of these pictures, and many more, have been establishing receipt records, and in the metropolitan centers they are heading for long run records. The Herald's box office reports would indicate that it is attractions of this type that are reviving motion picture theatregoing.

MGM ON CHICAGO'S BOUL. MICH.

In a pleasant speech of greeting to the Metro managers Norma Shearer told the boys she regretted that time did not permit her the opportunity to meet each personally and become better acquainted.

"Well," protested the fresh Felix Mendelssohn, "Strangers May Kiss."

"But we're not strangers," Miss Shearer swiftied.

If it wasn't his picture, it was his star at least. Hal Roach predicts a swell future for Jackie Cooper, recruited from "Our Gang," after his work in "Skippy."

Felix Feist, as energetic and good-natured as he was at last year's convention, expressed genuine satisfaction over the manner in which the new national meeting conducted itself. The smaller meetings, he says, get down to business quicker and accomplish more in less time. The entire national convention business was transacted in one day's business sessions.

The announcements of Sunday night's banquet read: "Dinner at eight o'clock; but 'appetizers' will be served beginning at seven-thirty." Attendance was 100 per cent at 7:25.

Irving Thalberg, who stopped off with Norma Shearer to greet the convention, spilled a little of the new production plans a day early during his talk to the managers. He emphasized the company's plans to groom new personalities and casts for future star material in the same manner which popularized Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery, Robert Montgomery and Polly Moran.

Fred Quimby's warcry was "Don't Sell America short. Sell Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer shorts."

The conventioneers were officially dubbed with the prefix "Trader" by Felix Feist. It was like a fraternity gathering with all the "brothers" being duked as "Trader"—this and "Trader"—that.

The Canadian contingent, represented by H. L. Nathanson, A. Larente, W. Hayner, H. V. O'Connor and A. E. Smith, found the chilling Lake Michigan breezes to their liking; but the Southern delegation, which arrived with summer flannels, thought it was just a dirty trick.

The boys from the cotton territory did, however, find something about the convention arrangements that they approved of completely. That was the blond convention secretary from Memphis who "honeyed" and "dahlin-ed" them until they were homesick.

S. A. Shirley and Felix Mendelssohn were the convention "fixers." No matter what was required, as local boys they were supposed to know exactly how or when it could be worked. And they did exceedingly well, considering how many things conventioneers require to amuse them.

Si Seadler, the big verb and adjective man from the home office, was in three places at once most of the time and was usually wanted in three others simultaneously.

The convention hall decoration scheme was as picturesque as it was practical. Up front, the huge map of the U. S. with the cutout photos of district managers attached at the proper location points, made the national situation a personal affair. The comfortable seats and neat tables in the hall were another convention innovation for which everyone rendered thanks.

Jimmy Hommel tried to cheer up Jim Briant with a story of the two-foot snowfall that was left behind in Denver, but the effort was almost wasted. Briant was one of the precocious Southerners who wore new straw toppers into Lake Michigan's capricious area.

Ralph Pielow made a perfect host for the boys who stopped off in the Albany territory en route to the gathering of the "Traders," if convention reminiscences can be relied on.

Bob (Beef Trust) Workman was about the only man at the Sunday banquet who couldn't have hidden behind his "Trader" whiskers if the Secret Six had entered.

Bill Scully had them all worked up over his new monicker. They went for that "Gus" thing in a big way.

A year older any way you figure it, but Maurie Saffle is still the youngest branch manager at Metro conventions.

Wee Willie Rodgers had more extra-convention worries than anyone, what with the indisposition of his roommate, G. A. Hickey, and his efforts to discourage Bob Lynch from a return plane trip.

Monday night was "open," or write-your-own-ticket night. Bob Lynch used it by pulling a "Philadelphia."

Dapper Charlie Kessnich, the South'n Kunuel, spent the opening day of the convention celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of his entry into show business.

Howard Dietz wisecracked the gang into a mild case of hysteria. Most of them were good enough to be money gags and probably will be making the Broadway rounds almost any week now.

Jock MacLeod had everyone marveling at the way he stood the gaff. Six days of pre-arranging convention details and as fresh on the seventh as a high school kid on his second date with the same girl. It was no mystery to us. We caught him napping in the afternoons.

Sheriff Hickey spent his first day in Chicago convalescing from a spring cold that was as persistent as a discarded but undiscouraged love.

Jack Flynn said he'd do it. He did. write him for further details, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Walter Hayner fooled them all by not telling the story of how he broke Billy Zoellner into the business. Well, not often, anyhow.

Bob Smith is still Bob Smith. And even though he is a former University of Wisconsin professor, he has still to learn how to play stud.

Jake Milstein looked homesick, and probably was. Most of those Boosters can't stay away from Los Angeles sunshine and climate over an hour without being upset.

Harry Shumow and Sam Shurman climbed into the neatest appearing class by virtue of their new backs and stomachs.

Hal Roach surpassed himself in that inspired address of his. How it clicked! It even moved Howard Dietz to take down a few notes.

Kelly O'Shea continues to slay them with nifties, year after year.

The meeting disclosed that Doc Banford really has a given name. Does this take care of it, Walter?

Allan Cummings' pipe stood by him when all else had fled.

The change from Carolina's washed air to New York's bad breezes had Ira Furman hanging on the ropes for a while. But that distinctive Chicago atmosphere picked him up again.

That Jungle banquet setting worked wonders with Felix Feist. He disported himself with all the reckless abandon of old Trader Horn in the best of his African years.

The festive sport was not for John Maloney. It was business all the way with Pittsburgh's pride.

Morris Alin wore out twelve pencils in the process of transplanting the conference happenings into Distributor copy.

Si Seadler wore out a tonsil saying "No" to trade paper reporters and bootleggers.

MUSIC AND TALENT

SEES NEW APPRECIATION OF MUSIC

STAGE SHOWS

Brooklyn Paramount

Week ending April 30

Two stageshows, one featuring Rudy Vallee, the nation's favorite, and the second featuring none other than Bill Robinson, the most famous sepia dancing star in the world, marked an event at this house.

Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees came on first with their playing and singing of popular numbers. The popular Vallee sang but three numbers this week, namely, "Then I'll Be Lying" (this is Vallee's latest composition), "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver" and "Sweeping the Clouds Away." His first number was sung in two different tempos, the audience deciding which they liked best. The second number had an artistic scrim setting built around it and the third Vallee sang in the Chevalier manner, straw hat, accent and all. Rudy is still the "fair-haired" boy of this town. All the flappers, and many too old to be flappers, have found the stagedoor and stand around it day and night trying to get a close glimpse of their desire.

The second unit, an all-colored show, "Hot from Harlem," was just that—hot dancing, hot music, and hot singing. This unit was presented in three scenes, the first featuring the entire company, who sing and dance to the introduction song. Following this, John Mason, comedy monologist, offered 10 minutes of laughs with his crawling-drunk routine. Cab Calloway and his Cotton Club band first played for the dancing of six boys and 16 girls and then Cab, in a mixture of negro spiritual and Jewish chant, sang a few numbers. Ada Ward nicely sings "Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone" and receives a good response from the audience. The band follows with some hot playing. Cab chants a few of the numbers, which nearly stops the show. Bill Robinson offers a few gags and then goes into his inimitable tapping routines, including his original staircase tap routine. He is assisted by 16 beautiful sepia maidens. Bill stops the show as he usually does and is encored two or three times. Following this Alma Smith, Ada Ward, Bill Robinson, Cab Calloway and the balance of the company dance in a mad frenzy for the finale.

Florida Blue Law Measure Gets Cold Shoulder in House

Tampa—Proposed "blue law" bill, which provided for the closing of all amusements and most every other business on the Sabbath, introduced in the Florida legislature last week by Representative Beasley of Hernando county, was unfavorably reported on by a house committee. This was the first bill introduced in this session affecting theatres.

Last Silent Takes Sound

Denver—The Majestic, last of the silent houses, has installed sound.

Dale Young

This personable young fellow presides at the organ console of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis. He's an Indianapolis boy who didn't get a chance to get out of that city. They had him at the organ in various theatres there before he was out of school and Dale's hold on the Indianapolis public is such that audiences won't let him out of their sight. By way of history, Young was graduated from the Arthur Jordan Conservatory of Music in Indianapolis. He has spent practically his whole life at the organ, being taken from a small neighborhood house. Thence to his present berth at the Circle. Young has become wellknown to the Middle west as a result of his organization, The United States Organ Club, broadcasting from Station WKBF and claimed by that station's officials to be one of the leading programs on the air. He is also known as an excellent novelty organist. All those things are the explanation for his fifth year with the Warner-Publix chain.

Buys 4 Oklahoma Houses

Oklahoma City—The Lyric, Mainstreet, Circle and Plaza in Tulsa have been purchased by P. R. Isley Theatre Company, which plans expansion into Texas next.

Fisher at Fox House

Milwaukee—Buddy Fisher and his orchestra, formerly at Brin's Majestic, is at the Fox Modjeska on Sundays with his 20 piece outfit.

Lasky Says Technique Has Been Mastered

Early Unjust Handling Brought Public Criticism; Music Plays Great Part

By ED DAWSON

Paramount, speaking through the voice of Jesse L. Lasky, vice president, declares itself as standing ready during the new season to consider music in picture production as a beautiful medium of expression, enhancing the value of films, rather than, as in the past, having pictures as mere exploitation for particular theme songs.

Paramount will, says Lasky, in an open letter to C. A. Beute of the company, "give music the intelligent treatment it deserves."

He continues, "In the rush to satisfy the public's curiosity for sound pictures, music, an important and beautiful medium of expression, was so unjustly handled that the public reacted with sharp criticism. In fact, the sensitive ones felt highly offended. But now there is no excuse for criticism. All of us know what an important part music plays in portraying the moods and advancing the character of a dramatic picture and its value as good diverting entertainment in films of the light musical comedy type. It should be given the care and study it needs."

Paramount has its own music publishing company, Famous Music Corporation, which employs a large staff of exploitation men.

The point is also brought out, that, without using a weak picture merely as an advertising force for a song, the melody, if it should meet popular approval, can by reason of its use by orchestras on the air and in theatres, form of itself an excellent means of advertising the film for which it was written.

Lasky notes that there has been a decided falling off in the number of musical film produced in the industry, but that the coming season, in view of the new appreciation and mastery of the music medium as an adjunct to pictures, should see a new birth of the expressive medium in the production of pitcures.

To Retain Stage Shows

Dallas—Stage shows will be indefinitely continued at the Palace, with the orchestra under Charles Manning being retained as well.

STAGE SHOWS

San Antonio Majestic

Week ending April 22

Dave Smason and His RKOlians again start the big-time vaudeville presentation with another of his own lively overtures.

The opening spot on the bill is Large and Morgner, who do some snappy, skillful balancing, four-chair leaping, hand-to-hand catching.

In the deucer, Vic Oliver sings a burlesque on "Road to Mandalay," for which the pit musicians throw pillows and other padded articles from the orchestra pit. He is ably assisted by Margot Crandle, petite brunette, who does several steps to a very nice hand. She assists Victor with his comical line of chatter. He also offers a piano medley and got a fair return. They do a violin duet at the finish and bow off to a good hand.

The trey spot is held down by Irving Edwards in an act of comic patter. It seems a little old to this audience, but he manages to get his mother song over in novel style. A very big hand.

Anatole Friedland's "20 Century Revue" headlines this program with a bevy of beautiful maidens. This number is composed of pleasing dancing and singing routine. The chorus girls' entrance through a paper screen, following a talking picture introduction, receives a nice reception. Bobby Bernard's songs go over. The work of Miss Loretta Dennison at the xylophone also is well received. Master of Ceremonies Edwards makes a great hit with the patrons. In the finale of the review are dance and song numbers with the entire company taking part. The scenery and wardrobe are highly alluring.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending April 22

Preceding Fanchon & Marco's "Headliners" Idea at Fox's Wisconsin theatre, the theatre orchestra under the direction of Don Wilkins features selections from Victor Herbert's "Fortune Teller." The orchestral number, which includes "Little Gypsy Sweetheart," is augmented by Miss Helen Stimson of the Pavley Oukrainsky ballet, performing on the stage amid a gypsy setting.

Don Wilkins next introduces Mel Klee, who after a bit of pitter-patter introduces the first act, Walter Jennier and Buddy, the wonder seal. The seal does a number of difficult balancing and juggling acts.

The Gay Sisters are next introduced by Klee, who sing "My Baby Just Cares for Me" and "He's a Good Boy." Their voices blend nicely and they get a good hand.

The next episode is a clever number by the orchestra, during which Don Wilkins proceeds to bake a cake in honor of the Wisconsin theatre's seventh anniversary. Various sections of the band offer diverse selections, including "Ramona," "In a Little Spanish Town," "Simple Melody," "Yes, Sir, That's My Baby," offered by Iris Wilkins on the accordion, and "You're Driving Me Crazy." The various units are blended as flour, frosting and other ingredients to make the birthday cake. "Happy Birthday to You" is offered as the finale with a cutout of a large cake with candles as a background.

Wells, Winthrop & Stanley offer a bit of comedy patter and wind up with humorous dancing. They gave way to Mell Klee, who again offers a line of comedy patter and ends with singing "Tomorrow Is Another Day."

The finale introduces Mangean's Internationals, a snappy troupe of six tumblers, who bounce about in fine fettle. The feature of their offering is a tandem somersault.

Philadelphia Fox

Week ending April 24

Fanchon & Marco's "Gondolier Idea" at the Fox this week was a fast-moving and well-staged presentation without a dull moment.

The Roxy Gang sang a request program with Harold Clyde Wright acting as announcer. The opening number was a quartet, "I'm Happy When You're Happy," followed by a soprano solo, "My Hero," by Dorothy Gibbons. John Griffith, tenor, sang "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," and Adelaide de Luca, contralto, sang "By the Waters of Minnetonka." After a baritone solo, "Marching Home to You," by Harold Wright, the Gang closed with an arrangement of popular Victor Herbert airs.

The "Gondolier Idea" opened with Max Bradfield and His Musical Masters seated in a gondola as the Sunkist Beauties, in pale pink with flower wreathed hoops, gave a graceful toe dance to the accompaniment of "Les Millions d'Harlequins," as the premiere danseuse in white satin ruffled costume and her male partner danced in and out of the circles held by the ballet.

The Romeros played a few measures of Schubert's "Serenade," then, laying aside their violins, gave a lightning exhibition of tap dancing.

Moro and Yaconelli provided most of the evening's comedy and their naturalness in impersonating two Italian street musicians, combined with their musical ability, was heartily applauded.

Members of the ballet in European national costumes appeared one by one and as the orchestra played appropriate dance tune, Jazz Lips Richardson danced with each in turn. This was a clever and diversified number showing contrasting types of dances, all executed with verve and finished technique that were delgihtful, and ending with a novel modernistic mechanical dance.

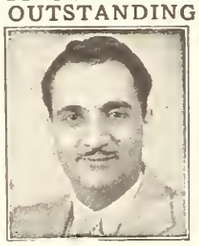
A clever blackface eccentric dancer presented a series of unique and difficult stunts and injected so much drollery and nonchalance into his act that the audience gave him a good hand.

Ben Ali's appropriately named Blue Devils gave a marvelous exhibition of whirlwind action in their tumbling. Cartwheels and multiple somersaults in mid air were executed with such rapidity of action as to confuse the eye and their pyramid formations were marvels of gymnastic skill and strength with one man holding five others.

There was a brilliant and fast-moving finale representing an Italian street carnival, full of action and rhythm, ending with a shower of gayly-colored balloons.

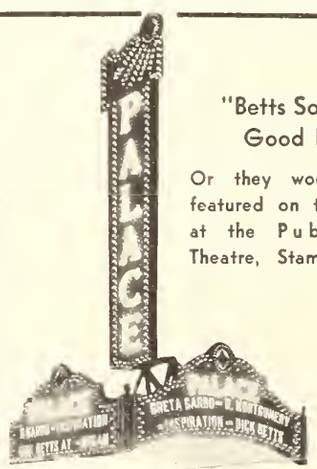
San Francisco Warfield

Week ending April 29



Fanchon & Marco have been bringing out some timely stage shows of late, and in their "Olympic Games Idea" offer a colorful affair that is bound to attract attention to the great sporting event of 1932, to be held in California.

The Warfield band boys sing college airs and Rube Wolf makes his appearance in the garb of an athletic instructor. The boys play and sing "Ninety-nine Out of a Hundred" in different styles and end by suggesting that this percentage will wear straw hats this season, at the same time donning the alfalfa headgear, the opening day of the show being Straw Hat day.



Vina Jean and Sunny Rooney sing about the Olympic Games and the curtain goes up on a stadium scene with the flags of all nations flying. The pages introduce the Misses Belgium, France, Hawaii, Czechoslovakia, Scandinavia, Germany, Spain, Japan, England and United States, each in national costume, and Francia, as Miss United States, sings an aria in a foreign tongue.

Hal Haig, introduced as a former Olympic Games champion, proves a depository for harmonicas, producing no less than three from his mouth after playing on a large one. His dancing and tumbling is better than his music and he has some good gags, too. He was born in Boston, he says, just outside the Los Angeles city limits. His imitation of sports, such as Charlie Hamp, originator of the one-man radio program and now rated as the highest salaried microphone "single" in the world, is at station WBBM. . . . East and Dumke, the Sisters of the Skillet, claim to have proved that the new regulation sized baseball, with the raised seam, when struck with a regulation weight baseball bat will travel further than a poached egg. . . . A new game for radio announcers, designed to make them lose their hair if they go in for it, Jean Paul King, popular NBC mike man, recently received a lock of hair from one of his flapper admirers, with a request for a lock of his own hair in exchange. . . . Cliff Hess, special service man at Remicks, opines that the country is once more becoming organ-conscious. Cliff should know. He bases his statement on the increasing number of organists going back to the manuals in small towns and cities throughout the country. He says further that the surest indication is the increasing number of requests for chorus sets and specialties. . . . Harry Levy, manager for that marvelous harmony trio, the Boswell Sisters, was in town recently. . . . Harry Sosnik, one of the best music arrangers in Chicago, is playing solos at WBBM. . . . Frankie Sylvano's brother Scotty knocked-out his opponent at the Golden Gloves tournament.

Berlin's has accepted Clyde McCoy's theme song, "Lonely Gondolier." This song was written by Walter Hirsch and Frankie Magine. Perhaps one of the most ardent admirers of Harry Kogen's music over the NBC network has never written a fan letter—and never will. The fan is a parrot, owned by a Chicago dentist. Polly enjoys the freedom of the house, but when the soothing tones of Koken's orchestra come from the loudspeaker the parrot climbs to his perch before the radio and listens drowsily until the program is completed. . . . Wilson Doty, the new organist now featured from station WBBM, hails from Council Bluffs, Iowa, and is considered one of the greatest organists Iowa has ever produced. He is a quite unassuming fellow and would welcome hearing from his radio fans. . . .

Jan Garber and orchestra left the Congress hotel to play a four weeks' engagement in Kansas City, then returned to Chicago for an indefinite engagement. . . . The Remick Music Corporation opened its new Chicago offices in the Woods Theatre building with much pomp and ceremony. Most all in the business attended and those unable to be present sent wires to the manager, Ward Perry, and the rest of the staff. . . . Maurice Staub of Jack Mills Music Company tells me it will not be any effort trying to make its latest song, called "Trying." . . . Rudy Vallee in his recent appearance at the B. & K. theatres appeared before the Chicago police, thanking them for their cooperation given both to the American Society of Writers and Composers, and Mr. Hartman, their Chicago representative, in their drive against the local sheet racketeers.

Texas May Get Sunday Shows

Austin, Texas — The Texas blue laws, nearly a century old, will receive a severe setback if Governor Sterling signs the Sunday film bill passed by both houses.

STAGE SHOWS

boxing, wrestling and swimming, is a novelty.

Paul Remos and his wonder midgets, old vaudeville stage friends, are entertaining and get lots of applause. The Sunkist boys and girls parade with the flags of all nations and spell out messages with the letters on their sweaters. A fencing drill to music is quite exciting.

The act comes to an end with a troupe of girls doing a windmill stunt on trapezes while standing upright. While they go through this performance sprinters and cyclists are doing their stuff. It's a fast show.

Providence Fays

Week ending April 24

A distinct novelty is offered at Providence Fays this week in the appearance of the "Primo Carnera" of the vaudeville stage, one Henry Mullins, billed as the world's tallest youth. Mullins doesn't do much except his skyscraper bulk, but, nevertheless he is a worthy acquisition to the pageant starring Artie Lewis and Peggy Ames. This is said to be young Mullins' only appearance in the East before joining Barnum and Bailey shows.

The Carter Brothers' Revue, with the Darrow Sisters and Miss Florine, offers smart songs, patter and stepping. It is a colorful presentation and can fit into any kind of a bill advantageously.

The Shaw Sisters and Edwards are bright and witty in "Songs and Dances" and "The Garden of Jewels" is a novelty spectacle by the Littlejohns, a youthful trio. The Wedanos Wonders, gymnasts, wind up the bill.

ORGAN SOLOS

ELSIE THOMPSON (Brooklyn Paramount), "The Sweetheart of the Organ," presented a little novelty this week which was entitled "A Song a Day Keeps the Blues Away," and proved it by playing the following tune: "King's Horses," "Love Is Like That" (this number Elsie sings herself), "By the River Sainte Marie" and "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile." On all the songs, except "Love Is Like That," the audience lustily sang, and on her own singing number the audience was content to listen and applaud at the finish.

DOUGHERTY (Astoria Long Island Loew's Triboro). Introduction to the organ solo at this house always consists of the slide with the words, "Sing with Dougherty." This audience needs no further invitation to sing. They sing on the first line played, whether it is an introduction or not, just so they hear a tune. This solo was entitled "Melody Land" and was a trip through songland. Starting with a special version, explaining the trip, to the tune "Three Little Words," and another special to "Stein Song," the audience was started on its way to songland by singing "Alabamy Bound," "Mammy," "Carolina Moon," "When Kentucky Bids the World Good-Mornin'," "Miss a Miss," "Moonlight on the Colorado," "Mississippi Mud," "Old Man River," "St. Louis Blues," "Indiana Home," "Wabash Moon" and "Kansas City Kitty." This finished the trip through songland, and Dougherty finished up the solo by playing "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." Dougherty did not delay the solo one bit with unnecessary talk, just played straight through, this audience seemingly enjoying its own singing better than listening to explanations and so on.

BETTY AND JEAN (Staten Island, N. Y., Paramount) at the twin consoles opened their solo with the tune "Sweet and Hot" and named the title the same way. During the entire solo, one plays the melody, the other the accompaniment. Each of them plays in her own style and the mingling of both makes for many pleasing combinations, which this audience seemingly does not appreciate, though at the finish of each solo it applauds the young women very much. The songs played by the girls and sung by the audience were "Sweet and Hot," "I'm Yours," "I Got Rhythm," "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from Samson and Delilah, "Tears" and a final chorus of "Sweet and Hot."

TED MEYN AND DON ALBERT (Jersey City Loew's Jersey), organist and orchestra conductor, respectively, presented one of their most enjoyable offerings in this novelty entitled "Battle of Music," which was compiled by Ted Meyn with Don Albert. Opening with the old gag of "Gallagher and Shean," modernized with special lyrics, they talk back and forth until they challenge each other. Meyn said that he and the organ can reproduce and better anything that the orchestra might play. Albert, conducting the orchestra, had them play a number of most difficult numbers, but Meyn produced the same effects on the organ, often bettering the tones and sound of the same numbers the orchestra first played. There was a lot of ad libbing by both of them through the presentation, and though Don Albert's orchestra is a very good one, Meyn took the honors.

LOU BONDER (New York City Park Plaza) presented this week the appropriately entitled organ novelty, "A Golfing We Will Go." This is a burlesque on the ethics and the teaching of golf, and is offered at a time when most of us are thinking of that one thing, golf. A number of special lyrics are played to the tune "Honey," then the audience joins in singing the following tunes: "My Love for You," comedy lyrics to "Farmer in the Dell," "For You," a tongue-twister to the tune "Weakness," and a final chorus of "Got the Park." All the audience seemingly enjoyed Bonder's efforts.

IRIS WILKINS (Milwaukee Fox's Wisconsin), in honor of the theatre's seventh anniversary, plays "Seven Years of Song," including "Memories," "Moonlight and Roses," "In a Little Dream House," "My Blue Heaven," "Singing In the Rain," "If I Had a Talking Picture of You," and "Just a Gigolo." Words to all the songs are flashed on the screen with explanatory matter set to music used between the songs.

C. SHARPE-MINOR (Brooklyn Warner Strand). This world famous organist, for his first week here, presented an entertaining and distinctly different novelty. It was in the form of a community songfest, but instead of using the regular song slides, Minor offered them in film form, together with a scenic motion picture background which enhanced the entire solo. He opened with a talking picture introduction of himself, telling a part of his own history, and introducing each of his numbers. The first song, "Wind in the Willows," was presented in a unique form, scenic films of woods, sea and skies, through which the wind whistled. Word slides were superimposed on the scenes, many of the audience singing (though Minor didn't mention singing) and many of them seemingly pleased to watch and hear the effects, which the organ produced. A clever introduction of "Would You Like to Take a Walk," and the playing of it, was followed by "Two Hearts," one line of which was first flashed on the screen in English and the second in German. The next number was "Lazy Country Lane," followed by "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile" for the closing number. A large closeup motion picture of Minor, who thanked them from the screen, was shown as he took his bows from the pit. No more need be said than that the audience enjoyed Minor and his efforts.

NEW YORK CITY

Hello Everybody!

In an effort to stimulate interest in music in the home, NBC has inaugurated two weekly broadcasts, "Keys of Happiness" and "Music in the Air," for the purpose of establishing a renaissance of the piano in the home. . . . In expressing his views, E. C. Mills, director of these two hours, stated: "There are 13,000,000 pianos in the homes of America and they are too little used. Through two special programs NBC is bringing piano instruction to every home radio speaker in the United States."

The interest which will undoubtedly be aroused in many homes in this country will unquestionably create a much larger demand for music and will therefore stimulate the sale of sheet music. . . .

Eddie Ford, former Florida and New York organist, is visiting his home in Tampa after being a featured organist in Australia for the past year and a half. . . . Ralph, organist at the Loew's Paradise in the Bronx, has the distinction of being at this house eight weeks and this is a distinction because he is the only organist who has stayed there for that long. . . . Wesley Eddy, after 500 performances as m. c. at Loew's Fox-Great Lakes theatre, Buffalo, will join a Loew stage unit here, shortly, and after playing part of the unit will return to Buffalo, where he has been highly successful . . .

That Fanchon and Marco program on WGBS is getting to be a peach of a bet. . . . Johnny Marvin's singing is a pleasure to hear and Teddy King and his orchestra, who have been at the Fox Audubon for the past six or eight months, are offering some great tunes. . . . I hear that Benny Ross, m. c. at Shea's Buffalo is doing great and that all the critics of the city are putting on the rave about him. . . . That's swell, Ben; keep it up. . . . Ray Nichols and His Orchestra are the pride of Newark, N. J., and have played nearly everything in the town. . . . Last week Ray and his gang were the featured attractions at Loew's State, Newark, and did fine. . . .

George Beatty, well known vaudeville act, has recently completed his masterpiece, a song which he has entitled "Just An Unemployed Gigolo," and you'll probably hear him sing it in his act. . . .

Heard Vincent Lopez over at the St. George theatre, Staten Island, the other day. . . . He and his orchestra presented a symphony fantasy called "Steel," which he conceived and which Einar A. Swan compiled. . . . It is a fantasy of the building age, and it was presented together with the building of a miniature replica of the Empire State Bldg. . . . Different tones and instruments sounding as the building rose in the air gave one the "feel" that does not come from the songs one ordinarily hears. . . .

Helen Morgan, screen, stage and night club star, currently playing the Palace for the umteenth time, is making a Vitaphone short, tentatively titled "The Gigolo Racket." . . . In it, Miss Morgan sings "I Know He's Mine," which Bud Green and Sam Stept wrote, especially for Miss Morgan. . . . The number will be published by DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, Inc. . . . Miss Morgan believes this to be one of the best songs she has ever sung and predicts hitdom for it.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 75

By F. H. Richardson

The question was: (A) "Explain, in detail, just what the horn portion of the sound projector does. (B) Why is it impossible to get satisfactory sound with the horn portion removed from a sound projector? (C) Tell us what the shape and length of the horn has to do with both the volume and quality of sound delivered."

I feel I must compliment the following upon the excellence of their answers: Lester Horst, Evans and Rau, Herman Billings, Carl Boyer, George Thompson, Ben Edwards, G. T. Baldy, G. E. Doe and Bill Doe. Aside from the foregoing, the following returned correct answers: Frank L. Sander, Leslie Yates, John Williams, S. Anderson, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Claud Addington, Thomas Berst, L. MacArthur, Thomas Sutting, N. D. Garling, James Devoy, Andy Richards, R. B. Whitnah, Lewis Henderson, Tom Turk, William Gibson, F. D. Dinsel, James McGuire, Thomas Peters, Joyce S. Evans, F. T. Earneman, G. L. Walker, John C. Norris, P. D. Bishop, R. S. Hackett, P. L. Toeping, Robert Dodson, P. L. Kenburg, Walter Singer, D. L. Bennett, T. Drew, Dave Mencken, Bob Welch, Frank Gardner, William Bogert, William Perry and D. T. Wyley.

The reply of Messrs. Evans and Rau was perhaps best suited for publication. They say: "(A) The horn really transmits to the large body of air in an auditorium the various variations in sound which the receiver itself, unaided, would be unable to do, save for the very high frequencies, which latter represent the shrill, high-pitched sound. The horn is a means for confining a suitable air column to be acted upon by the alternate advance and retreat of the receiver diaphram, to the end that waves and intensities of the reproduced sound may be given force and direction, and sent forth in acceptable form and in proper directions.

"(B) The function of a receiver is to set up vibrations in the surrounding air, which same it does, so far as it is, unaided, able to. However, obviously a small receiver diaphragm could not possibly, unaided and alone, communicate vibrations to all the air in a perhaps large auditorium except possibly in so far as concerns the very high frequencies, and even those very inadequately. All the low frequencies, which require very much more force or energy for transmission to the air, would be altogether lost without some efficient connecting link between the diaphragm and the great body of air. Were the horn portion removed, the audible sound is highly unsatisfactory because it is thin, shrill and without resonance. The horn forms a connecting link between the receiver diaphragm and the mass of air, so that through its aid a very large percentage of the great range of frequencies from high to low may be sent forward at approximately their proper values in audible sound.

"(C) The shape and length of the horn have a great deal to do with the volume and quality of sound delivered to the outer air. The sound delivered is influenced in quality by the shape, length and composition of the horn. Since the horn is an air column confining device, both its form and composition can and do influence resonance, harmonics, reverbations, echoes and boosting or diminishing influence. Hence, a very slight change in form or composition may make a large difference in both the quality and volume of the reproduced sound. It therefore follows that if the horn be not correctly designed, the sound may lack volume, or may lack quality, notwithstanding the fact that its receiver itself may be delivering to it all things necessary to perfection in results."

L. I. Local Union 640 Entertains

Should any misguided individual try to tell you that projectionist parties held otherwhere than in the Hotel Astor (I speak of New York City and vicinity, of course) are really not parties at all, you may advise them that their ideas are damply wet, full of large holes and founded upon nothing more solid than a pipe dream.

Wednesday, April 22, at the ghostly hour of midnight, in response to the invitation of Motion Picture Projectionist Local Union No. 640, IATSE & MPMO., comprising the projectionists of Nassau and Suffolk counties, out Long Island way, friend daughter and your editor clambered into our rubber-tired gondola and, bucking torrents of rain, headed her—the machine—towards Valley Stream, L. I.

Arriving at the Pavilion Royal, a spot made famous by Paul Whitman and his orchestra, and where, so say many, whoopee was born and spent its first few years, we viewed what seemed to be a Broadway night club in full swing, with an orchestra which would make an octogenarian strive to dance again.

Among the merrymakers many familiar faces were noted. There was Fred Dempsey, secretary-treasurer, IATSE & MPMO., who came representing International President Canavan and the International office. Otto Kafka, chief projectionist of the Paradise theatre, Lawrence Jones, past president of the American Projection Society, Paul Berkowitz, chief projectionist of the Capitol theatre, and his wife, graced the affair with their presence, as also did Brothers Newman and Baptists, of local 340, which presides over the destinies of stage men in Suffolk and Nassau theatres.

Our old friend Lester Isaacs and his charming fiancee were there, of course. Brother Isaacs is director of projection for Loew theatres. We renewed acquaintance with Brothers Joe Engle, president, L. U. No. 640, its vice president, Harry Jekel, and its business representative, George Leissler, as well as several members of the entertainment committee, whose names I unfortunately did not record.

The affair consisted of a seven-act vaudeville bill, loaned by the Rivoli theatre, Hempstead, L. I., and a dinner and a dance. The vaudeville was put on by Brother McNorton, who did the job up brown, acting as about everything from mistress of the wardrobe to master of ceremonies. There was an ample supply of bottled goods which looked like tea, but I don't think it really was. Plenty, I said, and the party was merrily merry.

In spite of the out-in-the-sticks location and the beastly weather, there were 318 members and guests present, every one of which apparently had a rip-roaring good time. When it is considered that local 340 boasts only 43 members that is some considerable showing, permit me to inform you.

May I express the sincere appreciation of myself and friend daughter for the opportunity again to meet the officers and members of local union No. 340. Whoa! I almost forgot to say that Brother O'Brien, assistant to the director of projection, Lester Isaacs, was there, together with his better half. He'd better be. He belongs to 640 himself!

YOUR PUBLIC

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

TO be a successful theatre manager it is absolutely necessary to be a good psychologist—not only to be able to read the character and the reaction of the persons in your employ, but to be wise enough to interpret the tendencies, reactions and spirit of the community in which your theatre holds a pivotal position. In this age of closer intercommunication with radio, associated press, telephone, telegraph, news reels and simultaneously released motion pictures, the communities in every state in the Union are registering their motion picture needs, likes and dislikes with surprising sameness. The women's clubs in Seattle have found the problem of better pictures for their community to be identical with that of the Better Films Committee of Saskatoon, or Miami, or San Antonio. Without knowledge of each other's methods of procedure each has arrived at the same solution: friendly cooperation with the producers and theatre men; the free publicizing of better pictures; the development of children's matinees and family night programs.

The recently organized Motion Picture Committee of the Bronxville Women's Club, writing to this Department, says: "Every effort that we make for better pictures brings to us more and more clearly the fact that the education of the public is the only sure road to the accomplishment of our purpose. We have found that we must intelligently consider the box office if we are to have that cooperation that spells success."

The women of Bronxville planned their campaign with forward looking wisdom, and a large measure of practical common sense. They organized and advertised children's matinees for Saturdays at 12 noon, an odd hour, but with them a successful one. Their programs include a news reel, a travel or sport reel, a cartoon and an endorsed feature picture. Through the past winter they experimented with "Family Picture Nights" on Thursdays and Fridays, attempting on these evenings to present films suitable for adolescents as well as for adults. In order to make these special programs bring compensating box office results, the organization formed a large "Advisory Film Committee" made up of one influential member of every organized group in the town, including churches, Masons, Charitable societies, as well as Parent-Teachers' and students' leagues. Through these contacts the committee sends out bulletins on the coming programs, asking that the societies patronize these pictures. The Bulletin invites suggestions and advice from the groups. The local newspaper, entering into the community spirit of cooperation, prints a "Film Review" in which the coming programs are described. The selected pictures are chosen from the endorsed lists of the national organizations engaged in this voluntary work, and the Bronxville Committee finds that the lists are not only informative, but reliable.

The result of these intelligently meshed efforts is a community satisfied with its motion picture entertainment, without censorship worries or the need for denunciation of the evils of the screen.

Rutherford's Plan

Not very many miles away from Bronxville, as the bird flies, another group of women have established a Better Films Committee which, organized in 1924, is now a permanent and influential factor in the community life of Rutherford, New Jersey. This group, like all of the others engaged in this work, met together in response to the town's demand for better film entertainment for its young people. It draws its membership from nearly all the prominent civic, educational and church groups who send a representative to the Better Films Committee, pay his dues and expect him to represent his organization in motion picture work for the town.

At this time the committee, approaching its seventh anniversary, numbers in its membership representatives from 45 important organizations and includes 21 individual members who were admitted because of some particular interest they had in the movement. Although the word "Committee" has been retained, the Rutherford Better Films Committee is an independently organized study and service group occupying a unique place among the town's active clubs.

Among its activities are listed: a preview service by members who are regularly elected to the National Board of Review and bring firsthand information back to the Committee; a Theatre Review Committee whose members study the motion picture at the local theatre by attending every program of "selected pictures" and writing a critical report on the picture and the audience's reaction to it; a Junior Review Committee, which is composed of young people who are anxious to pattern their work upon the senior organization's program and are, in the meanwhile, developing a discriminating taste for better pictures. One subcommittee edits an attractive and original summary of motion picture current events which is titled "Do You Know?" and is featured as a regular service by the local paper. Another small committee edits a release titled The Weekly Photoplay Guide, which is also carried by the local paper. It lists the week's bookings that the local theatre men have submitted and points out those rated as "selected" pictures by the National Board of Review.

In cooperation with the local theatre manager the Committee has sponsored Junior matinees, and a regular Family Week-End Program. The results, they claims, are: the recognition by the public that the week end in the proper time for the school child to attend the movies; and public response given intelligently and wholeheartedly to the support of the family and special matinee programs.

This group has worked in close harmony with the National Board of Review and acknowledges its indebtedness to the National Board's services.

The other idea is to request five dollars worth of quarters. The patron returns in a few minutes, saying he has changed his mind. He returns five dollars in quarters, made of lead. Loew and RKO houses are refusing anything larger than $10 bills.

Chicago Censor Powers to Stay In City Hands

Chicago (QP)—Mayor A. J. Cermak has nounced his intention of personally cen- ring alleged notorious plays and pictures nich are derogatory to Chicago's reputa- on. He said this week that his first ef- rts will be to improve the city's reputa- on by suppressing reputed derogatory pro- uctions here.

The mayor will attend the opening on nday of Edgar Wallace's "On the Spot," Cohan's Grand, and if found to be derog- ory to Chicago, he will ban it immediately. Cermak intimated he would oppose any forts to take censorship powers away om city authorities and place them with ate officials. Seeing's Believing!

Chicago—It's getting so here that a poor actor or actress who actually has some valuable jewelry lost, strayed or stolen has more than a little difficulty convincing the police and the newspapers that it is not just a "plant," for purposes purely publicity. It was only when Sue Carol and Nick Stuart failed to leave for Hollywood on schedule, that the law believed they had actually lost the $35,000 in jewery which they reported gone some days ago. The valuables were taken from their car parked on Michigan Avenue at noon, and included a $5,000 diamond necklace, a $4,000 diamond ring, a $3,000 diamond pendant and a $4,000 diamond and saphire bracelet. A gold chain with emerald pendant is, of course, the family heirloom included, and prized for sentimental reasons.

Repeal or Amendment in Oak Park Asked

Two More Aldermen Favorable to Full Week of Entertainment Are Elected in Evanston

Chicago—Repeal of ordinances inimical to Sunday amusements in Chicago's two largest suburbs, Oak Park and Evanston, looms once more as a result of recent action at the polls in both towns. Immediate relief is hoped for in Oak Park, where the electorate recently voted approval of Sunday operation of miniature golf courses, and, on this authority, action has been instituted which seeks the repeal or amendment of the existing Sunday blue laws. Either repeal or amendment, Oak Park exhibitors believe, would legalize Sunday shows or would be the opening wedge which would make Sunday theatre operation possible in the near future.

Definite Progress Made

The Evanston situation offers no immediate hope of relief to exhibitors there, but definite progress was made at the recent election which added two aldermen favorable to Sunday amusements to the Evanston city council. Of the sixteen Evanston aldermen, comprising the council, there are now six who can be definitely counted on to vote for a repealer of the existing Sunday amusement ordinances. At the next aldermanic election, in April, 1932, theatre interests hope to elect three new aldermen, giving them the desired favorable majority.

In anticipation of an eventual Sunday amusement victory, operators of the New Main Street theatre, Evanston, have purchased property adjoining the theatre and enlargement work is already under way. When completed, 400 seats will have been added to the house's present seating capacity. At the time an actual repeal of the existing Sunday ordinances occurs, the New Main operators will erect a 3,000-seat theatre on the present site.

Doubt Court Victory

A majority of Evanston voters already has expressed itself in favor of Sunday shows, but the adverse majority in the city council refused to pass a repealer. Their action, contested by Publix-Balaban & Katz, which also operates in Evanston, was sustained by high courts, which ruled that the balloting was merely an expression of opinion and was not mandatory on the city council. Relief, the courts held, lies in electing aldermen favorable to amendment or repeal of the existing ordinances. Publix-B. & K. plans to contest the case in higher courts, but other exhibitors do not hope for effective relief from this source.

Much the same situation is presented in Oak Park, where the referendum showed a majority in favor of authorization of Sunday operation of miniature golf courses. In Oak Park, however, the membership of the village board is definitely favorable to Sunday amusements, and is expected to react to the referendum by amending or repealing the present ordinances.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Quality of Comedies

THERE IS A LOT TO BE DESIRED IN the quality of the two-reel comedies that are coming through in sound. They miss fire time after time. We are running one tonight that is terrible. All dialogue, no action, and not clever dialogue at that. Just about two of five really get the laughs, the rest are just plain dumb. The directors are depending too much on dialogue and not getting enough action in the two-reelers. The audience seems to want them to go somewhere, not stand and talk.

There has got to be a big improvement in pictures next year if we are to do business. Business is falling off in most of the small towns around here, due to the low prices on farm products and when you have to depend on rural patronage, you have to have good pictures to pull them.

The real box office draws have been few and far between on most of the product we have under contract this year, notably First National and the remade pictures of Universal, "Resurrection," "Outside the Law," or "Charley's Aunt" of Columbia, and one of my neighbors said he flopped on "Tol'able David."

Making the old silent pictures into sound, unless they have been outstanding silent pictures, is a grievous mistake. The movie audience is long-minded and they say they saw it in silent and do not care to see it over again.

Evidently the producer, having already paid for the story for the silent picture previously made, figures on saving money that way, but we have found the practice is expensive for the exhibitor at the box office.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia City Theatre Company, Columbia City, Ind.

Enjoyed O'Sullivan Article

I WAS GREATLY INTERESTED TO read in Motion Picture Herald a highly illuminating article by Joseph O'Sullivan dealing fascinatingly with what seems to me to be one of the most important and oft neglected essentials in screen story telling—the apt, facile and inspirational musical interpretation of the story.

Taking as his subject the South Seas idyll of F. W. Murnau. "Tabu," as superbly enfolded in musical environment by Hugo Riesenfeld, that writer has elucidated in layman terms the rythmic charms and beauties of harmonic treatment.

It seems to me, as a publicity specialist of years of experience, a part in the past devoted to screen and theatre activities, that Riesenfeld has pointed the way to and O'Sullivan has publicized a fruitful field, which I trust some of those who control the destinies of film affairs may have the perception soon to grasp as an important factor in the development of film art. This factor, too, should be appraised on its specific merits irrespective of the ultimate monetary return on the film which it richly embellishes.—George Francis Kerr, New York City.

Chimp Comedy Producer

IN MOTION PICTURE HERALD OF March 14, 1931, under the heading "Barsky to Make Six Features," you refer to him as the producer of the Chimp Comedies released by Tiffany, and state "with two more Chimp Comedies to come, Barsky will have completed his contract with Tiffany."

This is to advise that the said Bud Barsky had nothing to do, nor was he employed in any way, nor had he any connection or interest of any kind whatsoever in the making or distributing of the Tiffany Chimp Comedies.

Mr. Barsky also implied in his statements that Tiffany would not have any more of that series. As a matter of fact, Tiffany Productions will continue producing and distributing Tiffany Chimp Comedies as in the past, and no one except Tiffany Productions is interested in the making and distributing of these pictures. —Tiffany Productions, Hollywood, Cal.

A Very Constructive Idea

THE MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S DEpartment of "When the Screen Teaches" is a very constructive idea and should go far toward stimulating interest in worthwhile pictures, and at the same time counteract some of the destructive influences which are always hammering at our industry.—Lee Marcus, President, RKO Pathe Distributing Corporation, New York City.

Advice From Missouri

TO EXHIBITORS WHO HAVE "HONOR Among Lovers," Paramount, and "Ten Cents a Dance," Columbia, under contract and have not played them yet, I wish to advise them not to make the mistake I did of playing them in the same week. The plots of these two pictures are almost identical. In fact, Monroe Owsley plays the same role in both pictures. Both are good, but "Ten Cents a Dance" grossed twice as much for me due no doubt to a more intriguing title.—A. J. Sass, Star theatre, Willow Springs, Mo.

Valuable to Exhibitor

I THINK THE MOTION PICTURE HERald's department, "School and Screen," is a splendid addition to your pages and is decidedly valuable to any exhibitor planning a campaign on the pictures you cover.—Joe Weil, Director of Exploitation, Universal Pictures Corp., New York City.

Oswald "Goes Society"

Oswald, Universal's "Lucky Rabbit," has "gone society." He is now dolled up with gloves and shoes, and looks pretty classy. But don't get the wrong impression. He has not gone high-hat. He is still wearing his long ears as the only head adornment, and is still talking out of the side of his mouth.

The gloves will enable the Rabbit to take on all comers with greater fistic ease, and the shoes, which are plenty big, will let him slide around the landscape or skate over oceans, with practically no difficulty at all.

Lee With RKO Pathe

Manfred Lee, Tiffany advertising and publicity director since the resignation of Al Selig, has resigned to go with RKO Pathe.

Two Series for Meteor

Newly formed Meteor Pictures Corporation, Irving Briskin president, plans two series of eight, the first to star Ted Thompson. Initial film is "Hot Lead," released August 1.

A Still, Old Style!

Ocala, Fla.—A manager had a great exploitation idea, but it was so good that it landed him, his assistant and the janitor in the hoose-gow for violation of the something or other, maybe the 18th amendment, whatever that may be. J. T. Webb is the enterprising manager, and the film was "Ten Nights in a Barroom." He wanted to make it a real plug, so he dressed up the lobby like an old time saloon, and even put an authentic moonshine still front center. It was the hit of the town, but Police Chief H. A. Fausett came, saw and acted. In quick succession he "pinched" the negro janitor, the assistant manager and then Manager Webb. And they have to appear in municipal court and tell the judge where they found the still!

Two Midwesco Promotions

Madison, Wis.—James B. Kennedy, former manager of the Apollo, Indianapolis has been named manager of the Fox Strand succeeding Charles Loewenberg, now state supervisor of Midwesco.

M-G-M Buys Destroyer

San Francisco—M-G-M representatives are here to purchase one of 13 destroyers tied up at Mare Island, to be used in a film titled "Pig Boats."

Dickinson to Improve House

Kansas City, Mo.—Glen W. Dickinson Theatres has acquired a 20-year lease and will spend $50,000 improving the Strand. A $20,000 refrigeration plant will be installed.

Mines Bureau Makes Film

Washington—The United States Bureau of Mines, Department of Commerce, has prepared a one-reeler on concrete, "Construction That Endures."

Reopening Rumors False

Buffalo—The Hollywood, former 300 seat art house, will not be reopened, as reports claimed. Reported closing of one downtown house is also false.

Columbus Business Moves Up

Columbus, Ohio—With exploitation heavier than ever before, business is on the upward trend, after 60 days below par.

In New Film Building

Pittsburgh—Fox, United Artists and National Theatre Supply have moved to the new two-story film building, just completed.

Secretary Made Writer

Hollywood — Gertrude Rigdon, Douglas MacLean's secretary, has been promoted to Radio's scenario department.

New Independent House

Xenia, O.—Hibbert Theatres, Inc., new company, will build a 1,000 seat independent house, construction to be financed by stock issue.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed acording to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

PARAMOUNT 1931-2 PRODUCT ANNOUNCEMENT

Vol. 103, No. 5 — In Two Sections—Section Two — MAY 2, 1931

ADOLPH ZUKOR

TO Adolph Zukor, leader of the motion picture industry, who first envisioned quality motion picture entertainment for the millions as we know it today and whose hand and spirit are most responsible for the mighty progress of Paramount, this announcement and this program of pictures are dedicated.

THREE MILESTONES

PARAMOUNT'S 20th Birthday Jubilee is of world-wide interest. For the history of Paramount and of Adolph Zukor is the history of the motion picture industry.

IN 1905, Mr. Zukor at his theatre in Newark, N.J., introduced the first multiple-reel picture, "The Passion Play". He installed the first organ ever heard in a picture house and a quartet singing "The Rosary".

THE instant response which these innovations, new and daring for their time, received from the public, the entertainment and genuine inspiration which the crowded houses derived, impressed Mr. Zukor deeply. He resolved to devote his life and fortune to the production and distribution of quality photoplays.

THE ideal of the modern motion picture and of Paramount was born.

HIS plans brought slowly but surely to fruition, Mr. Zukor in 1911 gave the world "Queen Elizabeth", starring Sarah Bernhardt. The succession of "famous players in famous plays"—James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda", Mrs. Fiske in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and the rest of the royal line—started.

DOWN through two scores of crowded years Paramount has devoted itself to this ideal first conceived by Adolph Zukor. Today we pause to recall our glorious past and declare anew our allegiance to our first principles.

WE realize the present and the future are of prime importance. Every department of the great Paramount institution is pledged to climax our twenty years of leadership in 1931-2 with the finest program of product it has ever been our good fortune to produce or exhibitors to play.

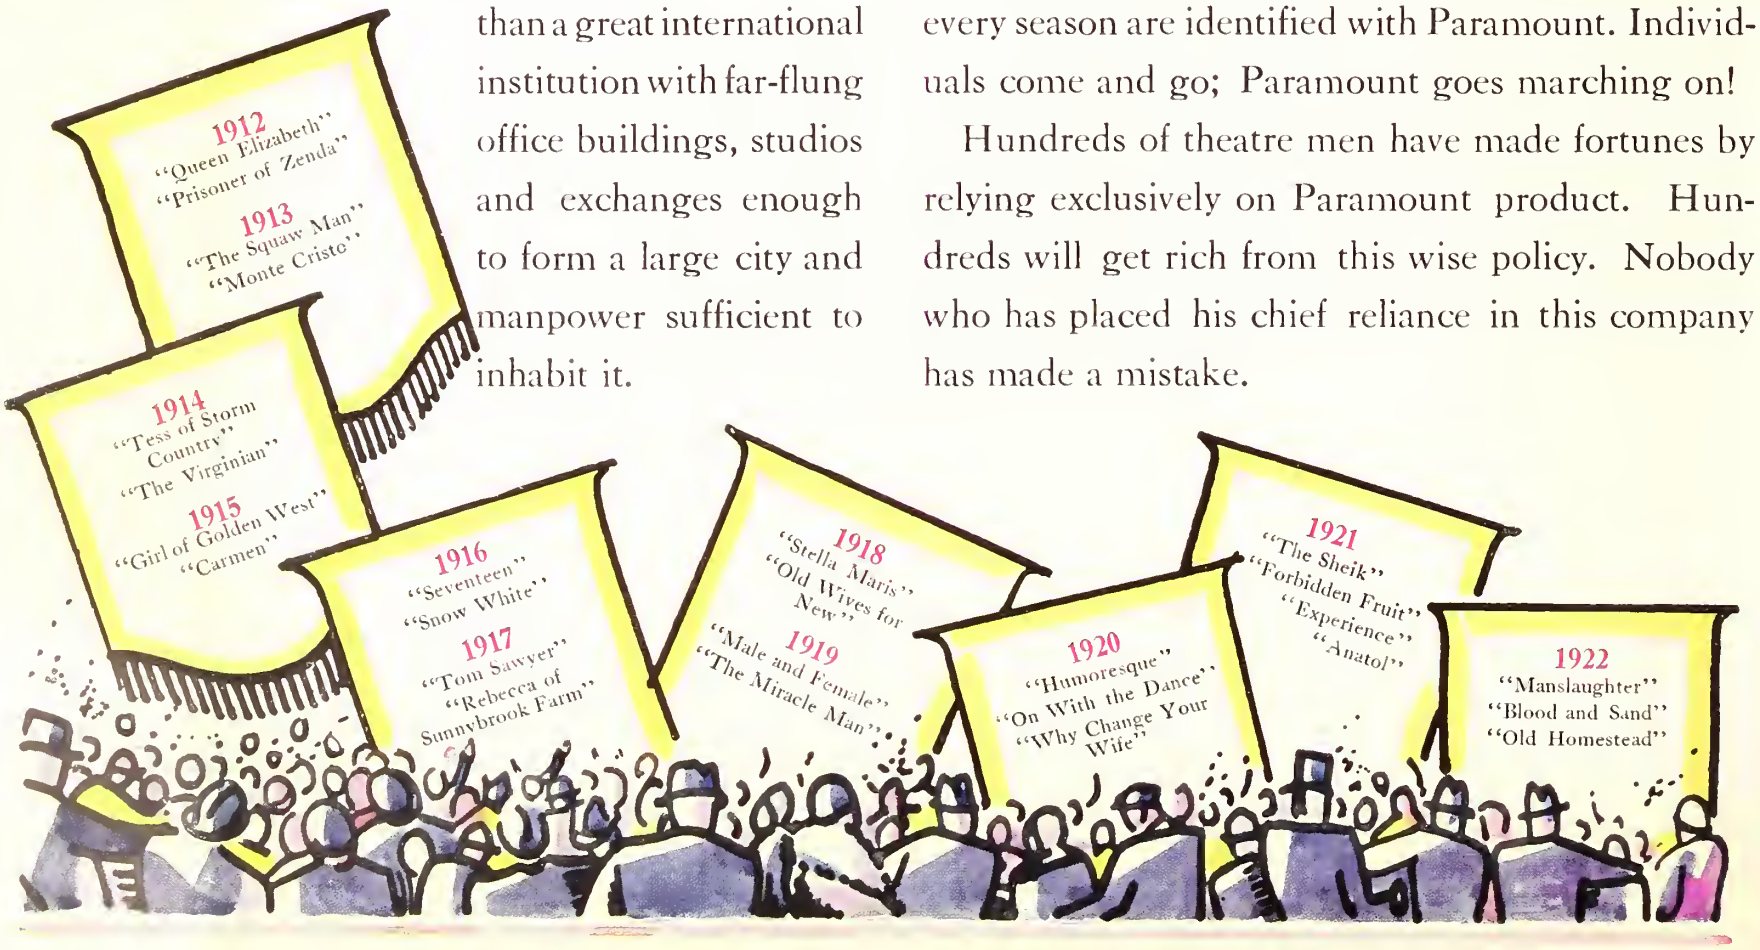
The first Paramount Poster. "Queen Elizabeth."

Jesse L. Lasky's first production, "The Squaw Man". Filmed in Hollywood. Dustin Farnum and Cecil B. De Mille appear.

FOR 20 YEARS PRINCIPLES

TWENTY years of leadership!

Twenty years of furnishing to exhibitors and the public the world's finest motion pictures in quantity.



More important, twenty years of living steadfastly up to the original high ideal of entertainment quality and service envisioned by Adolph Zukor.

Paramount is more than a picture company, more than a great international institution with far-flung office buildings, studios and exchanges enough to form a large city and manpower sufficient to inhabit it.

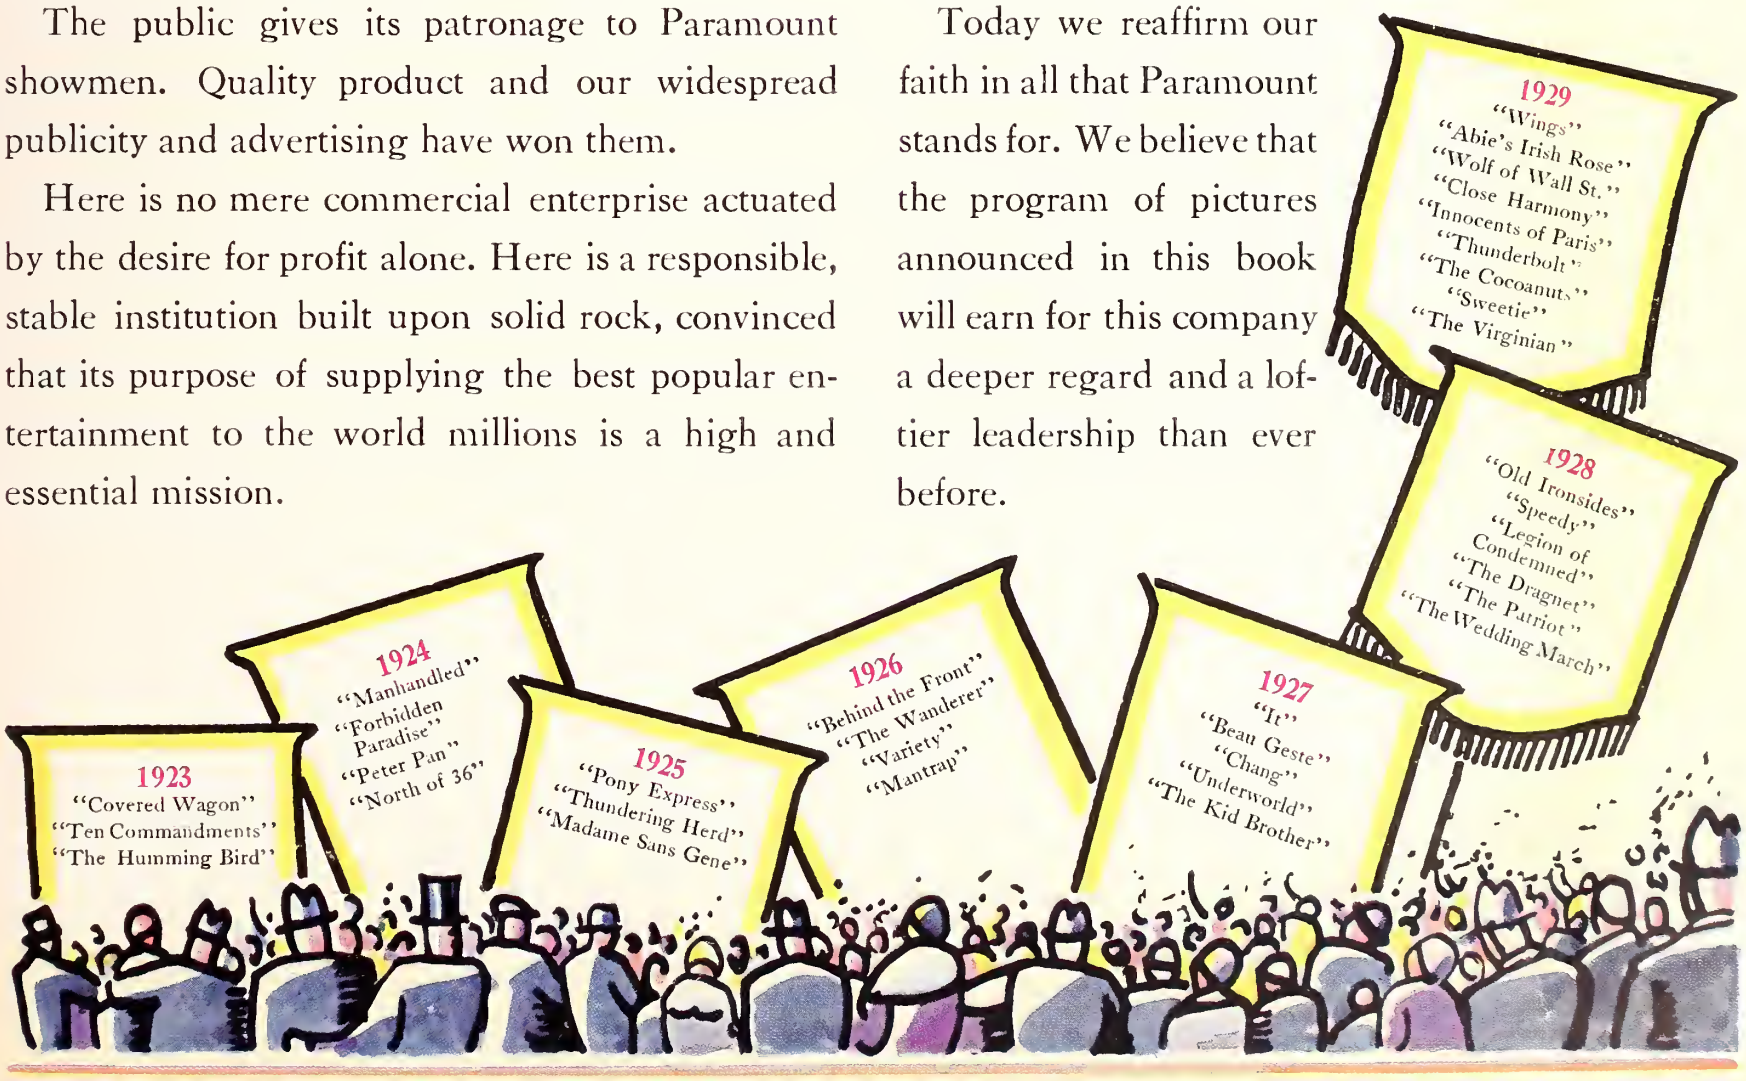
Paramount is a never failing source of great shows delivered when and as promised, a trade mark of dependability and fair dealing, a protector of exhibitor investments, the foremost bulwark of the industry, staunch and strong as Gibraltar.

The leading stars, the most successful directors, the outstanding creative talent in all branches in every season are identified with Paramount. Individuals come and go; Paramount goes marching on!

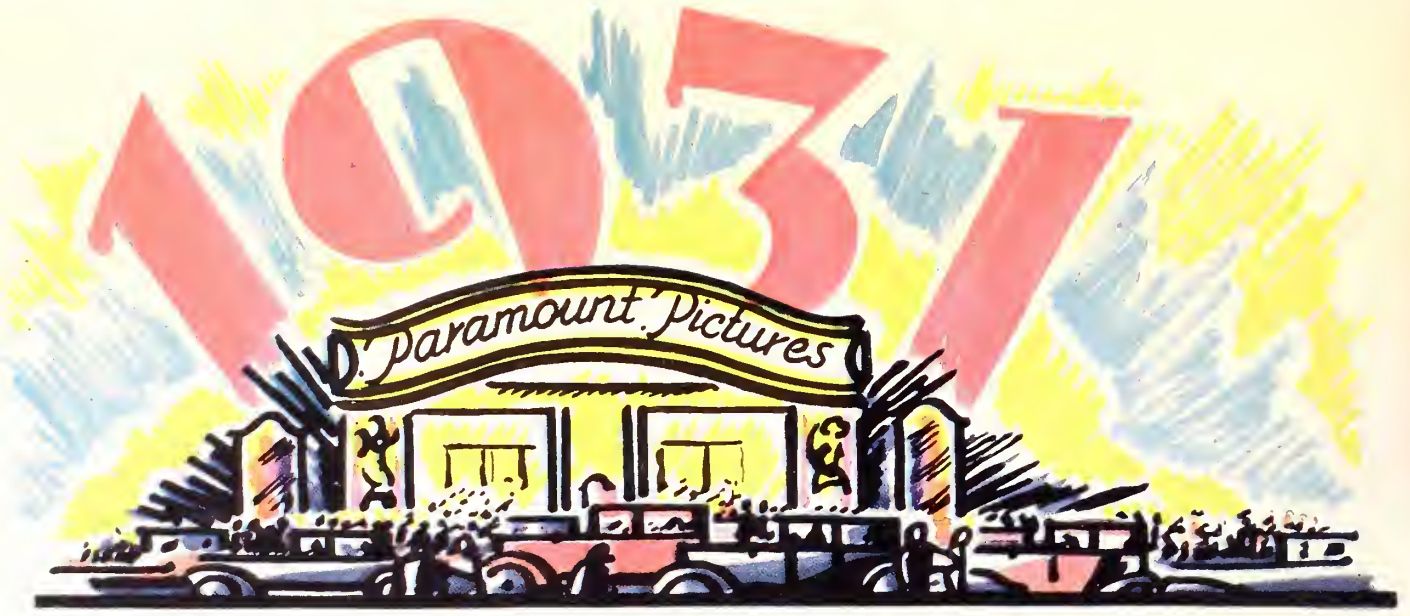
Hundreds of theatre men have made fortunes by relying exclusively on Paramount product. Hundreds will get rich from this wise policy. Nobody who has placed his chief reliance in this company has made a mistake.

PARAMOUNT PRODUCT AND HAVE LED THE INDUSTRY

The acting profession respects Paramount. It is the highest ambition of players to work in our studios. It is the mark of superior merit.



Exhibitors like to deal with Paramount. It is profitable, and square dealing is appreciated.



The public gives its patronage to Paramount showmen. Quality product and our widespread publicity and advertising have won them.

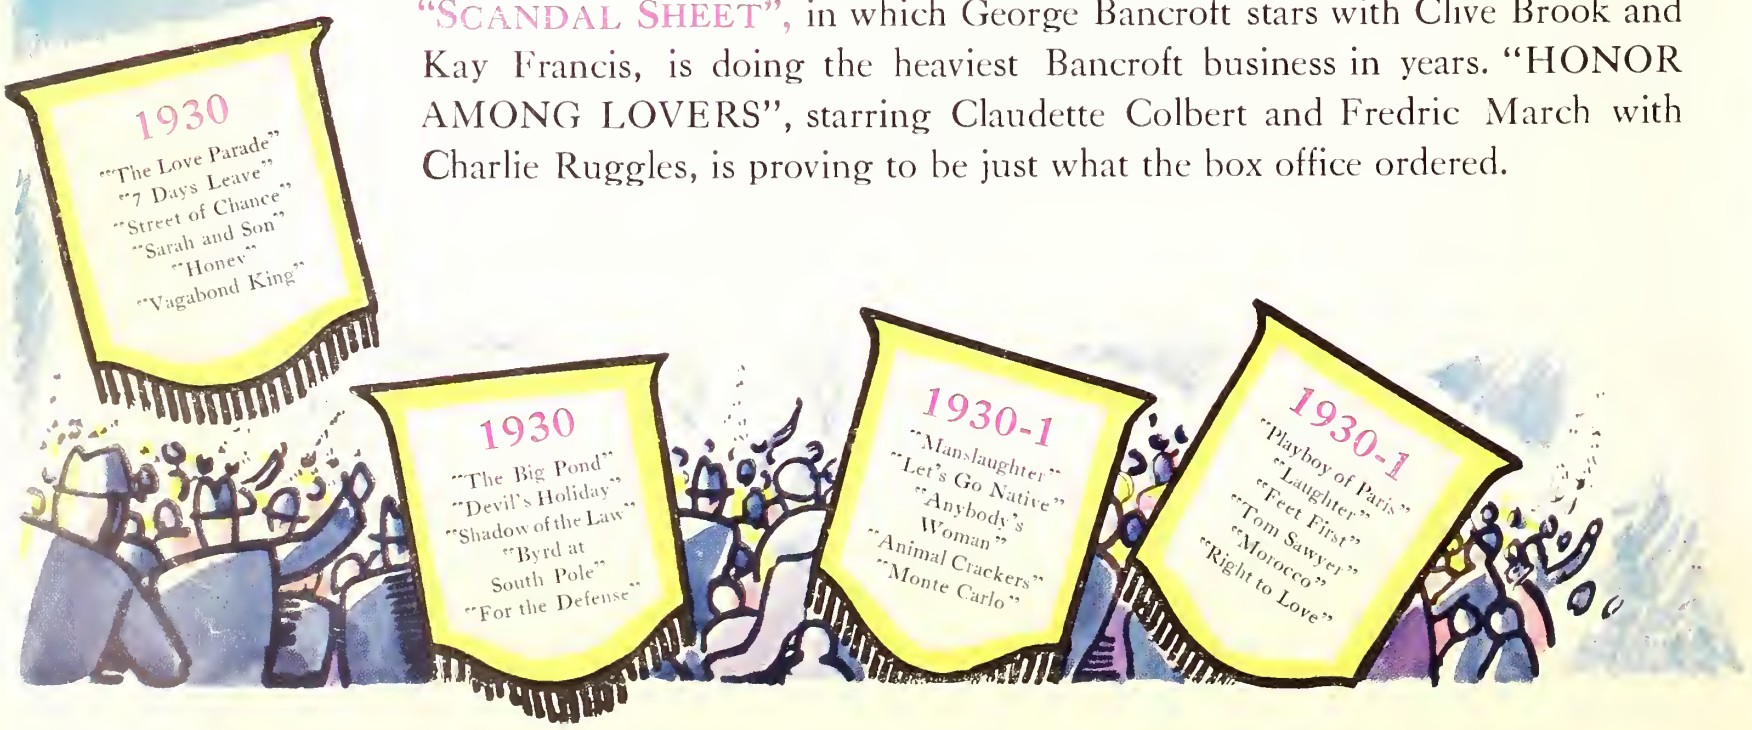
Here is no mere commercial enterprise actuated by the desire for profit alone. Here is a responsible, stable institution built upon solid rock, convinced that its purpose of supplying the best popular entertainment to the world millions is a high and essential mission.

Those who buy from Paramount buy more than film in cans. They buy the high ideals, the dependability, the quality guarantees and the other assets symbolized by the Paramount trade mark that money cannot buy.

Today we reaffirm our faith in all that Paramount stands for. We believe that the program of pictures announced in this book will earn for this company a deeper regard and a loftier leadership than ever before.

TODAY'S BIGGEST HITS!

Marlene Dietrich



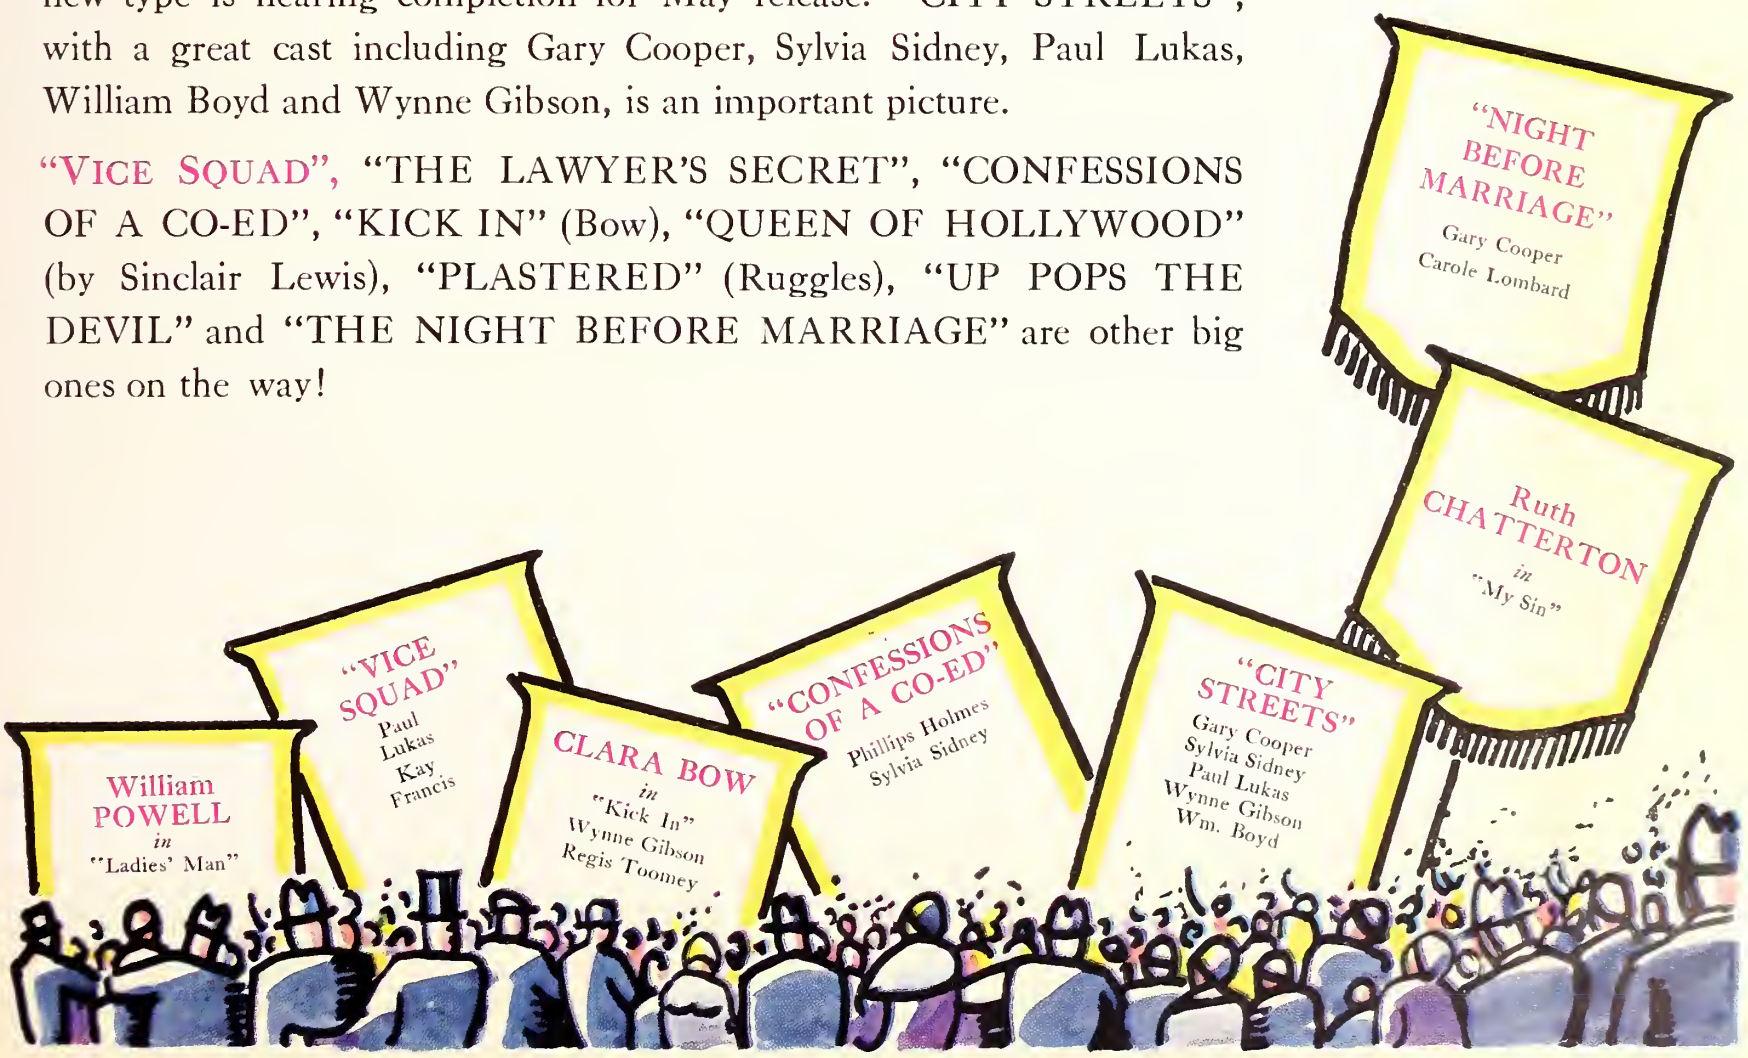
NOTHING is so important to exhibitors as the answer to, "What kind of pictures are you giving us right now and in the next few weeks?" It's a happy fact that the best Paramount product of the current season comes from March to August, 1931. We believe it is our strongest spring line-up.

To go back a minute to the beginning of the 1930-31 season, we need only to cite such hits as the Marx Brothers in "Animal Crackers", "Manslaughter", "Let's Go Native", Ruth Chatterton in "Anybody's Woman" and "The Right to Love", Lubitsch's "Monte Carlo", Maurice Chevalier in "Playboy of Paris", Nancy Carroll in "Laughter", Harold Lloyd in "Feet First", "Tom Sawyer" and Marlene Dietrich to prove that Paramount leads this year, as usual. But even bigger hits are here and on the way.

"DISHONORED", starring the Great Dietrich with Victor McLaglen, is smashing all records in its long run at the Rialto, New York. Topping even "Morocco" figures in key spots.

"UNFAITHFUL", starring Ruth Chatterton with Paul Lukas, is making even the high "Anybody's Woman" marks tumble. Another Chatterton picture, "MY SIN" set for July release.

"SCANDAL SHEET", in which George Bancroft stars with Clive Brook and Kay Francis, is doing the heaviest Bancroft business in years. "HONOR AMONG LOVERS", starring Claudette Colbert and Fredric March with Charlie Ruggles, is proving to be just what the box office ordered.



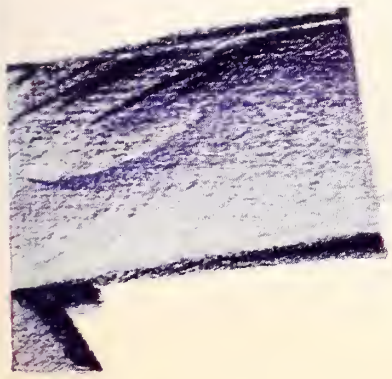
"SKIPPY", the fine kids-adults classic with a marvelous kid cast and story, will outgross "TOM SAWYER" two to one. "MAN OF THE WORLD" and "LADIES' MAN", strong William Powell vehicles with strong casts, are due to mop up.

"GUN SMOKE", with Richard Arlen, Mary Brian and big cast, goes into the Rialto, New York, for a run. "TARNISHED LADY", debut of the glamorous Tallulah Bankhead, with Clive Brook as co-star, is being hailed as the surprise sensation of the year.

An amazing NANCY CARROLL-FREDRIC MARCH drama of a brand new type is nearing completion for May release. "CITY STREETS", with a great cast including Gary Cooper, Sylvia Sidney, Paul Lukas, William Boyd and Wynne Gibson, is an important picture.

"VICE SQUAD", "THE LAWYER'S SECRET", "CONFESSIONS OF A CO-ED", "KICK IN" (Bow), "QUEEN OF HOLLYWOOD" (by Sinclair Lewis), "PLASTERED" (Ruggles), "UP POPS THE DEVIL" and "THE NIGHT BEFORE MARRIAGE" are other big ones on the way!

HAROLD LLOYD



The famous Harold Lloyd hits are produced by the HAROLD LLOYD CORPORATION. PARAMOUNT releases.

Coming to Hang Up New Records in the Famous Harold Lloyd Gallery of Money Hits!

THE GREATEST OF ALL HAROLD LLOYD PRODUCTIONS IN 1931-2

SHOOTING will start soon on the most elaborate picture project Harold Lloyd has ever undertaken. The story, developed by a famous combination of stage and screen writers in collaboration with Lloyd, packs more comedy dynamite than any of the star's previous efforts. It will be a new and different Lloyd picture, filled with power and surprises. Hollywood is already agog. Wait till you see it!

MICHELSON

DIRECTED BY JOSEF VON STERNBERG

THE first of the new season productions starring the most popular woman on the screen will be "Indiscretion". Josef von Sternberg, who directed "Morocco" and "Dishonored", will make it. Miss Dietrich will be seen as a glamorous lady of mystery loved by many men but her heart true to only one. Settings and other details will reflect the high standards of quality that have distinguished the Dietrich-von Sternberg Paramount successes to date. Following "Indiscretion", Miss Dietrich will be starred in other Paramount releases.

MARLENE DIETRICH

The Amazing Rise of Dietrich

A glamorous new star captured the hearts and imaginations of the public during the past season, and Marlene Dietrich became the outstanding female screen personality of the world. Even before the release of her very first picture, "Morocco", theatre goers sensed her greatness. "The Blue Angel" and "Dishonored" confirmed the public's judgement. Beautiful, glamorous, exotic, mysterious and a splendid actress, "the woman who is all women" has swept to glory. Her name in electrics is today probably the most potent magnet a theatre can possess.

Newspapers, magazines and the conversations of the fan millions are filled with talk about this gorgeous girl. She is the idol of the hour —and a lasting one because her popularity is based upon real merit.

Fine Dietrich pictures have been made. Greater ones are on the way. The riches of her magnificent art and personality have only been hinted.

Under the gifted hand of Josef von Sternberg, a minimum of two Dietrich releases will come to you in 1931-2.

Maurice

Chevalier

THE SMILING LIEUTENANT

With CLAUDETTE COLBERT, MIRIAM HOPKINS and CHARLIE RUGGLES

The Prince of Personality and the Master Director, creators of "The Love Parade", re-united. With an even greater cast and story! Chevalier smiling, singing and winking his merry way in and out of love, succumbing to marriage with a plain Princess and then seeing her blossom into a warm-blooded beauty under the care of his own dancing-girl sweetheart. Story and adaptation by Ernest Vajda and Samson Raphaelson. Music by Oscar Straus. Lyrics by Clifford Grey.

"LOVE ME TONIGHT"

Maurice as a Gay Vagabond of the Boulevards

Directed by H. D'Abbadie D'Arrast

Followed by a THIRD CHEVALIER to be announced

With CLAUDETTE COLBERT

A large and distinguished cast appears with Paramount's glamorous brunette in this smart, exciting story by Charles Brackett, Saturday Evening Post and New Yorker ace writer. An underpaid social secretary by day, a bejewelled social belle by night, this beautiful girl invades the loves, scandals and intrigues of high society. The production is box office from start to finish.

"SECRETS of a SECRETARY"

THE MARX IN MONKEY

The merry, mad Marxes are in again! The frenzied foursome that wowed the movie millions in "The Cocoanuts" and panicked them in "Animal Crackers" promise that "Monkey Business" will out-laugh and out-gross any Marx hit ever made. Groucho has a brand new crop of rapid-fire nonsense. Mute Harpo whangs the harp and chases the blondes. Chico, the tough guy, prowls his omniverous way. Zeppo furnishes the one sane spot in the lunatic Marxian universe. The buffooning brothers are invading an unsuspecting Hollywood for this opus.

BROTHERS BUSINESS

The story is by Will B. Johnstone and S. J. Perelman, the nationally known humorists. It starts with the Marxes as stowaways on an ocean liner, with the whole ship's company in pursuit. Arrived in New York, they interview the ship reporters sent to interview them, then embark for Florida, by request. Having wrecked a millionaire's home, family and nerves there, Groucho psycho-analyzes a horse in his well known style. From there on it gets louder and funnier. Frank Tuttle will direct the Big Four of Fun, which is good news too.

A FAREWELL

From the novel by

and the stage play arranged by Laurence Stallings

THE world proclaims it "the greatest novel written by any living American". To its millions of admirers "A Farewell to Arms" is more than a book; it is a rich, unforgettable emotional experience which they are eager to re-live upon the screen.

Against the giant canvas of strife and blood, Hemingway tells his beautiful story of the casual amorousness of an American officer and a British nurse that flamed into a deep, fierce love. A love that leaped beyond convention, beyond life itself. A drama that is shocking, awesome, beautiful and stirring to the very roots.

Paramount promises a picture worthy of this magnificent subject and one destined to stand beside the great cinema classics of all times.

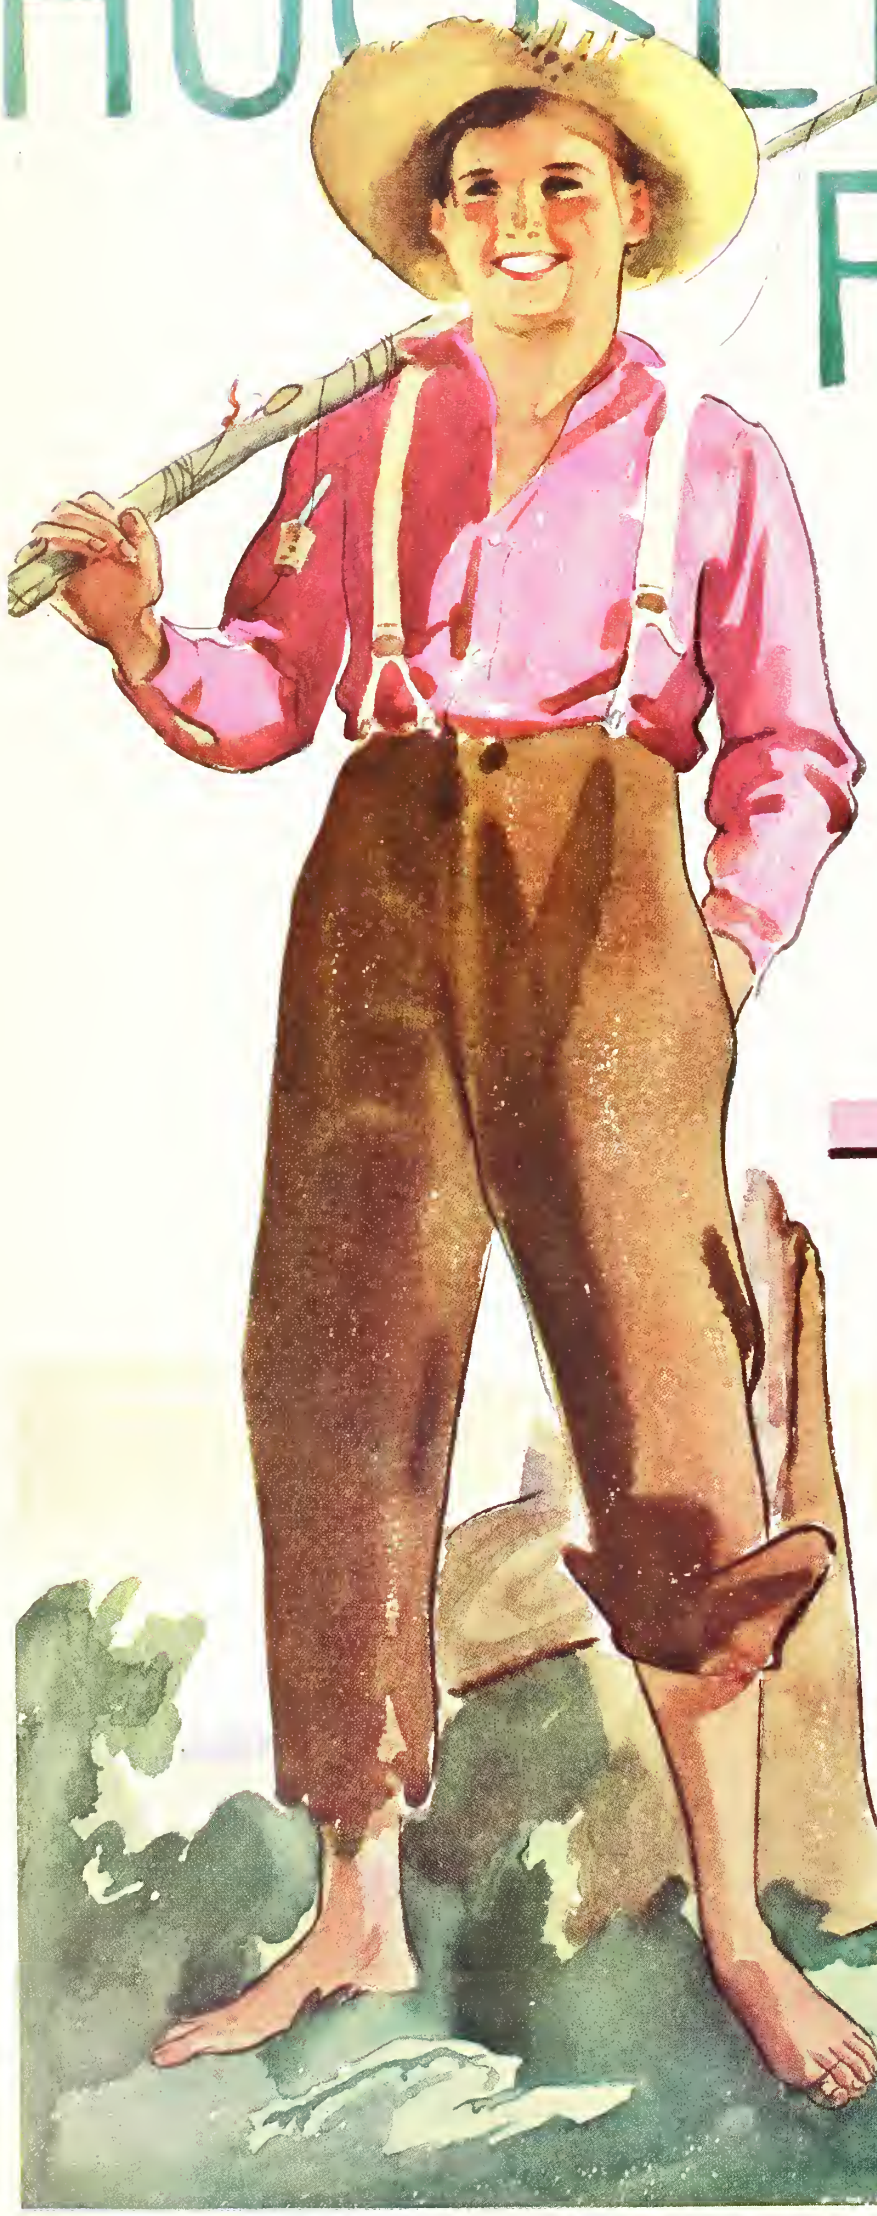
and a cast of big names

THE sensation of America and Europe, Miss Wong has electrified New York with her audacious portrayal of the Oriental siren in the stage play, "On the Spot". Oland is the foremost male interpreter of Oriental roles in the world. "Daughter of the Dragon", based on a story by the famous Sax Rohmer, is a tingling thriller of a beautiful Chinese girl used to entrap men.

DAUGHTER of the DRAGON

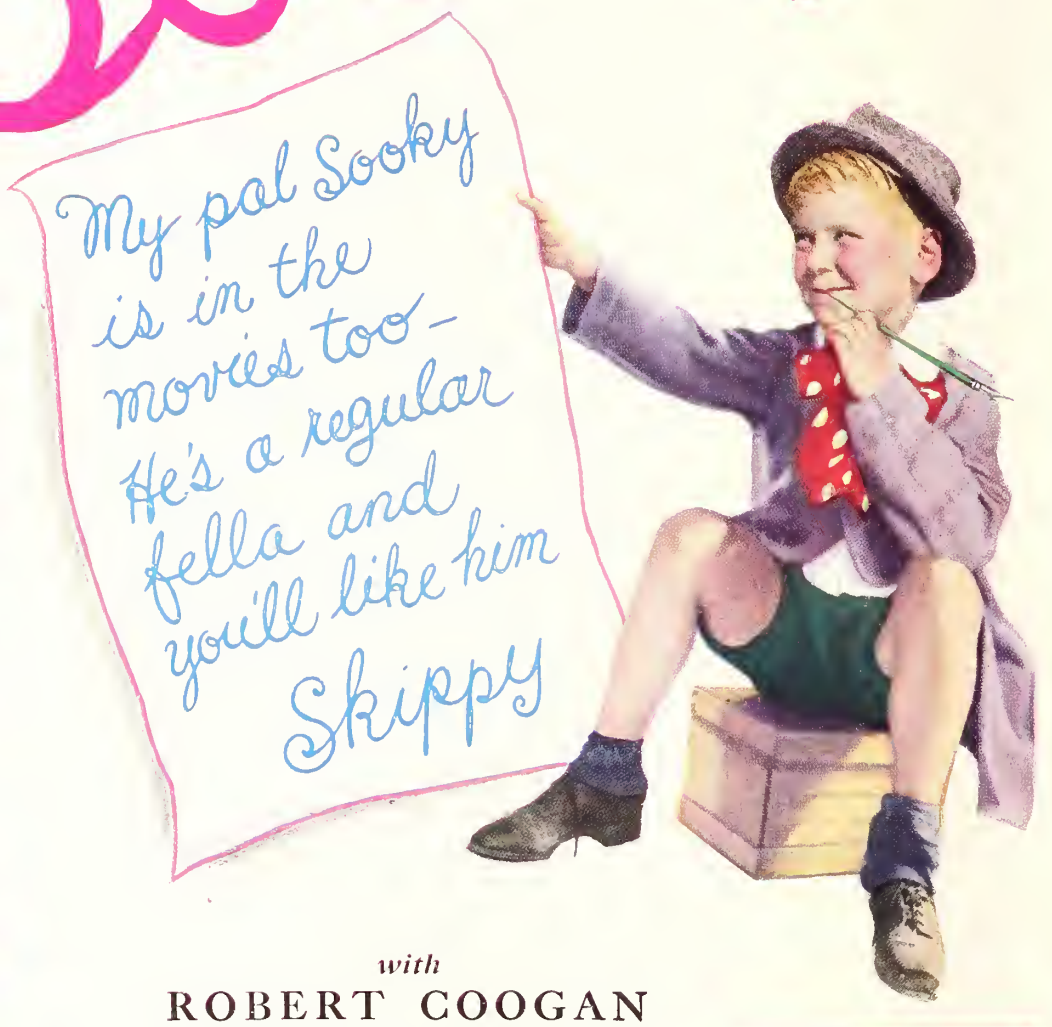
Not since Marlene Dietrich has Paramount introduced a new star with as electrifying a personality and so rich a promise as Tallulah Bankhead, the Golden Blonde from Alabama. Deserting the American stage at the height of a successful career, Miss Bankhead became a sensation for years in London. Now she has returned to her native land and is winning fresh laurels on the screen. Equally meteoric has been the rise to popularity of handsome Fredric March. He is the new male idol of the fans. These two players will be co-starred in an original story by John Colton, co-author of "Rain". It is an intense love drama. Later each will be starred separately in other big pictures.



TALLULAH BANKHEAD..FREDRIC MARCH

HUCKLEBERRY FINN

After "Tom Sawyer", thousands asked, "What about 'Huckleberry Finn'? It will make an even more successful picture". Paramount agreed. Here it is! With the same zestful, wholesome flavor that made "Tom Sawyer" one of the real smash hits of the past season and with the same cast of real kids.



THE casts for both "HUCKLEBERRY FINN" and "TOM SAWYER, DETECTIVE" will consist substantially of the same group of juvenile and adult players who made Paramount's "TOM SAWYER" such a delight for young and old and a box office triumph; namely JACKIE COOGAN, MITZI GREEN, JUNIOR DURKIN, JACKIE SEARL and ROBERT COOGAN (Jackie's talented little brother.)

"TOM SAWYER, DETECTIVE" portrays the rollicking adventures of the inimitable Huck and Tom in solving a mystery, locating a fortune in stolen money and re-uniting a pair of lovers. It is packed with the same brand of clean, wholesome excitement and fun as the original "TOM SAWYER".

THE ROUND UP

PARAMOUNT will produce on big circus scale this greatest of all outdoor action thrillers. With jolly Eugene Pallette playing the biggest role of his career, the famous Sheriff "Slim" Hoover. Literally hundreds of exhibitors have stormed us with letters to make this grand entertainment as a talking picture. They predict it will out-gross "The Virginian." Paramount will make good their prophecies. From the play by Edmund Day.

THE STRANGE GUEST

With

PAUL LUKAS and big cast

A STRANGE and gripping love-melodrama based upon the famous play by Alberto Casella, adapted in English by Walter Ferris. Based on humans' age-old and unflagging interest in the eerie and supernatural. Every man and woman will some day entertain "the strange guest". Here this mysterious, handsome young stranger visits a rich society week-end party and fascinates a beautiful girl, carrying her away to a startling destiny. Bound to be one of the most talked-about pictures in Paramount's 20th Birthday Jubilee Program.

It's the story of a man who was murdered twice. At 8:45 P.M. the body is discovered by the police. By midnight the corpse has been revived by the injection of adrenalin into the heart. By one o'clock he has been murdered again.

The treatment is worthy of Somerset Maugham; restrained, yet intensely dramatic—it is rich, sombre, mysterious, exciting—its psychology and atmosphere have a dark haunting almost suggestive of Conrad.

"Murder by the Clock" is an amazing event.

"UNCERTAIN WOMEN"

CLAUDETTE COLBERT

and a splendid cast

CLAUDETTE COLBERT, favorite in "Manslaughter," "Honor Among Lovers" and other hits, heads an exceptional cast as the heroine of Edgar Wallace's thriller-romance, "Uncertain Women." An inside drama of the clever, beautiful ladies of mystery who have luxurious apartments, limousines and high positions in society—and detectives on their trails. Among these fascinating fakers lovely Claudette plays a dangerous and exciting game, on the side of the law—and wins.

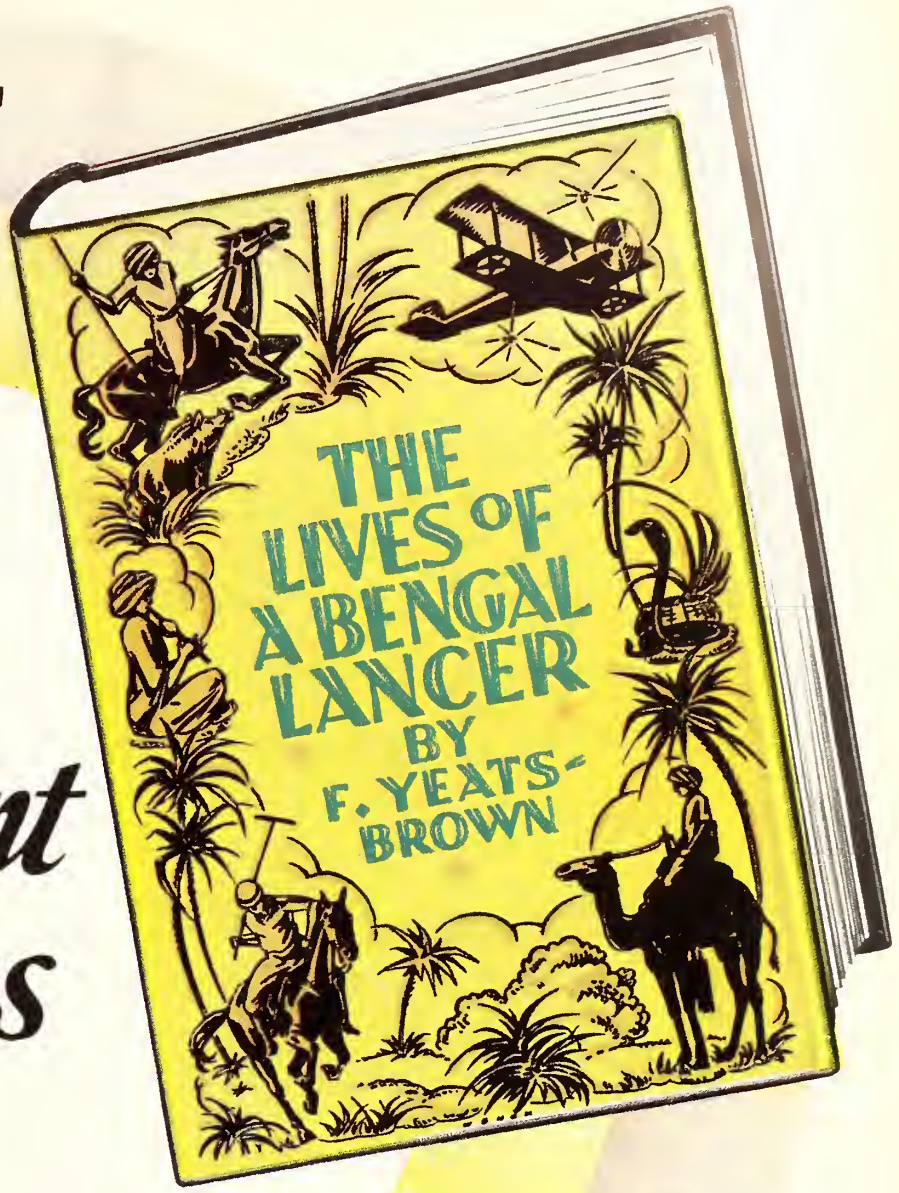
SYLVIA SIDNEY AND PHILLIPS HOLMES

What happens when father and son fall in love with the same girl? Especially when the girl loves the son but is dependent upon the father for a living? And both males are natural-born fighters? Jack Lait developed this situation in a great play called "Help Wanted". Paramount now presents it on the talking screen with the youthful and popular stars of "An American Tragedy" in leading roles. Close to the vital problems of modern youth, we believe it will appeal immensely to audiences, especially the all-important young people.

F. W. Murnau's Romance of Forbidden Love in a Tropical Paradise



Brought back from the South Seas after two years of inspired production. Enacted by native white Polynesians, the most perfectly formed men and women in the world, and highly intelligent. The story, told by Murnau and Robert Flaherty, concerns a beautiful girl fleeing from Paradise with her guilty lover and pursued by the terrible vengeance, the tabu, of her race. "TABU" is now playing to crowded houses at advanced admissions at the Central Park Theatre, New York.

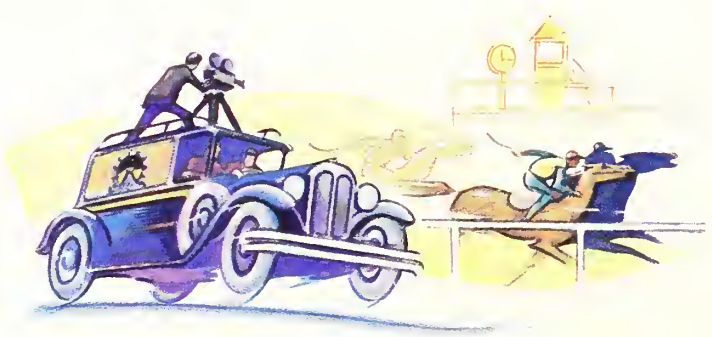
Paramount Sound News Hits Record Heights!



EMANUEL COHEN

WHEN Paramount Sound News scored its meteoric success at the start, theatre men and public realized that a new and greater sound news reel had come into the field. When this fresh, ultra-modern news reel went right on piling up the business, swiftly gaining new accounts by the week and day, the whole industry admitted the news reel field has a powerful leader —PARAMOUNT SOUND NEWS!

Our sound news is different from any other in the field. We admit it proudly. Editor Emanuel Cohen, keenest news reel brain in the world, and his far-flung staff, have a definite creed: Get the news. Get real news. Get it first. Get it on theatre screens first. And, very important, get it on entertainingly. No time, money or effort are ever spared in making this creed good.

Watch audiences viewing Paramount Sound News. They sit tense, laugh, applaud. They have a swell time. That sells seats.

18 PARAMOUNT SCREEN SONGS

Hundreds of smart showmen say Paramount Screen Songs are the most popular short subjects since talk was invented. They make singing and happy audiences. They enrich and enliven any bill on which they're used. Created by the one and only Max Fleischer.

PARAMOUNT TALKARTOONS

IF imitation is the sincerest flattery, then Max Fleischer, creator of Paramount Screen Songs and Paramount Talkartoons, is one of the most flattered showmen in captivity.

The instant success scored by the Fleischer studio's amazing Talkartoons has brought a host of imitations in their wake. But none of the latter possess the flashing originality, the roaring good humor and keen showmanship that Max and his talented staff lavish upon the one and only original. That's why the Fleischer-Paramount Talkartoons are real seat-selling assets to theatres.

Every exhibitor who has played them will rejoice that there will be 18 more Talkartoons in Paramount's 1931-2 line-up.

PICTURES IMPROVE SINCE CODE INCEPTION; PERCENTAGE OF FILMS ENDORSED INCREASES

CODE IMPROVES PICTURES! The above chart illustrates the percentage of pictures endorsed by the four groups previewing and classifying features since early in January when much of the product made since the production code of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors became effective reached the public. During 1930 one of these four groups endorsed only 49 per cent of the pictures released. (Story in next column)

Number of Films Approved by Four Groups Jumps From 49 Per Cent in 1930 to as High as 75 Per Cent During First of 1931

(Special to the M. P. Herald)

The production code of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, which has been in effect almost a year, has proved both practical and successful.

This is learned definitely through statistics just obtained by MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

That criticism directed at the code, which was created for the purpose of bettering pictures, was unwarranted and was prompted by various individuals for personal aggrandizement, is evident from the information at the command of the HERALD.

The chart published on this page illustrates the trend toward picture improvement since the early part of 1931 when many of the first features produced under the code regulations reached circulation.

Based on Findings of Four Groups

This chart is based on the findings of the four national groups previewing and classifying pictures, namely: The Federation of Women's Clubs, the D. A. R., the Parent-Teacher group and the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae.

One of these groups during 1930 endorsed only 49 per cent of the total number of pictures released by the industry. Since early January of this year, however, the number endorsed has ranged as high as 75 per cent, with the low 49 per cent mark being reached only during the week of January 12.

The HERALD's statistics are based upon the findings of all four groups, and do not represent the observations of just one.

At the time the code became effective there were expressions voiced in the studios that while it undoubtedly would improve the quality of production it "would not help the entertainment values."

Box office receipts, as collected by Quigley Publications since the first of this year, disprove that belief.

Theory on Coast Is Disproved

The theory on the Coast was that the code might impose a double censorship and would restrict the use of original material in pictures. Since a thorough test of the code, however, such complaints have not been made.

That the new season will see an even greater improvement in pictures is indicated by the production announcements which are now being made public by the various companies.

Paramount has stated definitely that the day of the sex and sophisticated picture was gone. This company says that with a movement away from these types of pictures, greater stress will be placed on juvenile subjects—pictures which will still maintain an adult appeal though juvenile in theme.

It is the belief of Paramount production and distribution executives that the ordinary American family must be picturized just as the elite and royalty have been in the past.

Paramount is but one example of this trend.

Assists Better Picture Promotion

The HERALD, through its departments, "Your Public" and "School and Screen," is endeavoring to assist the exhibitor in the promotion of the better pictures now being produced.

Through these departments methods of encouraging civic organizations to cooperate with the theatres are explained.

Exhibitors, producers and distributors have been quick to recognize the importance of the work being done through these departments of the HERALD, and have lent their wholehearted cooperation.

St. Louis First Run Goes Double Feature; Seen as a Surprise Move

First Time Features Have Ever Been Doubled In One of City's Big Houses

St. Louis—The Missouri Theatre, a Skouras first run house here, has adopted a double feature policy. Some film men in this city interpret the move as one to increase a falling off of dividends at this house but others view the change in the light of an impending summer battle among all St. Louis first run houses.

Charles P. Skouras, head of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, in announcing the double feature plan for the Missouri, made it clear that the innovation was temporary. He also stated there would be no curtailment of short subjects on programs nor an advance in admission. The new policy got under way on April 24 with "God's Gift to Women" and "Drums of Jeopardy" as the features, while the Bobby Jones golf picture, "The Putter," was also set in as a receipt booster.

This is the first time a St. Louis first run house has ever used double features to attract business. On the other hand, it is claimed that trade at the Missouri has not been what it should be. Some blame the tough times, others attach another significance to the move.

In line with the argument that first runs are going to fight it out if it takes all summer, the Fox theatre, just a short distance down Grand boulevard, has lowered its prices to the same rates that prevailed last summer.

Under the new schedule the Fox, effective April 30, goes back to a 50c top, compared to 65c this winter. From noon to 2 p. m. the admission fee will be 25c, from 2 p. m. to 6 p. m. 35c, and from 6 p. m. to closing 50c. On Sundays and holidays 25c to 2 p. m. and 50c thereafter.

elevision May Alter Production

With the development of the Farnsth system of television, it is predicted t a brand new type of writer, director, former, and even artists will be cre-1.

)ne of the reasons advanced is that duction of talking film for television necessarily be on a tremendous e; another, that in cases where playare used in place of films, the result be a new technique. Personality and wmanship will be more than ever in nand, it is said.

With regard to films now being proed, it is thought that they will be il for television production.

tterfield Says Auto Trade Reflects Upturn

)etroit, Mich.—Automobile sales are nging about an upturn in business, bees W. S. Butterfield, head of the terfield Circuit. On his return from acation on the Coast, Mr. Butterfield nd most auto factories had increased duction and that this had resulted in eneral expansion of trade.

Sound Materially Reduced Profits From U.S. Exports

That the introduction of sound has materially reduced profits in film exports to Latin America is indicated in a survey by the Commerce Department's motion picture division, which covered Mexico, Central America, and the larger West Indian Islands.

Most of the large houses in these countries are now wired, and the owners demand talking pictures in the language of the particular country. In the case of Haiti, however, where French is the language, only films in this tongue will give satisfaction. A number of Spanish versions of American films have been sent to Mexico, Cuba and the Central American countries and these have met with reasonable success. However, it is pointed out that the cost of producing these foreign-language pictures is greatly in excess of that of the former practice of retitling a silent and the margin of profit has therefore been greatly reduced, even in the case of a popular picture.

The popularity of sound is declared to be growing steadily in the countries reviewed, and each year more theatres are being wired. In 1930, exports reached over 28 million feet, which was a gain of a million feet over the previous year's figure. More than one-half of this total footage represented sound films. Mexico is the most important of the countries as an outlet for American pictures, Panama, Cuba, Porto Rico, and Guatemala following in the order named.

New Technicolor Process is Ready

Technicolor claims perfection of a new product, developed following long research. The improved print is said to possess a combination of qualities never before achieved in color photography—brilliance, smoothness and freedom from grain.

Price of Technicolor prints will be materially reduced, effective May 1. The new price will be seven cents per foot, net, on all orders of 20 or more complete Technicolor release prints from one negative where such orders are accompanied by cash in the amount of half the estimated cost of such prints.

296 Italian Theatres Now Equipped for Sound

Sound installations continue on the increase in Italian theatres. On March 1 last 296 theatres had completed installations. This is an increase of 45 over the January figures. Of the total 218 are foreign made installations, 78 American.

Boston Bans Children from Attending Sex Films

Boston—By unanimous vote of the City Council, an order was passed banning sex and crime pictures at all performances to which children are admitted to theatres within city limits.

Posters barring scenes denoting love and hate are also barred from all lobbies or billboards.

City Councillor Thomas H. Green of Charlestown fathered the order.

In it, City Censor John M. Casey is ordered to immediately close all theatres in Boston which permit children to attend the shows and which display films of sex problems or racketeering or other forms of crime.

The bill is the most drastic against theatres ever enacted by the council.

Dr. Seth F. Arnold, of the Back Bay district, was the only councillor who made any protest against the bill but he did not vote against it when time came for its passage.

Dog's Life in Pictures Is More Homey Than Humans: Renfro

Trainer of Hollywood's Talking Canines Finds "Mutts" Easier to Work with Than Thoroughbreds

Hollywood (QP)—"How to bring a dog up to be an actor" has occupied the greater part of the time of Rennie Renfro, who trains most of the canines used in Hollywood's "talking dog" productions.

Renfro has a ranch near Hollywood that he has dubbed the "dog farm," where he keeps his collection of hounds of all varieties which include Buster and Oscar, his two famous "Stars." There is not a thoroughbred among the hundred canines that he keeps on hand for his motion picture work.

Says Renfro: "I find that the 'mutt' dog is much easier to work with and will perform in a company of other dogs without becoming excited. Of course, I have the advantage of keeping my dogs in a group so that they become accustomed to each other and are able to work in greater harmony before the camera."

"The first step necessary in training dogs for pictures," says Renfro, "is to pick the smart dogs from each litter. By a smart dog, I mean one who has the necessary 'edge' on the others in general intelligence and nervous organization which will enable him to master difficult routines in training. I never pick more than two dogs from a litter for this purpose. It is possible to judge a young dog by looking into his eyes. There is a certain alert fire and gleam to the eye denoting possibilities that can be brought out by training.

"After the pup is about two months old the active training is begun. Simple little tricks such as sitting up, crawling, rolling over, etc., are taught as a foundation for more difficult stunts later on. When the dog is about six months old intensive training begins, with the ones that seem to have the most ability segregated for special handling.

"Those of my 'students' who seem to possess special ability, I enter upon a systematic course of training for picture work. This includes walking on the hind legs, opening doors, different positions and holding them, picking up designated objects, learning directions right and left, and, most important of all, the movement of the jaws in response to a hand signal.

"The most important of these tricks for the movie dog is the ability to move the mouth at a hand signal. For instance, I needed a certain type of dog to talk in 'Trader Airedale,' satire on 'Trader Horn.' We used all of the dark colored graduates of my dog school for African savages and we still needed one more who could take the part of a cannibal chief. Among the dogs who were still in the earlier stages of training I found one sufficiently dark in coloring to take the part. This dog had not been taught mouth movements, so I had to give him a very intensive course of training for several days before the production began.

"Here is what is done in such an intensive course. First the jaws are massaged to make the muscles very supple and limber. After he gets the knack of working his jaws as I massage them, it is only a short step from this to getting him to reach to the hand movement alone coupled with the command to 'speak.' The dogs not able to learn this trick of jaw movement, when required to talk in a scene, are given a piece of taffy candy. Then we get more 'talking' than we are able to use in a scene.

"My one rule in working for any picture company is absolute humane treatment for my dogs. Zion Myers and Jules White are the directors who have made most of the "Barkies" possible and they have provided every comfort for my dogs while they are working. It is absolutely necessary to keep the stage cool, as the minute the dogs begin to pant the scene has to be stopped until they cool off. In fact, 'a dog's life in the movies' is a lot more comfortable than that of the humans."

EING IS BELIEVING. Believe it or not, says Robert L. Ripley, but this ig of hair is for the purpose of enabling Mohamet to jerk this believer to radise after death. The famous hunter of oddities for cartoon and screen, shown at Marrakech, Morocco, with another curiosity for his Warner others series of shorts, "Believe It or Not."

RETURNING TO HER PUBLIC. They—her legion of followers—will never see her this way, of course, with the Warner machines and engineers of production collaborating in the process that brings her to them. But see her soon, they will, for Dolores Costello is making her first picture since her temporary retirement two years ago. The title is "Expensive Women."

BORA BORA. Lush and lazy, a mountain top barely rising out of the sea, this island of the South Sea group served Paramount for the poetic study of primitive life that is "Tabu." To F. W. Murnau its people gave up their secrets. Well may they wonder now if their gods approved.

PORTABLE THEATRE. Here is a corner of the compact "motor car theatre" that M-G-M has contrived to bring scenes of "Trader Horn" to remote communities. Lillian Bond, M-G-M featured player, is shown examining a projector.

AWAITING THE ANSWER. (Left) M. H. Hoffman, the producer of "The Mad Parade," which has a cast entirely of feminine players. Nearing completion, the production will soon have the judgment of the public as to this novel feature.

PERAMBULATING CINEMATOGRAPH. Which, in spite of the title, is nothing really astounding around a studio. However, this one at Radio has a new follow-focus arrangement designed to effect greater clarity in perambulator shots. Bill Leeds and Don Jahraus, Radio engineers, are adjusting mechanism.

TRYING CLYDE GRIFFITHS FOR MURDER. "An American Tragedy" is in the making, and here is a courtroom scene being filmed under the direction of Josef von Sternberg. The set was especially constructed for this trial, which has become a classic legal proceeding since publication of the Theodore Dreiser novel from which the photo-tragedy has been adapted. Phillips Holmes portrays Griffiths, and Sylvia Sidney is Roberta Alden.

NOVEL SHOT. Audible or not, the screen is still a pictorial medium. Here, Director William Wellman (curly hair, right, if you please) is shown taking the camera for an escalator ride in Warner Brothers' "The Public Enemy."

HE HANDLED IT. (Right) Ralph Kahn, treasurer of Paramount Publix, which as a world-wide producing, distributing and exhibiting organization turned in a net income of $18,000,000, for a period characterized by world-wide depression.

HOW IT'S DONE. The refreshing breezes of the seaside, which have their optical advantages also, agree far less with the delicate constitution of the microphone. Thus the "mike" must be well cloaked, as shown here above Norma Shearer and Leslie Howard, who are pictured between scenes of M-G-M's "A Free Soul."

WENTY YEARS OLD. Not any of these personages of the films, but an invisible being that is as real an entity as they. It is the organization they represent, Paramount, that is celebrating its twentieth birthday, at least middle-age in filmdom. Those about to enjoy a piece of the Paramount birthday cake at the studio, are Lilyan Tashman, Carole Lombard, George Bancroft, Ruth Chatterton, Clive Brook and Fay Wray.

BEHIND THE SCENES. Resting . . . perhaps reflecting on it all with that special clarity that comes to us when we withdraw to one side merely to watch . . . At any rate, here Joan Crawford seriously watches other M-G-M folk at work, making "Girls Together," a comedy.

DEAR HERALD:

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Potter, who operate the Fireman's theatre at New Hampton, want us to remember them to George Schutz of the HERALD staff. They directed us to do this at a Dutch lunch at their home today, and when we say "Dutch lunch" we know George will be sore because he was not there also, and we like to get George sore. They remember his preference for Dutch lunches at Detroit Lakes a couple of years ago. Here is where we put one over on George. We've been waiting a long time to get even with that guy. Our joy would be complete if George knew just what kind of a lunch we had with him not present, and when we get up to Detroit Lakes this summer we will have another one with Andy Anderson and we will write George about that, too.

Congratulations to Palmer

L. E. Palmer of Postville has recently opened about as fine a theatre as we have ever seen in a town of that size. The town has a population of eleven hundred and this theatre is equipped with Western Electric sound equipment, and that is a very unusual thing in towns the size of Postville.

The list of coming attractions for this theatre indicates that Mr. Palmer knows the show business and how to select entertainment for his customers. Postville will undoubtedly take pride in supporting this enterprise.

Speaking of Two Comedies

"CRACKED NUTS" with Wheeler & Wolsey. This one was no doubt intended for a comedy but we missed the intent and went to sleep on it. It is composed of a few shots of this, that and the other thing put together into a six or seven-reel feature and sold without regard to merit. Some of their jokes were in general use "before the white man came." Adam tried a few on Eve and she threw a winesap at him. Some time ago we made the statement that we thought pictures were getting better. We want to apologize for making that statement.

"WHOOPEE" with Eddie Cantor. This picture draws exceedingly well at the box offices wherever we have been, and maybe that's the way to measure the value of a picture. It is largely a musical comedy show in technicolor with Eddie Cantor doing most of the hard work to carry it over, and our judgment is that with Eddie left out of it it wouldn't amount to a whole lot, but we've been told a lot of times that our judgment is not very reliable, and we admit that without argument, and that makes it unanimous.

The Little Brown Church

Today we visited the church made nationally famous by Dr. Pitts by his song, "THE LITTLE BROWN CHURCH IN THE VALE." This church is located two miles out from Nashua, Iowa, and is situated in a clump of evergreens near the bank of a lake. It is the mecca of the lovelorn and 745 marriages were performed in this church last year and the numbers are increasing yearly. They come from the Atlantic and the Pacific, from Canada and Cuba to stick their necks under the yoke. If this church was located in Hollywood it would be a tremendous feeder for Reno, and Reno could well afford to contribute liberally to its support. June is the month when "The Young Man's Fancy Lightly Turns To Love," and during this month, the Rev. Kent, pastor of the church told us, he was kept pretty busy, performing as high as twenty-five marriage ceremonies a day. Say, if that pastor has to kiss all the brides we'll trade jobs with him and pay him some to boot. It's a wonder he don't get the croup and tonsillitis, we've had both of 'em and are immune.

On Present Quality of Films

Manchester, Iowa.

We all make mistakes, and when we do we should acknowledge our error, and that's what we are going to do. Some months ago we made the statement that in our judgment the pictures were getting better and better all the while, but that's when they were giving us "DISRAELI," "COMMON CLAY," "THEY HAD TO SEE PARIS," "THE RAINBOW MAN," "SUNNYSIDE UP," "UP THE RIVER," "ON HER BACK," "HOLD EVERYTHING" and pictures of that type, but now we are forced to correct that statement.

It may, or it may not, be of interest to the producers to know that the universal opinion of theatremen, outside of the large cities, is that the falling off in theatre attendance is due only in part to the general depression, and rather is due largely to the class of service they are required to run. Illustrative of this, last night we attended a theatre that was playing "JUST IMAGINE" and it drew a capacity house on its third night showing. Had this been one of the general run of pictures that they are required to play the chances are it wouldn't have drawn expenses.

Not only is there a universal complaint of the quality of the pictures they are required to run, but a constant protest against many of the titles, such as "ILLICIT," "HER WEDDING NIGHT," "STRANGERS MAY KISS," "THE ROYAL BED," "WOMAN HUNGRY" and many more, some of which are even less senseless than those, any of which will have about the same drawing power at the box office that a smallpox sign would. Across the street in front of a theatre we notice this banner, "THE DOORWAY TO HELL," and yet the producers no doubt think that this title will draw people into the theatre. The picture may be all right, we don't know, as we haven't seen it, but the title IS ALL WRONG—and yet we wonder why ministers preach against the theatre. The wonder is that some title writers have escaped the squirrels as long as they have, and if the wives of some of them could get steady employment they ought to be able to pull the boys through until huckleberry time.

Since the "CODE OF ETHICS" is supposed to have taken a lot of the spots out of the linen it might be well for it to try the titles a while, but it will require something stronger than ammonia, an anesthetic won't do, the business has been anesthetized too long already.

Shooting at the Moon?

Some people may think we are "shooting at the moon" and maybe we are. We used to stand out in the marsh on Beaver Lake in Indiana on moonlight nights and shoot ducks. When they crossed between us and the moon, we always shot right toward the moon, but we came home many a night with all the ducks we could carry. If having traveled the extent of country we have traveled, and having interviewed thousands of theatre men on these subjects, and having stood in front of hundreds of theatres and seen people turn away from the box office after reading some of the titles, has not qualified us to speak with knowledge on these matters, then the good Lord failed to supply our gourd with the proper amount of gray matter, and we will not admit that without an argument.

Some pictures are not as bad as the titles indicate, but the public don't know that, and that's why they stay away. And then again, some are worse, if that could be possible, and that's why lots of theatre men are glad they stayed away. If a theatre man loses the respect of the people of his community he might as well lock his theatre up; that's why he is fighting for clean pictures. There are still people in this business who have a regard for decency and morality, and they are the backbone of the industry, don't forget that. This may be considered pretty plain talk, but this is a plain typewriter and we were educated in a school where the instructors didn't stutter and we never acquired the habit, so that's that, and you can shoot both barrels at us if you want to, but be sure it is loaded and you take good aim.

Hey there, you Wisconsin badgers, we are headed your way. Better examine the contents of the icebox.

LOOKING FORWARD

By WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON

Looking backward 20 years!

A long time—in motion picture history, as Terry Ramsaye tells you, in his morable work, "A Million Nights," with page upon many pages of unique man endeavor.

Early in 1913, I recall vividly, a urdy person with a big idea, clearly visioned in his eyes alone, that of king motion pictures a vehicle of all amatic art.

This person was Adolph Zukor. vo years earlier you might have ssed him, somewhere between 14th eet and Times Square, New York, rying under his arm some old-style s containing the reels of the mem- ble picture, Sarah Bernhardt's ueen Elizabeth."

1911-1931

We look forward!

This year, Paramount Publix is pre- ting Adolph Zukor with a 20 years ilee. About time, one would say. t we are, all of us, practically inter- ed in the offering, tendered by Jesse Lasky, chief of production, and his es, B. P. Schulberg of the Western Walter Wanger of the Eastern, dios, and by Robert Kane of Paramount Studios of Joinville, nce.

Quite an expansion from Four- nth street, New York.

Quite a change from three cans of n.

Here's the output of 1931, from this ntry alone:

Upwards of 70 feature pictures. e hundred and four reels of news . One hundred one-reel pictures. rty-two two-reel pictures. That— see—is a total of over 700 reels ilm, to be ready on release date for e many thousands of theatres and e many millions of people.

ll out of an idea and three cans of s!

Times have greatly changed. This lium that was foresighted to en- pass the drama, in all its modes xpression, has done just that seem- y impossible thing. We find the ing motion picture attracting today world's people, high and low, class masses, read and unread.

o meet this widespread and varied ience appeal—that, B. P. Schul- tells me, is the keynote of the re program of Paramount this . He goes so far as to say that sum total of feature pictures en- passes all the audience appeal les- learned by Paramount in 20 years roduction effort.

s instances of the wider audience al he cites the juvenile pictures de- ed distinctly as well for the grown- and so well introduced by the box e successes of "Tom Sawyer" and ippy," to which will be added: ckleberry Finn," "Tom Sawyer, ctive," and "Sooky"; also the ter concentration upon woman's e in the World War, as instanced Stepdaughters of War" and "Fare- to Arms."

here will be many stellar casts, as Maurice Chevalier supported Claudette Colbert; Miriam Hop- and Charles Ruggles in "The ing Lieutenant"; Louis Brom- field's "Twenty-four Hours" with Clive Brook, Kay Francis, Eugene Pallette and Regis Toomey.

Among nearly 50 features definitely outlined in the announcement we find, for story material, eight stage plays, 14 novels and the balance originals.

"The tendency," says B. P. Schulberg, "is strongly toward original stories. The picture, in its new cloak as a talking picture is, like the stage itself and like the publishing business, looking for unproduced material.

"In fact, you can go further and say that picture production is now preceding, instead of following, the stage, and it already would appear that the stage from now on will, to a considerable degree, base its plays on screen successes; probably, also, the book publishers to a larger degree."

This important point is also made by Mr. Schulberg: "We have never before started a new year," he stated, "with so many stories concretely in hand. Formerly we only planned a percentage of them. Now we have them, and also we have a more definite policy. The new machinery of talking picture production is moving much more smoothly, due principally to the fact that time has worked out successful writer-director units."

The three great ingredients of pictures are stories, players, directors.

The Zukor Credo

ADOLPH ZUKOR

Better pictures, vigorous showmanship and aggressive advertising are the three basic principles behind Paramount's plans for the 1931-32 season, according to Adolph Zukor, who has been the guiding genius of a company that is now celebrating its twentieth birthday jubilee.

"There never has been a substitute for good pictures in our business," said Mr. Zukor, "and this is just as true today as it was 20 years ago. To this end we have concentrated all our world-wide production forces. They have been told to go the limit in bringing stories to the screen that will have the maximum in entertainment value. Our program of pictures for next season has been carefully worked out. We have studied the trend of the times and sincerely believe that we have the variety in production, stories and casts that will give exhibitors everywhere just the pictures they need for big grosses.

"But this is only the beginning. After we have the pictures there must be vigorous showmanship. These pictures must be presented to the public in the most advantageous manner. Our own theatre department already has made its plans along these lines and our company is preparing a campaign of publicity and advertising that will give every exhibitor who plays Paramount pictures the opportunity to realize on their popularity."

In calling attention to the aggressive advertising campaign, Mr. Zukor pointed out that in the coming season Paramount will continue more strongly than ever consistent national advertising. National magazines, fan magazines, trade papers and newspapers will be used in carrying out this part of the company's advertising plans. Augmenting this there will be newspaper advertising of a national scope.

JESSE L. LASKY

Increasing Popularity in "Kid" Pictures

Return of Musicals

Burial of Silents — without music

Better Balance of Dialogue and Pantomime

FORECASTS FOR 1931-32

By JESSE L. LASKY

Based on his past experience and his present intimate contacts with the show world of the screen, a forward-looking analysis of current and future developments in talking pictures is presented herewith by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president in charge of production for Paramount, who will supervise the making of the feature pictures which his company has outlined to commemorate the Twentieth Jubilee of its president, Adolph Zukor.

Main points in Mr. Lasky's diagnosis of film tendencies include the following:

A movement away from sophistication, with the raising of "kid" pictures to a new high level of popularity.

The slow but sure return of music to the screen.

The complete burial of the silent picture, except when used with music.

A better balance of dialogue and pantomime in talking pictures.

The value of newspaper work as a training for screen writing.

The greater difficulty of newcomers in launching screen careers nowadays, compared with earlier times.

Lasky, predicting that "Skippy" will be one of the year's biggest successes, says this Paramount picture and "Tom Sawyer" point the way to the kind of entertainment that the American public always is ready for in every period, in every generation.

"We have been passing through an age of real sophistication and, naturally, we have been influenced by that type of material," he continued. "'Skippy,' 'Tom Sawyer' and other pictures which appeal to everybody from 8 to 80 years of age are definite evidence of a real departure from this sophisticated trend. There is a lot of truth to the phrase, 'When you reach the heart of a child, you reach the heart of a nation.' Going back to the classics, such as 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' and 'The Prince and the Pauper,' you will find that the stories which had the theme of youth always had a very wide sale and always had an appeal to adults. I think that the success of the so-called 'kid' pictures will depend upon rather modern material, like 'Skippy,' or material that still is in tune with our thoughts of today, such as Mark Twain's stories. Children of today and parents want material showing the small to American background, and epics of cl dren of the streets or slums of big citie

A gradual but inevitable return music to the screen is predicted Lasky. He believes the future will br a sprinkling of operettas, a reasona number of musical comedies, and d matic pictures with backgrounds of f symphony orchestras.

Citing the public attitude tow musical comedies, he contends that p ture audiences were given somethi before they were prepared for it.

"There is merely a need of a little m skillful technique and a better und standing on the part of the public," plained Lasky. "The public was not p pared for the license of the musi comedy. For years we had trained

CHILDREN

The reception of "Tom Sawyer" and the second juvenile picture, "Skippy," has led Paramount to plan an even greater devotion to pictures with youthful casts for its 1931-32 program. Childhood pictures promise to be one of the outstanding developments of the coming season on the screen, as they were one of the salient features of the past season.

The first two pictures of this vogue demonstrated two facts. First, they showed that it was possible to bring the children into the theatres in such large numbers that street traffic was blocked. With the coming of sound, children were supposed by the gloomier wiseacres to have been estranged from picturegoing. "Tom Sawyer" and "Skippy" drew such throngs of little ones as to disprove the view that the audible screen wasn't attractive to youngsters, and revealed them as a large potential field of future film devotees. In New York, "Tom Sawyer" was a triumph, and "Skippy" was held over for two weeks—an unusual tribute at the big Paramount theatre on Broadway, which ordinarily houses so many patrons that it can exhaust the usual large draw in a week. Grown-ups became just as eager to view these pictures as the boys and girls.

These two pictures, according to Paramount executives, indicated that there is a fertile source of new talent among the gifted youngsters who can now find a place on the screen. But for the coming of sound, they might have failed to achieve their place in the sun-arcs. "Tom Sawyer" brought back Jackie Coogan after an absence of several years from the screen, and enabled film fans to enjoy his ingratiating, unassuming personality while it still possessed the freshness of youth.

The company has done the same thing with his younger brother, Robert, who made his screen debut in "Skippy," in the role of Sooky, the tatterdemalion little pal of Percy Crosby's beloved boy rog

"Skippy" also focused general att tion on another young player, Jac Cooper. Then there were Mitzi Gre and Jackie Searl, who duplicated t praiseworthy work they did in "T Sawyer" by their performances in "Sk py." These two children were the first be placed under contract. Junior Durk was another who acquitted himself w in these endeavors, playing Huckleber Finn in "Tom Sawyer."

"Huckleberry Finn," "Tom Sawy Detective," and "Sooky," with the sa cast as in "Skippy," are juvenile pictu scheduled for the new season.

A careful survey of exhibitor needs s made before Paramount's program its Twentieth Jubilee Celebration was lined, he said. Strong stories with ong box office titles were selected by committee of showmanship minds in Paramount organization. Changes public taste—the drifting away from gster stories and the tendency toward stery thrillers—were taken into con- eration, he said, and a flexible policy production which would allow the npany plenty of leeway in meeting se changes again was adopted. eater variety in type of picture with cial emphasis on "down to earth" ality, and all star casts for many of pictures, were planned. In fact, every picture on new schedule had to pass the box ce test before it was considered.

We sincerely believe that our 1931-32 gram, from the standpoint of quality l box office, is the strongest line up of tures Paramount has ever offered," . Kent declared.

prospectus of the new product fol- s:

The salient feature of the program de- signed to commemorate the Twentieth Jubilee of Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix Corporation, is that it is based on indications that the screen is working away from sophistication.

In the array of new pictures the aggregate, it is pointed out, shows a decided leaning toward the wholesome, sane type of picture, diverging from the hectic, over-sexed style of production. Scanning the wide range of pictures to be made under the supervision of Jesse L. Lasky, one notes the fact that gangster pictures are conspicuous by their absence, due to accumulating evidence, Paramount executives say, that the public is fed up on this type.

As an important and integral part of this movement toward a clean type of production, Paramount is aiming, according to its officials, to produce more children's pictures than ever this season. The company this past season demonstrated what a widespread appeal there was for pictures of the type of "Tom Sawyer" and "Skippy." Next season the company aims to make three such pictures with the same tots in the new casts. Mark Twain, who wrote "Tom Sawyer," again will be depended upon for "Huckleberry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer, Detective," while Percy Crosby, who provided the basis for "Skippy," will be represented again in the story of Skippy's pal, "Sooky." Paramount already has tentative plans for further entertainment along this same line.

In place of the underworld pictures, Paramount is pinning its faith to mystery stories, such as "Murder by the Clock" and "Daughter of the Dragon."

It will be the company's intention, emphasized Kent, to present the problems of everyday people and the backgrounds familiar to the masses of filmgoers; while particular viewpoints—the sidelights of life that appeal primarily to the different tastes of the sophisticated—will not predominate in the new lineup.

This "down to earth" quality is illustrated in "An American Tragedy" and "Manhandled," Clara Bow's forthcoming production—dealing with people we all know. The outlook of democracy will also be considered. In Maurice Chevalier's new picture, "The Smiling Lieutenant," instead of making a production that is all about royalty, the role played by Chevalier is that of a young officer without rank, while Claudette Colbert plays a girl of the people.

All this makes for recognition of more native American types, for greater interest in suburban and small town life, according to Paramount executives, which is expected to come in for more screen acknowledgement with the swing in public taste.

While a majority of the pictures have already been decided upon, some releases have been left tentatively indeterminate. This is to meet whatever changes in popular taste may arise, providing an elasticity and greater responsiveness to public appeal.

Following are the productions already picked:

Harold Lloyd in a new type of talking comedy, on which he is now working with two nationally known playwrights.

"Indiscretion," starring Marlene Dietrich in a drama of woman's wiles. Directed by Josef von Sternberg, who was responsible for discovering the European beauty and who guided her through "Dishonored," "Morocco" and "The Blue Angel."

Another Marlene Dietrich picture, details of which will be announced later.

"The Smiling Lieutenant," starring Maurice Chevalier and featuring Claudette Colbert, Miriam Hopkins and Charlie Ruggles. Directed by Ernst Lubitsch. From a story by Ernest Vajda and Samson Raphaelson, based on a novel of Vienna by Hans Muller and depicting the romantic struggle for a young officer's love between a princess and a girl violinist. Several songs are introduced.

Another picture as yet untitled, starring Chevalier with Eleanor Boardman featured. Directed by H. D'Abbadie D'Arrast. Adapted by D'Arrast and Donald Ogden Stewart from a Parisian play by Marcel Achard entitled "La Vie Est Belle," in which a street rover has a romance with an aristocratic girl through finding a ring.

Another Chevalier picture, details of which will be made known later.

"Rich Man's Folly," starring George Bancroft in a characteristic story of an aggressive figure of the financial world. Directed by John Cromwell. Written by Oliver H. P. Garrett.

"Personal Maid," starring Nancy Carroll in a story based on a book by Grace Perkins, which deals with an ambitious girl who seeks to learn the deportment of society by taking a position as lady's maid, and then uses a sum of money to pose for a brief fling as a society debutante.

"Wild Beauty," another Nancy Carroll vehicle, based on a book by Mateel Howe Farnum, which deals with a girl who is eager for life and marriage but who is careless in looking after her baby daughter, till the child is taken away from her and the young mother learns how to win her back in a struggle with her prejudiced mother-in-law.

Two other Carroll vehicles.

"Stepdaughters of War," starring Ruth Chatterton and based on the novel by Helen Zonna Smith which was dramatized by Kenyon Nicholson. Revealing the privations of the woman ambulance drivers in the war.

"Tomorrow and Tomorrow," starring Ruth Chatterton in a talking version of the drama by Phillip Barry which has been one of the noteworthy hits of the Broadway stage season, revealing the poignant situation of a married woman who is forced to call upon the lover of her earlier days to come and save her stricken son with his surgical skill.

"An American Tragedy," Josef von Sternberg's production from Theodore Dreiser's novel, with a cast in which Phillips Holmes, Sylvia Sidney and Frances Dee play the featured roles. Von

STUDIOS

Located at Four Strategic Points

Paramount now has four big studio enterprises located at strategic points throughout America and Europe. In addition to its Hollywood and New York plants, Paramount has a studio at Paris, which has several multilingual productions to its credit, and the company has just started a London branch of which much is expected.

The wide range of pictures being made at these four studios has been chosen to commemorate the Twentieth Jubilee Celebration in honor of Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix Corporation, who launched his production career two decades ago with the presentation of Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth."

While activities in New York and abroad are expanding, Hollywood still remains the major producing center of Paramount pictures. The main portion of the company's product for the coming season will be made in this huge 27-acre plant, which is the monumental outgrowth of the small Lasky barn that was the nucleus of the original Hollywood productions by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president in charge of production, and that is now so dwarfed by the large studio buildings around that it serves as the studio gymnasium.

Here, under B. P. Schulberg, managing director of West Coast production, outdoor as well as indoor productions are turned out. The studio contains 14 sound stages, equipped with the latest systems for taking audible pictures, including the newest advance, the Western Electric system of noiseless recording, which enables the voice reproduction to assume a selective aspect, that reflects its true quality and also shuts out any distracting minor noises.

Of the 63 productions which Paramount will have presented by the end of the film year on August 1, 46 of this number go to the credit of the Hollywood studio. These are due to the artistic efforts of 10 stars, 32 featured players, 25 directors and 40 writers. They are aided by 1,972 regular employes, comprising a majority of the professions in the world.

This great body of artisans is housed in 37 buildings which shelter 70 separate departments. An idea of the extensive nature of the Hollywood organization

TALENT Diversified

Through its recent signing of 10 popular Broadway stage players, Paramount has strengthened its large and diversified array of acting talent. While the precise number of players under the Paramount banner fluctuates from month to month, the general number is 70.

"It is Paramount's definite policy," said one production executive, "to keep the regular roster of players constantly fortified with new blood. While a nucleus of seasoned players is always maintained, the general lineup is constantly being freshened with ambitious youngsters. A glance at the Paramount lineup shows that unless their acting worth entitles them to it, no players are carried along for a period of years when they have long since ceased to appeal to the public. The personnel of players who formed the Paramount alignment prior to the recent acquisition of the 10 new players includes the following:

"Richard Arlen, George Bancroft, Tallulah Bankhead, Clara Bow, Nancy Carroll, Ruth Chatterton, Maurice Chevalier, Claudette Colbert, Gary Cooper, Marlene Dietrich, Four Marx Brothers, Fredric March, Jack Oakie, Charles Rogers.

"Jean Arthur, Carman Barnes, Eleanor Boardman, William Boyd, Mary Brian, Clive Brook, Juliette Compton, Jackie Coogan, Robert Coogan, Frances Dee, Claire Dodd, Tom Hughes, Stuart Erwin, Norman Foster, Kay Francis.

SCHULBERG
His Production Policies

The world wants to believe in Cinderellas and not in the gold diggers of Broadway. Such is the opinion of B. P. Schulberg, managing director of West Coast production for Paramount.

"The most successful type of talking picture is that which is wholly away from sophistication," Schulberg asserts. "The old type of post-war thought, which found its life in sex and frankness, is dying.

"For some time, mankind has known that such stories are out of step but citizens have been afraid to admit it. Today they are not.

"Because pseudo-sophistication has always effected the very life of the world when permitted to grow, it cannot survive in entertainment.

"Whenever the world has altered its mode of story-telling for a worse form, it is the cause or the effect of retrogression in every walk of life. Whether this comes from moral laxity or causes it, the style is ultimately doomed.

There is something sane and sound in humans which make us hurry back to the established type of entertainment before any great damage is done. That is the situation today.

"Humanity is as healthy as its entertainment—drama, literature, art. Nations cannot exist in a state of preservation without conventions; stories which dis-

Paramount Sound News, with, according to Emanuel Cohen, scoops on many outstanding world events to its credit within the last 15 months, has now geared its world-wide organization to maintain a rapid pace for the season of 1931-32.

Plans for exclusive pictures of Sir Hubert Wilkins' submarine trip under the North Pole and of Ruth Nichols' proposed trans-Atlantic flight now are under way, according to Cohen, who is director of short subjects and editor of the newsreel.

"Sir Hubert has just signed a contract under the terms of which a Paramount cameraman, John Dored, will journey from London to Spitzburgen to connect with his undersea boat," Cohen explained. "After making appropriate preliminary shots the cameraman will turn over his apparatus to the submarine crew which will make exclusive pictures on the dash to the pole.

"Miss Nichols will take off for Europe at a date to be determined later and Paramount will make exclusive shots of the flight," he added.

Of the beats claimed by Cohen several were scored in the first three months of 1931. They included: The Nicaraguan earthquake; the wreck of the steamer Viking off New Foundland, of the New Zealand earthquake, the death of Knute Rockne and the abdication of King Alfonso of Spain.

The scoops claimed for last year were scored on the Santo Domingo hurricane, Admiral Byrd's return to civilization from the South Pole, the seizure of his throne by King Carol of Rumania, the discovery of the Andree Expedition, the sinking of the steamer Tahiti, Army pilots blanketing New York City with a smoke screen and the inauguration and attempted assassination of President Rubio of Mexico.

"This amazing record indicates the growth in importance of the newsreel," Cohen went on. "A dozen years ago newsreels were used as 'chasers' to clear a theatre. Today they have completely come into their own as a basic part of the balanced theatre program. America has grown more and more picture conscious and now the people from the president down to the school child, insist on seeing their news in picture form.

"The result is that every big producing company has had to start its own newsreel. News picture scoops, the dramatic rivalry between the different reels, the proverbial daring and enterprise of the newsreel cameramen all have become a matter of pride for the parent companies.

"The organization we use is similar to that of the big newspaper press associations with their thousands of newspaper

Screen Song and Bimbo to Continue

Max Fleischer
Producer of the "Screen Song"

The bouncing ball, which makes a bashful motion picture audience forget its inhibitions and burst into song, will continue merrily on its way this season, according to Max Fleischer, who originated the idea and uses it in the novelty, the Paramount Screen Song.

Eighteen of these screen songs will be distributed by Paramount on its 1931-32 program. They will feature up-to-date musical hits.

Nor will Bimbo, who stars in Paramount's Talkartoons be forgotten. The daredevil hero will participate in 18 more harum-scarum adventures during the new season.

To provide space for Bimbo to do his stuff the Fleischer studio has been enlarged. For many months the staff had been working day and night to keep abreast of production. Additional floor space at 1600 Broadway, the present abode of Bimbo, has been leased. Besides adding to the art staff, more room has been given to the research department where more extensive experiments with the Fleischer method for the production of Synthetic Sound will be carried out. The object of this research is to perfect a method of creating original sound where none exists, by means of drawings.

At present more than 100 artists and 100 musicians, technicians and mechanics are engaged in bringing Bimbo and other Talkartoon and Screen Song characters to life.

The process of Bimbo's creation and emergence from the drawing board is said to rival in interest his impossible exploits on the screen. Again and again Fleischer has been asked how the trick is done and has obligingly shown hundreds of visitors the trick. Invariably their parting remark has been:

"Yes, we understand the new system now, but what we don't comprehend is how you manage to produce an animated cartoon every week. One a year would seem a lot of work to us."

From birth to his emergence as a capering sta Bimbo goes through almost countless metamo phoses.

Millions of tiny pencil scratches drawn by a artist who is known technically as an animat make a vague outline of his shape and wake hi into consciousness. Inking artists then trace the drawings on celluloid and others known as opaque color his wardrobe and makeup.

After being photographed by a highly specia ized motion picture camera Bimbo, now seeming alive on the screen, is given a voice by means a synchronizing process and goes off on his happ go-lucky journeys about the world.

Altogether his 6 minute act requires about 8,0 drawings and many weeks of labor in preparin stories worthy of such a super-man and in com bining all these details into a convincing whol

LARRY KENT ANNOUNCES SHORT PROGRAM

Up-to-Minute Slapstick in Paramount Comedies

Up-to-the-minute slapstick will have a large part in Paramount's one and two reel production schedule for the 1931-32 season, according to Larry Kent, head of the short subject production department.

Four big names in the comedy field — Karl Dane, George K. Arthur, Ford Sterling and Al St. John — have been signed to make 12 slapstick two reels. All of these will be treated in a modern manner with custard pies going into the discard in favor of airplane propellors, trans-Atlantic flights, etc. Al Ray has been employed to put these comics through their paces.

"The short subject will also join in the campaign to bring children back to the theatres by screening a number of comedies featuring juvenile actors," Mr. Kent said. "On the other hand there will be only a small percentage of musicals produced this year.

"The program was adopted after an exhaustive survey of the exhibition field," he added, "and the choice of vehicles and stellar players was guided by the results of a recent field survey which furnished an authoratative checkup on the popularity of various types of stories and of both individuals and teams. Most of the names scheduled for the coming year appeared on last season's roster and their continued presence is in direct response to public demand.

"The complete short subject program will include 52 one reel pictures, 32 two reelers, to be made at the Paramount New York studio and 18 screen songs, 18 Paramount Talkartoons and 12 Paramount Pictorials.

"In addition to the four comedians already mentioned, Charlie Ruggles, Lulu McConnell, Smith & Dale and Billy House will appear in two reel comedies.

"In the one reel musical group will be Ethel Merman, Lillian Roth, and the Haige Children's Trio, George Dewey Washington, Eddie Younger and his Mountaineers and Anna Chang with Pickard's Syncopators. These musicals will comprise approximately 25 per cent of the one reel group.

"The remaining 75 per cent of the one reelers will be comedies starring such personalities as Burns & Allen, Tom Howard, Solly Ward, Ben Blue,

"To keep pace with our news coverage, we have had likewise to develop a special high speed system for makeup, cutting, laboratory operations and print distribution. The editorial handling of news film once it reaches New York is similar in speed, accuracy and routine to that of a newspaper office. We jam the film through our laboratory and get our prints out at a speed the ordinary laboratory would consider impossible. We are constantly readjusting our routine to save precious minutes, and perfecting our equipment to gain a little time here or there. Added up, these minutes count at times with a lead in the theatres.

"At the present time we cover in sound every story that it was ever possible to cover in silent films. We get through with our sound outfits in spite of their weight and their two-man crew under the same circumstances we would have gotten through in the silent days.

"We have lost nothing in the matter of speed and thoroughness of coverage. Sound has simply added to the interest possibilities of our news system.

"In much the same way we tackled the problem of European expansion. The experience of the press associations has taught us the interest value of the local news locally distributed. In the past we had released regional picture editions and knew their pulling power, so we tackled Europe as just another location for regular regional releases. We did not start separate organizations for each country. We simply amplified our regular operations and took on the European editions as a single step in our regular growth. The immediate success of our operations abroad proves, I believe, that we are on the right track. We have one growing news organization for gathering and distributing news pictures and not a series of decentralized semi-independent units."

Music Is Staging Comeback, States Jesse L. Lasky

public to realism. The stage naturally had a dramatic license which was impossible in pictures. Audiences could not get used to music coming from nowhere on the screen. Nevertheless, musical comedies will come back and the public will become accustomed to that form of entertainment. In the next two or three years they will have forgotten that there ever was any question about musical comedies, which will be built around outstanding personalities like Maurice Chevalier."

Discussing cycles in pictures, Lasky cited the costume story, which he said has been taboo almost since "The Birth of a Nation," yet he called attention to the fact there has been a successful one produced yearly.

"The point is, the public will not stand for too many of them," he stated. "There is a place on the public's entertainment fare for an occasional costume picture, just as there is for an occasional one with an unhappy ending. There are no set rules in the show world, and if there were, the public would smash them as soon as it tired of this or that type of entertainment."

Mr. Lasky paid a tribute to the newspaper profession as a training school for screen writers, declaring that journalism has supplied men and women to the writing staffs right from the very beginning of the Paramount Publix Corporation.

The public is always anxious to see new faces on the screen, but pictures that make stars out of unknowns overnight are few and far between, according to the executive, who credits Marlene Dietrich and Maurice Chevalier with the most meteoric leaps to fame in the history of the industry.

Personalities come first with the public in most cases in judging entertainment, a condition that has persisted since the first stars came in vogue during the early days of the industry, and there never will be a change in this respect, Lasky believes.

"With this fact in mind, we are now building the largest star list in the history of Paramount," he said. "We were the first company to establish a stock company."

Revealing that direction now inclines toward only necessary dialogue and more pantomime, Lasky added that in his opinion it is ridiculous to even discuss the possibility of the silent picture coming back. He unqualifiedly buries the silent picture forever, except when used with music, and he says that synchronized scores are essential the whole way through such pictures.

"'Morocco' was the first example of the new technique of combining real pantomimic characterization and a minimum of dialogue, and the public and the critics responded to it."

Alert Showmanship

SAM KATZ

Never before in the history of the motion picture industry has the exhibitor been required to be so alert in detecting the trends of public taste in entertainment as at the present moment, according to Sam Katz, vice president in charge of theatre operations for Paramount Publix.

"The utmost care in laying out programs of entertainment and the exercising of the highest ingenuity in advertising are only a part of the present day requirements of real showmanship," he said. "However, having sat in on the preparation of Paramount's 20th Birthday Program from the start and having analyzed the product carefully from a theatre box office angle, I can truthfully say that these productions, in my opinion, present the greatest opportunity for theatre profits that has ever been offered to exhibitors."

"Miriam Hopkins, Helen Johnson, Carole Lombard, Paul Lukas, Cyril Maude, Sylvia Sidney, Charles Starrett, Lilyan Tashman, Regis Toomey, Anna May Wong, Fay Wray.

"The 10 new players include Raymond Guion, who became favorably known through his work as the leading juvenile in 'Young Sinners'; Peggy Shannon, who won high praise from the critics when she opened opposite Ernest Truex recently in 'Napi'; Tamara Geva, exotic dancer who has received high plaudits for her work in 'Three's a Crowd'; Allen Vincent, now lending charm to 'The Vinegar Tree'; Dorothy Tree, who created the sister role in 'Holiday' on the stage with Hope Williams; Vivienne Osborn, who has twinkled fascinatingly in leading roles in 'Scaramouche,' 'Fog,' 'The Whirlwind' and 'The Three Musketeers'; Lenitia Lane, now appearing in the revival of 'Six Characters in Search of An Author'; Charles Trowbridge, who won acclaim for his work in the role of the husband in 'Craig's Wife'; George Kelly's Pulitzer prize play, and who recently appeared with Alice Brady in 'The Boundary Line'; Charles D. Brown, creator of the role of the stage manager in 'Burlesque,' who played opposite Nancy Carroll and Hal Skelly in the screen version of that stage success, 'The Dance of Life,' and Frances Moffat, hailed as one of the most promising finds of the current stage season.

"In addition to these there are various stage celebrities who are used for prominent roles in pictures at the Paramount New York studios from time to time, though not regularly under contract to the company.

"Such luminaries include players like Mary Boland, Phoebe Foster, Alison Skipworth, Herbert Marshall, Alexander Kirkland, Hugh O'Connell and Osgood Perkins. They bring the roster of stellar talent working for Paramount to 70.

"It can be seen that of the total register of Paramount talent, about 70 per cent are youthful—still in their twenties. Many of them, in fact, are just around the age of majority, while youngsters like Jackie Coogan, Robert Coogan, Mitzi Green and Jackie Searl help to bring the average age closer to the 'teens period."

Four Studios Now Make Paramount Films for World

may be gathered from the fact that it has a telephone system of 350 stations, necessitating a private telephone directory of 40 pages. The large size of the plant also requires the maintenance of a special fire department, with a chemical engine and a trained crew.

In addition there are immense carpenter and paint shops, garages, dressing rooms, hospital, foundry, hothouses, furniture and property department on a vast scale, drapery section, barber and hairdressing shops, plaster shop, projection rooms, electrical and plumbing departments, printing plant and a complete armory—not forgetting the studio's own lighting, heating and ventilating systems.

In conjunction with the studio proper is the company's ranch, consisting of 2,769 acres that lie 30 miles north of Hollywood and that permit of the filming of exterior scenes of all types. Another adjunct of the studio is the laboratory, with a capacity of more than 2,000,000 feet of release prints a week.

Another hive of industry is the New York studio, in charge of Walter Wanger. This plant, located at Astoria, has 12 of last season's product, and all of the short subjects produced by Paramount to its credit. Indications are that in the coming program of pictures it will have increased scope. The studio, which stretches across two city blocks currently holds five stars, three featured players, seven directors and 11 writers, besides 553 employes in the various technical branches.

They occupy a honeycomb of executive offices, rehearsal and dressing rooms, sound and color laboratories, carpenter shop, furniture and property department, electrical department, drapery division and projection rooms, and are served by a restaurant in the main building capable of feeding 450 persons during the luncheon period. There are six sound stages, consisting of one mammoth stage on the main floor, capable of holding more than 1,000 persons, and five smaller stages of varying sizes. Across the street is the Paramount laboratory, one of the largest and most modern of its kind in the world, capable of handling more than 1,000,000 feet of film a day. It develops and prints all productions at the studio, as well as foreign department laboratory work, and also finishes a considerable part of the release print-making for Hollywood productions.

As in the case of the Hollywood studio, the New York studio has made a number of foreign language productions during the past year, the Astoria output consisting principally of French versions made possible by the engagement of bilingual casts. The preponderance of foreign language films, however, has been produced by the studio at Joinville, on the outskirts of Paris.

This enterprise is now celebrating its first anniversary at the same time that the parent organization is commemorating its Twentieth Jubilee. Encouraged by its initial success, the plant under the supervision of Robert T. Kane, general manager of European productions for Paramount, is now going forward with a program of enlarged scope.

During the last year the studios were not only built and equipped, but more than 150 films were produced in 14 languages. The productions during the last 12 months represented nearly 100 features and the remainder short subjec

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Making Money By Saving!

SIMPLE mathematics will clearly demonstrate that if you can cut your present overhead without hurting your receipts, your theatre will be showing a larger profit.

So much has been said about building up business that no one ill miss the topic if it is dispensed with for a short time. Therefore, let us dwell, for a little while, on the angle of saving money nd thereby making money.

Just what portion of your theatre's expenses are you responsible or? Rent? No! Cost of films? No! Taxes and insurance? No! Salaries? Yes! Electric light and power consumption? Yes! ewspaper advertising? Yes! Supplies? Yes! And so on right own the line of every item coming under the head of operating osts.

Did you ever stop to analyze your weekly petty cash expenditures? Well, try that innocent pastime and see how all those ittle" items total up to a surprisingly large figure. Then go ver those "little" items one by one and determine whether they ere all necessary.

It has always been a mystery as to why so many managers await reminder from their home office as to increasing costs for operating the house or the advertising material used on the individual ctures. The same applies to the electric service; cost for house elp and other expense which when not carefully watched and ecked mount to terrific figures in the course of a year.

Replacements, repairs, etc., represent another big item in the st of operating a theatre and here is where the smart manager, reason of close inspection and attention can avoid many unecessary expenditures. A small rip on the seat can be repaired next to nothing other than the labor involved. This will make mplete recovery of a torn seat unnecessary. And quick attenon to an opening seam in your carpets will very often result in ving that particular portion of your floor covering.

Another item which runs the overhead 'way up high is the inted matter used on advertising the show. We know of some anagers who have been using heralds for months without a -up. Bad dope, that. If a manager cannot inject more novelty to his printed matter than straight heralds for eight to twelve eeks, then it's high time he discovered that his methods are tiquated. And the amount of money involved in such mistakes ould make a Scotchman turn pale.

Needless burning of light at various points in the theatre, or the e of high wattage where lower wattage would answer the purse, comprise more of the angles where savings can be realized. one theatre, located on the outskirts of New York, a smart, pable manager worked his electric light bills down from sixtyd dollars a week to under fifty just through rearranging his ttage and paying strict attention to waste.

With warmer weather close by many managers will probably be able to dispense with one of their afternoon ushers. Or rearrange the cleaning staff by reason of the furnace shut-down. Thereby dividing the work differently and saving the cost of one cleaner.

A coat of shellac will do wonders on those outdoor surfaces generally the first to show wear and tear from the elements. Or a little color remover and redipping of those flasher bulbs around the signs and marquee may mean a saving of several hundred new bulbs.

Ordering too many mats or other accessories on which credit cannot be obtained if returned, represents an item which runs into large figures, yet any manager who orders such items with a little forethought can easily do away with such a waste.

Those managers who are empowered to pay their own bills through a theatre checking account should avail themselves of the opportunity of discounting such bills. This saving alone in a six hundred seat theatre came to a sizable amount.

Ordering more printed matter than you can competently dispose of or distribute is another terrible waste of money. This applies to window and car cards as well. Do you check up personally on such distribution? If you do you may find that some of the locations are getting two or more window cards where one will answer the purpose—and you save the extra passes too.

On the maintenance angle again; do you rush into making repairs without being sure that the estimated cost is the minimum for the work to be done. Get some expert advice on such matters by all means.

Even in these days of care and caution your theatre may be losing thousands of dollars through dishonest employees. Only by careful, personal supervision and keeping your eye on each and every detail will you be able to detect and curtail such conditions.

If your theatre has been paying overtime on shows running late you might try juggling the schedule a bit and thereby keep within the regulation working hours.

Proper supervision, exercised frequently, will result in large savings on the cleaning, pressing and repairing of the staff's uniform. If your ushers are not being checked they will soon become careless and throw their uniforms about as they please instead of hanging them in the proper place.

There are so many angles through which a manager can save money that we could go on with the subject for several pages. But if you start with the suggestions contained in this chat you will be making a real move to cut your overhead by sensible saving. Let us emphasize, in closing, that it is just as important to keep the operating costs down to a minimum as it is to keep the receipts up to a maximum.

Kane Ran Responses To Telephone Calls As Newspaper Plugs

Here he is again! You are no doubt acquainted with Tom Kane, manager of the Sequoia Theatre in Redwood City, California. His work has appeared on our pages many times in the past, and it was the sort of work that contained angles of value for the rest of the showmen.

Tom pulled an effective campaign on "New Moon" recently that resulted in fine business at the box-office. Three girls and a man called about 3700 in Redwood City and the suburbs on the phone and delivered a sales talk on the film. A special window was obtained in the local Woolworth's store. A candy store window was also secured and a sale of New Moon chocolate bars placed on prominent display; mirrors, too, were painted with pictures of Tibbett. A couple of 20 foot in circumference moons were placed on the front of the building. Tibbett's records were played on the non-synch before each performance.

A stunt that went over very well in the campaign was that of publishing a letter, received from one of the persons called on the phone, which stated that the party enjoyed Tibbett's first film, and would certainly be on hand to witness the new one. The letter, reprinted in its entirety, was used as a newspaper ad, the only other copy being a small box, supposed to represent the addressed envelope. This is typical of Tom's work at the Sequoia, and we want to see some more of it so that we can pass it along to the rest of the Club. Let's have it Tom. And listen, give our regards to our friends out around your district.

Van Wey Has Been Running A Special Weekly Movie Section

The newspaper in Glen Van Wey's town is published but once a week. So Van Wey, who manages the Sun Theatre in Gothenburg, Neb., tries to make his ads look as attractive as possible and pack a wallop that will keep the titles of the picture before the public for an entire week.

To let you see how he makes up his ads, we are showing you the movie page of the Gothenburg Times, the paper published by J. C. Holmes. Mr. R. B. Holmes, who handles the advertising, has tried to co-operate in all ways possible with Van Wey, as he believes that the page is one that helps pep up the paper and at the same time gives to the theatre a prestige that can well be envied by other small towns. Van Wey has been more than pleased with the results obtained from this movie page. He doesn't base his convictions on a few months' trial, though. He has had the page in the paper for several years, and in that time he has, of course, progressed in its makeup.

The Sun, should you be wondering, is a 550-seat house and is located in a town of 2,300 persons. In small towns today, showmen, more than ever before, are striving to place their theatres before the public as institutions deserving to rank on the level with which First National Banks of small towns are usually regarded. This seems to be a good thing for the theatre and the town. The newspapers seem to agree, for they are always willing to lend their hearty co-operation to help the showman put his house before the public in the manner desired. So we present this movie page, used by one theatre in a small town. What do you think of it? Pass along your comments if you wish to make any and we'll present them, either on our pages or to Mr. Van Wey.

MOTHER'S DAY! May 10th

Showmen who intend to tie their theatre up with this particular day should lose no time in getting set.

Appropriate trailers, lobby displays, distribution of carnations, booking of special subjects, etc., will help build up attention for this day.

Watch the Showman's Calendar for advance information on all special dates and events.

Who's the Guilty Party?

We have often boasted that the Club spirit will always prompt a member to help a brother showman who asks for advice or help. In fact, we boasted about it to an out-of-town member only recently, so imagine our embarrassment when we were politely informed that two letters addressed to active members were never acknowledged.

That doesn't sound like we were right about the "Club spirit" stuff at all, yet we can't resign ourselves to the thought that any showman would intentionally disregard another member's letter.

So, whoever the guilty parties are, PLEASE get us out of this jam by writing to the folks who asked for some advice. Let them know that we are all willing and anxious to help each other while helping ourselves. It's the real Club spirit and we honestly feel that the neglect in answering those letters was caused solely by pressure of other important matters.

Let us try to live up to the Club slogan, a slogan so truthfully applied that it is being copied everywhere as a means of stressing the value of unity and helpfulness: "ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL!"

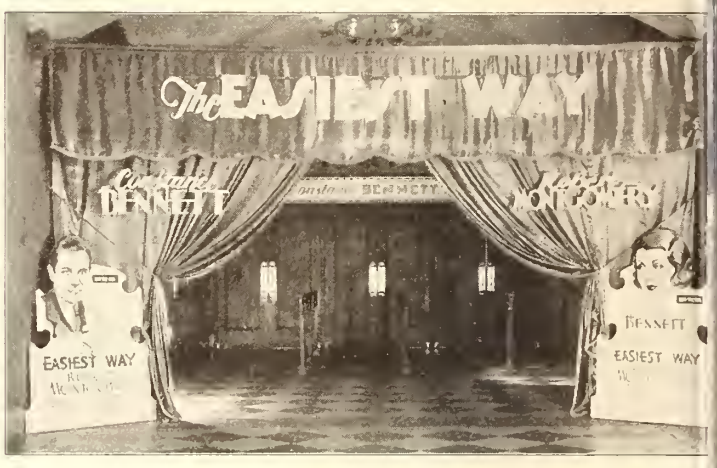
\+ + +

Picked from the Past!

From the Club pages of a year ago we find the following which originally appeared in the Fox upstate house organ "From the Firing Line" and written by Tom Olsen, then publicity director for that division and now handling a man-sized job in Seattle, Washington, for the same organization:

The Other Fellow

Watch the other fellow . . . study what he is doing . . . the manager who isn't too proud to use others' ideas for his own theatre is usually the successful manager . . . the oldness of a stunt has nothing to do with its effectiveness . . . disregard scoffs of those who mumble "Joe Blotz used that gag 15 years ago" . . . for after all the box office tells the story.



"Chick" Lewis and his Round Table Club . . . does a great work for all of us . . . Hardly a week passes that a manager can't get scores of ideas that can be revamped and used in his local situation . . . those who aren't saving them for future reference are making a great mistake.

This same spirit has been manifested by dozens of circuit heads and division chiefs. They recognize the value of "interchanging ideas" as carried out between members on the Club pages, therefore they encourage it among their house managers.

Lobby Display Used By Whitaker On "The Easiest Way" Clicked

There was nothing ostentious about the lobby disp that E. E. Whitaker crea and used for plugging of "T Easiest Way," but yet clicked. That proves sor thing: good taste and care selection for stunts of this ki is an invaluable asset. So the Carolina Theatre lobby in Ch lotte, N. C., looked like the often quoted "million bucks."

Draperies were suspended from the ceiling in the inner lob with the curtains pulled back to permit persons to pass throu Across the top of the draperies appeared the title of the p ture in large letters; the letters being silver on a blue ray background. On the left curtain appeared the name of C stance Bennett and on the other side the name of Rob Montgomery.

To add further to the value of the display, cut-outs of Rob Montgomery and Constance Bennett appeared on either side the entrance with the curtains as a background. These c outs also had copy on them playing up the title, cast and pla dates.

Whitaker didn't stop his campaign with the lobby displ Not a chance. Window displays were also obtained; th along with the regular and special show-selling slants used put the picture before the public gaze. Good work, "E. E."

Flinn Has Stunt That Is Going Over Great; Maybe You Can Use It

At the Pastime Theatre Berea, Ill., Harry A. Fli manager of the house, is us an idea that has helped him secure free publicity in the cal newspaper; and in ad tion, a lot of good will.

Each week in the newspa (the paper being published weekly), is inserted a sort of wo sketch of prominent civic personality. We are reprinting of the sketches here so that you can look it over and see h Flinn uses it. And should you care to make use of it, t it with the showman's compliments.

GUESS WHO?

Mr. ..... is the son of a pioneer Methodist circuit rider. His family moved to Berea in 1876. He attended the Berea schools and Baldwin-Wallace and is at present a trustee of the latter institution. He has been closely associated with the Methodist Episcopal Church and is a teacher in a Cleveland school. His interest in botany led him to grow many varieties of plants. Later he specialized in certain kinds, displaying many beautiful blooms.

See if you can guess the identity of the above-named person. If you are among the first four living in Berea to guess the name correctly and call The News office you will receive one ticket to the Pastime Theatre furnished by its manager, Harry A. Flinn. Two more tickets will be furnished to persons living on rural free deliveries. Phone quickly if you would win a ticket. Phones: Either Berea 26 or Berea 535.

Last Week's Answer:
HALLIE LOOMIS CRAYTOR

Not a bad idea, is it? It won't cost you anything as the pa should furnish the ticket cards and give them out. The copy the cards stated: "This Ticket Entitles—To a Single Adm sion to THE PASTIME THEATRE Through the Courte of H. A. Flinn, Manager, in Co-operation With the Berea Ne and the Olmstead Falls Towne Crier. Good Until (Date The tickets can be easily and quickly printed.

Oke, H. A. Thanks for passing this one along to us. We always glad to see what you're doing to boost the b. o. in y town, so we look forward to passing along some more of y work. And you might also include your photograph.

ribling, Jr., Gives od Plug to Films aying The Rialto

His special by and for "Billy the Kid" helped put the picture across for J. E. Stribling, Jr., advertising manager of the Rialto Theatre in Oklahoma City, Okla., recently.

The lobby carried out the idea of an old time saloon and complete in every detail. Cut-outs and stills were advanously spotted about the town, as were reward signs: anted!" The "Wanted" idea was played up in all of the ertising, including the front and the marquee, which we are showing, and which read: "John Mack Brown—Alias Billy the Kid—Wanted Dead or Alive." In addition to these slants Stribling also shot a couple of other gags, including which was 200 special cards carrying an imprint to the effect that a reward would be paid for the capture, dead or alive, of Billy the Kid. The cut used was one showing the featured players holding two leveled revolvers.

Take a good look at the special front and see how Stribling built it. While we do not know what it cost to put up, believe that it wasn't very much, and we also think that pling makes use of both sides of the compoboard. A front as is shown, more than anything else, attracts the eye. In tion, it gives what might be termed a "classy" touch to the tre. Stills, in this front, are conspicuously posted about the ay.

nd now we'll introduce Stribling to you. That is his photo ing the story. He's a live-wire who is always on the go g to sell his shows in the best possible manner. We are to note that he is so active in his town, and we feel that we correct in saying that his future work will also be seen on Round Table Club pages. Right, "J. E."?

ter Contest Was nner For Woodin; Tied-Up Schools

Larry Woodin again proved that one of the best mediums he has in his town for securing publicity is his local schools. Just recently he wanted to plug the house and its policy, at the Arcadia Theatre in Wellsboro, Pa., so out he o tie-up the schools.

ie result was a poster contest on "Greater Movie Season," h was started in November by Woodin. Take a look at the os we are showing and you'll get an idea of how many ted kids took part in the stunt. The youngsters in the hoto are the winners. And it is of interest to note that the st cost, to quote Larry, "the terrible sum of five passes."

re's a showman grabbing off some fine publicity and insti- nal plugging, to say nothing of the good-will, for only asses. Why can't you do the same thing. There is doubt- a talented set of drawing-class students in your local ols. You might arrange for them to give you some original rs or pictures on certain stars or players. There are many in which this angle can be worked out, if you'll give the a little thought. Give us some more dope on your work, , so that we can pass it along. Oke?

iler Prologue ved Effective ium For Suggs

Believing that an effective medium for the selling of his shows is the use of a trailer prologue or a special stunt to further enhance the value of the trailer, M. S. Suggs, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Bristol, Tenn., put his ontention over to fine results for "The Bat Whispers." soon as the trailer opened, clutching hands were thrown e magnascope curtain with the effect machine. At the time, the trailer went on, all house lights were out and circled the walls—made up also by the effect machine. dressed as a bat came down one aisle about the middle trailer and a green spot followed him up on the stage. he reached the middle of the screen, he stopped. And turned around and flapped his wings and then walked and out the other aisle with the green spot following him. effect and spots were killed during the dialogue. This was so effective that people would shriek at nearly every mance of the trailer. It certainly was the talk of the And it will be repeated on other films, too. Right, M. S.?

Between Ourselves

By K. M. Dunn

Ed. Note:—The Broadway Bulletin is the newly created house argan issued manthly at "The Broadway," Shettleston, Glasgow, Scatland, cinema. In its secand edition is cantained an article by K. M. Dunn, manager of the hause.

We here present Mr. Dunn's comments, and we believe that the slants it cantains, and the intimate manner in which it is written, will be found af value ta thase shawmen making it a weekly practice ta editarialize or chat in the calumns af their theatre pragram.

IT is impossible to give an individual reply to every patron who has written congratulating us on the first issue of the Broadway Bulletin. We take this opportunity of thanking them all for their great kindness and thoughtfulness. The pleasure is ours to know that our efforts are being appreciated, and in the Broadway Bulletin a chain is forged linking patrons and ourselves together.

The first issue caused quite a furore and commanded attention in spheres we never anticipated, Sir Hugh S. Robertson's article on "The Cinema of the Future" being extensively quoted in the daily press.

Just one word of warning to our readers. This issue will probably be the last distributed in The Broadway, as future numbers will be sent to registered readers only. Now if we have not your name and address you will not receive a copy, so to avoid disappointment enter your name in the slips or books provided for that purpose.

Another point! Use the medium of the Bulletin for giving us your point of view, let it be criticism, destructive or constructive. Very often patrons are asked if they enjoyed the entertainment we provide and in the majority of cases they say "yes." Sometimes one has the feeling the affirmative answer is given to avoid offense. Well, being candid won't hurt us. Perhaps there may be another point of view and when you have heard it things may appear different. In this page each month we shall answer the various suggestions or criticisms put before us. Now let us have your opinion on the pictures, management, comfort; in fact, any detail that may strike you.

As the picture is the important thing in the cinema, tell us the type of picture you prefer, whether it is drama, all dancing and singing, comedy or something spectacular. Just write it on a postcard, and hand it to the doorman or drop it in the letter box. Either method will find us. Again, tell us your taste in short films. Is it news, interest, comedies, nature and educational studies, or travel and adventure. This question is prompted by two incidents last month. On the first day we screened "The Curiosity Shop," one of these wonderful nature pictures, two patrons informed us that it was the best item on the program. On the Wednesday morning we received a letter informing us that the writer would have preferred a good comedy. Every item cannot please every one, but it is our endeavor to mix the program to give the maximum enjoyment to our patrons. After all, you pay for the goods and it is up to you to express your desires. When shopping you tell the tradesman what you want and he sells you the article you require. The shopkeeper in time knows the goods to stock in order to meet the demand of his customers. Why not the same with pictures? Now then let us have your order and save up brain fag wrestling with telepathy.

Showmanship — 1931 Model!

Atmospheric Front Connor Created Even Had Swinging Doors

Pre-Volsteadism was seen not so long ago at the Fox St. Helens Theatre in Chehalis, Wash., and it was all due to the efforts on the part of Will J. Connor, manager of the theatre, who engineered a corking stunt for the selling of "See America Thirst."

The photo we are presenting here will give you an idea of the ace front display Conors turned out to plug the picture. The whole idea was atmospheric, being carried out in every degree, even to the inclusion of swinging doors. And it was here that the pay-off became evident. The patron walked through the swinging doors and was confronted by a bar at which he or she was invited to quaff of beer or partake of the free lunch promoted by Connor.

In the above photo note the huge froth-covered mug which is apparently a reproduction of what was one time America's most popular beverage. A free lunch placard rests against the lower part of the mug. Also note the well-placed signs and attractive cutouts at either side of the lobby. The Club compliments Connor for effecting this novel display.

They certainly had a fine time out in Chehalis on this one. Everybody paid attention to the flashy front, the free lunch counter, too, came in for its share of attention. As a matter of fact, this medium caused plenty of word-of-mouth comment, and as a result the film went over to ace publicity. Which is generally what happens when Will dopes out a campaign. We'd like to see some more of your work, Will. How about passing it along?

Try This Slant!

The Rivoli Theatre of La Crosse, Wisc., injected something really "different" into their theatre's advertising when they made use of testimonials from their women patrons to build up interest in this attraction.

Anything with a local slant constitutes good showmanship and in this respect we would urge other showmen to avail themselves of the suggestion to try and incorporate more local angles into their own advertising.

Though lacking in display, as compared to the general trend in newspaper advertising among theatres, this ad is really an unusually attractive one. Note, if you please, how effective the illustration and text matter is handled. As a matter of fact the only detail we could possibly take exception to is the line "Also—A Comedy." What comedy? And why not tell them who is in it?

Calling Cards Left At Homes, Followed By Heralds, Clicked Oke

Knowledge of his local public has more than once helped H. Lashley, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Burlington, N. C., to engineer stunts that helped towards enticing a few dollars more to his box-office on the picture being plugged. Lashley pulled an excellent stunt recently in conjunction with his selling of "Scandal Sheet," starring Bancroft, Francis and Brook.

A week in advance, Lashley made up a number of calling cards bearing the names of the three featured players in the film. Over the name he rubber-stamped: "Sorry I Missed You." The cards were then placed under the front door of every house in Burlington. Three days later, this move was followed up with a well made-up herald printed in fine style on coated paper, that stated: "You recall receiving a calling card from Kay Francis, George Bancroft and Clive Brook the other day. It is now your turn to repay their visit. They will be at the Paramount Theatre Wednesday and Thursday in 'Scandal Sheet,' a pulsating Melodrama of Modern Life in Modern Newspaper Setting."

The same days as the heralds were distributed an ad was secured, gratis, from the local newspaper and ran on the Society Page. The ad's copy was the same as that of the herald. In addition to this, Lashley also promoted a tie-up with the newspaper, the sheet agreeing to run a large ad containing a newspaper account of some of the picture's highlights. Readers of the paper were invited to write a caption. Those writing the best captions were given free tickets to the theatre.

Need we say that the picture went over with a bang?

Showmanship—Fifteen Years Ago!

Hear Ye, Hear Ye, Hear Ye. Bull-eye it or nit, some of the "daddies" of showbusiness are starting to make themselves known because of the accuracy of this colyum . . . well, maybe our labors are not entirely in vain . . . so . . . to continue where we left off last week we'll hop on to the interesting info that Mgr. M. Kashin of the Midway Theatre in Montreal, where he handled the publicity and merchandising angles . . . gave emphasis to the much needed use of lobby displays . . . in fact, Kashin actually made this phase of show business an exact science . . . and in these days many other managers would do well to think more about their lobbies and fronts than they are doing . . . To give the serial "Liberty" a flying start . . . R. R. Perkins, manager of the Ozark Theatre in Burlington, Ia., ran a half page ad in his local paper . . . and then topped that with a free kids show that afternoon . . . no question but such methods will make any attraction click . . . Talking about revivals in this year of nineteen thirty-one . . . brings back to mind the way that A. E. Morelock of the Pageant Theatre in St. Louis, Mo., worked the same idea back in 1916 and got behind them to the tune of big special ads every day in the newspapers . . . after all, whether the year be 1931 or 1961 or 1945, if any idea is worth plugging it is worth plugging a hundred percent . . . nice work Morelock . . . but you were not looking for a new job every six months . . . the more recent use of free tickets attached to toy balloons also recalls the exploits of that well-known showman, H. J. Lego, owner and manager of the Majestic Theatre out in Fort Dodge, Ia. . . . he worked the idea to tremendous returns to help put over "The American Beauty," a Paramount release of fifteen years ago . . . he attached about one hundred free passes out of a total of a thousand balloons which were released . . . and besides, he imprinted each and every balloon with the name of the theatre, the attraction and play date . . . live stuff, sez we . . . what sez you? . . . Shea's Hip up in Buffalo, N. Y., pulled a peculiar gag when they announced a policy of separate section of seats for ladies without escort . . . the prime factor being their desire to see that unescorted ladies were not annoyed . . . Only recently we were told about a "brand new" ballyhoo gag employed by a showman in the middle west in which he dressed a chap up like a blind man and sent him through the streets of the town with a sign announcing the fact that he would give a thousand dollars if he could see "such and such" a picture . . . now we find the same idea fifteen years ago under the interesting activities of M. H. Ginberg . . . only he goes one better for his Magnate Theatre in Lyons, Neb., by actually using a real blind man, thereby helping the unfortunate make a few dollars a day to pull the same gag . . . and so another "new" idea is blasted . . . We wonder just how much times and personalities in this industry have changed in a period of fifteen years . . . just that long ago Bill Johnston told the story

McKenna Finds It Profitable To Plug His Short Subjects

Give John McKenna, ager of the Lyric Thea Jackson, Tenn., a short su of merit and he'll more plug it. This point was recently when he shot a campaign for the inaugur of the new "Leather Pus series, a booking of 10 two-reelers to run one chapter a based on the famous stories by H. C. Witwer.

The heralds read, "Boxing each Saturday for 10 weeks." then followed name of theatre, playdate copy about short ject and cast.

The special heralds were distributed to fight fans whe there was a boxing match taking place as well as distribut places where the men folk would likely read them. The fe length attraction was also given prominent mention or special herald.

Another excellent move of the campaign was a story pl in the High School paper relative to an essay contest fo girls of the school on "Why I Enjoy Prize Fights."

Quoting from the High School paper, "The contest is in nection with the showing of THE LEATHER USHERS s to be shown at the Lyric Theatre every Saturday. It is Witwer's story that recently ran in Collier's Magazine.' confine the contest wholly to the High School, even the j of the contest were picked from the staff of the High S paper. First prize was a two weeks' pass; second and prizes, one-week passes; fourth, two passes, and fifth, one The winning essay was published in the following issue High School paper, thus giving the picture more publicity

These special stunts more than apprised the residents town—including the kids—that the interesting series was to start at the theatre. We don't think, in view of the he turns out, that McKenna has ever had to complain lack of enthusiasm on shorts.

Guessing Names Of Flowers Boosted The Value Of Display

All you had to do, pi ing you were in Sup Wis., when Harvey Buch pulled the gag as a plu "One Heavenly Night" d its showing at the Publi ace Theatre was to kno names of a variety of flo

A tie-up was made with a florist whose store was nea theatre. He decorated his florist shop window with a v of flowers.

In the back of the window was a huge cut-out of John and Evelyn Laye on whic copy about the picture, t and playdates.

In the foreground was a nouncement card tellin about the contest and guest tickets would be aw to the first 30 persons su ting the correct answers.

The stunt, being some different in the way of exp tion and window display c from the start, and it was that there was a consid number of people requ flower books from the lo braries. And wanting ther hurry! So if you ever think you want to try out the str of your window displays, how about a gag of this sort? Harvey, give our regards to our friends out in your regio let's have some more dope from you, will you?

Le Tempt Had Very Novel Truck Bally For Gag on "Rango"

For novelty in truc plays, see Homer Le T who conceived a very street ballyhoo to plug go" when the jungle film ed the house managed Tempt, the Queen Thea Galveston, Texas.

A large flat bed truck was entirely covered with beave from the "bed" of the truck down almost to the street The title of picture, sales copy, name of theatre and pla appeared on this beaverboard on both sides and rear. T of the truck was built up with palm leaves, shrubs branches, etc., to give it the appearance of a jungle.

Six large cut-outs of tigers mounted on the truck or front, rear and sides gave the effect as though the a were emreging from the jungle. A banner across the the truck read: "Tonight you will fight for your life!" front of the truck was built in and title mounted, ar hood and cab were covered with foliage.

The ballyhoo truck was used on the streets of the c the first two days of showing and attracted considerable tion. And as a result, the business at the theatre inc some few dollars extra. Oke, Homer. Let's see what el are doing to plug your shows.

rred Sells Town Using Profusion Novelty Heralds

Carl Sherred's numerous slants for showselling have given the public of the Mishler Theatre in Altoona, Pa., a lot of enjoyment. Take as an example a couple of his recent novelty heralds.

When he played "Free Love," ed distributed a number of white pay envelopes imprinted copy: "Please Do Not Open This Until You Get Home." inspection of the envelope, the bearer found a card, im- ed in red, white, and blue, on both sides, with copy: "Good s Are Here, for There's 'Free Love' at the Capitol" (play- one side). The other side read: "Are Today's Young les 'Love Birds' or 'Fighting Cocks'? The Answer Is In Love."

e heralds, when handed out, created quite a bit of interest certainly a lot of laughter. There was another for "Little dent" that was conducive to hilarity. Enclosed in an enve- stating: "Free! Little Accidents Insurance Policy," was rd, printed in blue and white, stating: "Your Protection nst Any 'Little Accident.' Keep This Safety Pin As a nder to See the Laff Hit (picture)." Attached to the card a safety pin.

fore signing off on this story we'd like to state that Sherred inly turned out a sweet ad for Lincoln's Birthday. All is make-up carried a background of a national emblem d. It looked very effective. Thanks, Carl, for keeping us d. Keep it up, will you?

bby's Hobby Has ays Been Novel wspaper Layouts

In Providence, Rhode Island, practically all of the showmen center their selling efforts towards turning out newspaper ads that will be bound to attract the attention of readers of the newspapers and prospective theatregoers. This with Jack Hobby, too.

k, who manages the RKO Victory Theatre, has long been n for his work along the advertising line in addition to eneral showmanship. Given a picture that will permit him plurge" in his advertising of it, Hobby will generally give an ad that will sell, as well as attract the eye the minute age is turned.

hen we say that an ad has to be good to get attention in idence, we mean it. From time to time the Club pages carried various types of layouts created by the showmen e town. Now we present some of Hobby's recent work, we are sure that by looking it over, you will find one or slants that will prove of interest to you in your own make- In Hobby's ads, it is always interesting to note that in e manner or another he tries to carry an intimate tone; being conveyed by either word or picture. Of the ads in layout, we suggest you study the "Dracula" ad, which, by opy and make-up will supply you with information as to her or not Hobby knows his town. The other ads, too, convey the impression, also.

ck of space does not permit us at this time to go into a led story of Jack's other activities in Providence, but suf- it to say, he's active. And when he's active, the shows lugs go over to fine results.

are two of the ladies bands tied up by Hobby as part of his campaign for "The n." Details of his merchandising work in connection with this unusual picture be incorporated in another story to be published shortly. Anything Jack engineers is worth reading about and this is no exception.

about a subscription canvasser who went out to see what was wrong with a list of seventy-four theatres not receiving the News . . . here's the results as reported . . . 14 of the houses were closed . . . 15 were reconverted into stores . . . 4 permanently closed . . . 3 not running pictures . . . 2 rarely using them at all . . . 1 indefinite address . . . of the remaining thirty-five he had this to report . . . 8 never have or never will read a trade paper . . . 3 cannot talk English . . . 1 prefers free house organs . . . 1 reads the News in the film exchanges . . . 4 claimed to be subscribers but were not . . . and 18 signed on the dotted line . . . But to get back to the subject of showmanship . . . we want to tell you that John C. Green of Galt, Canada used an interesting piece of printed matter in the form of a wallet filled with money to sell the customers on the street the idea to come to his Temple Theatre to see "The Million Dollar Motion Picture Production" then current at his house . . . oh, well . . . they still talk in millions and more these days . . . J. E. Sliney, manager of the Reel Theatre, a large downtown house in Cleveland, O., advertised the fact that the women shoppers could leave their kiddies at the theatre while they went shopping . . . J. G. Von Herberg, famous then and more famous now, in the show-world of Seattle, Wash., gave "The Dawnmaker" a great send off through an elaborate and impressive campaign including special art work in his ads and surround features for dressing the front atmospherically . . . some one ought to make Von Herberg write a book about his experiences in this business of ours . . . he knows it . . . and how . . . Frank Stanton, manager of the Fenway Theatre in Boston, Mass., lent much importance to the stage setting for his theatre and did not keep it a secret all to himself either . . . he was always injecting new slants into this part of his theatre and it caused no end of comment on the part of his patrons . . . As a special ballyhoo for Chaplin's "Police," then current at the Empress Theatre in Central City, Neb., Manager W. A. Kerr dressed twelve boys like Chaplin and sent them through the streets of the city distributing handbills and creating interest in the picture . . . then to give a smash slant . . . he dressed a couple more up like cops and sent them chasing the "Chaplin's" through the town . . . to cap the climax . . . much to the amusement of the adult as well as kid patrons . . . he had every kid in town who could dress like Chaplin on the stage of the Empress . . . And now we learn that a certain showman . . . Sid Grauman by name . . . pulled a "knockout" stunt in connection with the picture "Purity" . . . here's the dope . . . he dressed a young woman as a bride and had her make the rounds of the stores in the downtown section wheeling a baby carriage with a sign bearing the single word "Purity" . . . no wonder there was a SRO sign out all during the run of the play . . . and another "no wonder" that Sid Grauman's name was later made famous the world over . . . as the cereal ad used to say: "There's a Reason" . . . and there was . . . and still is . . .

An Appreciation to Dick Kirschbaum

For almost three years the readers of the Round Table Club pages have been laughing at the timely series of "Lobby Laffs." These cartoons, suggested by members from all over the country, are illustrated in an inimitable manner by Dick Kirschbaum, who has become known to every showman who receives this publication.

It has taken us over two years to convince Dick that we ought to have a photo of himself, but we never dared to tell him that we wanted to reproduce it on these pages.

So here is your opportunity of making the acquaintance of Papa Lobby Laff in pusson. And we're here to tell you that Dick is as good natured (another name for stout) as he looks. Every ounce (such liberties we're taking) of his two hundred odd pounds (more or less) is made up of the kind of stuff that regular fellows are made of.

Dick deserted showbusiness about a year ago to return to his first love, newspaper work, and three theatre managers mysteriously disappeared after asking Dick why he don't go back to managing a theatre. Murder is suspected.

We must become serious now so as to convince Kirschbaum that we certainly appreciate his fine co-operation of the past and we feel certain that he will continue to aid us in the future, especially after we tell him that over ten thousand showmen want to see more of his "Lobby Laff" series. You send them in, Dick, and we'll publish them. Fair enough? Oke.

Jonasson Turned Out Complete Campaign On "Stolen Heaven"

When Robert (Bob) Jonasson, manager of the Publix-Mayfair Theatre in Asbury Park, N. J., plans a campaign for a picture—any picture at all—he tries to make it a worthwhile one, as witness what he did to sell "Stolen Heaven."

Seventy-five window cards were spotted in outlying towns and in prominent stores in the business district of Asbury Park. 3,000 heralds were distributed in the theatre the week prior to the showing of the picture; also in outlying towns within a radius of 20 miles (the Asbury Park theatres draw from many of the surrounding towns).

A stunt that clicked well was worked with the local radio station. An announcement was made warning the public that a young honeymoon couple, who were in reality escaped criminals, was now at large. A description was given to the effect that they were young, good looking, well dressed, and going under the name of Bartlett. This story led up to the fact that the story of this couple could be learned at the Mayfair Theatre—for one week starting Saturday, February 20. It was suggested that the public would have an opportunity to judge for themselves whether these young people were really criminals.

These activities—as do practically all of Jonasson's stunts—helped business at the theatre and managed to draw in that bit of extra change that every showman makes a play for.

Thirteen Men Who Did Win and Why

THE FAR-SIGHTED MAN—Sees opportunity, decides quickly and grasps it while he can.

THE MAN WITH NERVE—Willing to judge for himself, and act for himself.

THE HONEST MAN—Believes other men are honest because he is honest himself.

THE SAVING MAN—Always has something saved to take advantage of opportunities.

THE CAUTIOUS MAN—Investigates, but does not hesitate to act, if facts warrant.

THE UN-EGOTISTICAL MAN—Knows he does not know everything.

THE BROAD-GAUGED MAN—Willing to consider other propositions.

THE FORTUNATE MAN—Learns by his mistakes, and profits next time.

THE FAIR MAN—Knows both sides before rendering his decision.

THE SENSIBLE MAN—Keeps informed, sees opportunity and embraces it.

THE REASONING MAN—Asks questions instead of delivering opinions.

THE SUCCESSFUL MAN—Invests where opportunity for profit is greatest, and safety reasonably certain.

THE WISE MAN—Accepts the good things because he believes they are intended for him.

Thirteen Men Who Never Won and Never Will

THE HIND-SIGHTED MAN—Never sees an opportunity until it has passed.

THE BACK-BONELESS MAN—Always must ask somebody's advice.

THE ONLY HONEST MAN—Must manage for himself; no one else honest enough.

THE SPENDTHRIFT—Never has anything to invest; always hard up.

THE SUSPICIOUS MAN—Always afraid somebody will rob him.

THE CONCEITED MAN—Knows all the best things without being told.

THE NARROW GAUGED MAN—Refuses to listen to anything out of his line.

THE UNFORTUNATE MAN—Invested and lost; or has a friend who did.

THE UNFAIR MAN—Decides unfavorably without investigation.

THE OPAQUE MAN—Dense, and never sees an opportunity.

THE ARGUING MAN—Never acts, because he isn't given time.

THE POOR-MOUTHED MAN—Never turns loose a dollar without "pound-of-flesh mortgages."

THE FOOL—Thinks a thing worthless, or it would not be offered to him.

Schmidt Effected An Excellent Tie-Up To Sell "Danger Lights"

Another of his comple campaigns was turned out William E. Schmidt, manag of the Orpheum Theatre Wilkes-Barre, Pa., when set out to plug "Dang Lights." A film with a railro theme.

Schmidt tied up with the newspaper for a contest to find t oldest railroader in Wyoming Valley. Stories in the dailies a peared on this along with newspaper interviewing the winn The winner was driven to the theatre and received as the gu of the theatre to see the picture. He was also presented wi a prize cup given by a local jewelry sto The jewelry store advertised this extensiv in ads as well as mailing out 3,000 heral

Arrangements were made with the Lehi Valley Railroad to distribute 1,500 heral notifying employees of the picture. Th gave Schmidt the use of two small locom tives, one of which had been in the stati (in Wilkes-Barre) for some time and w of the kind that operates by putting a nic in the slot. This engine was placed on d play in the jewelry store window—tying with the picture.

The other engine was 20 feet long a was set on top of a truck with a float bu around it. This engine and float was us as a ballyhoo—going from one end of t town to the other. Thirty-five red torch were donated by the railroad and these w used on the float and on top of the theatr sign.

The town, all of it, knew that "Dang Lights" was playing the Orpheum. And nearly all of the to was on hand to see the film. Good work, Schmidt. Keep it u

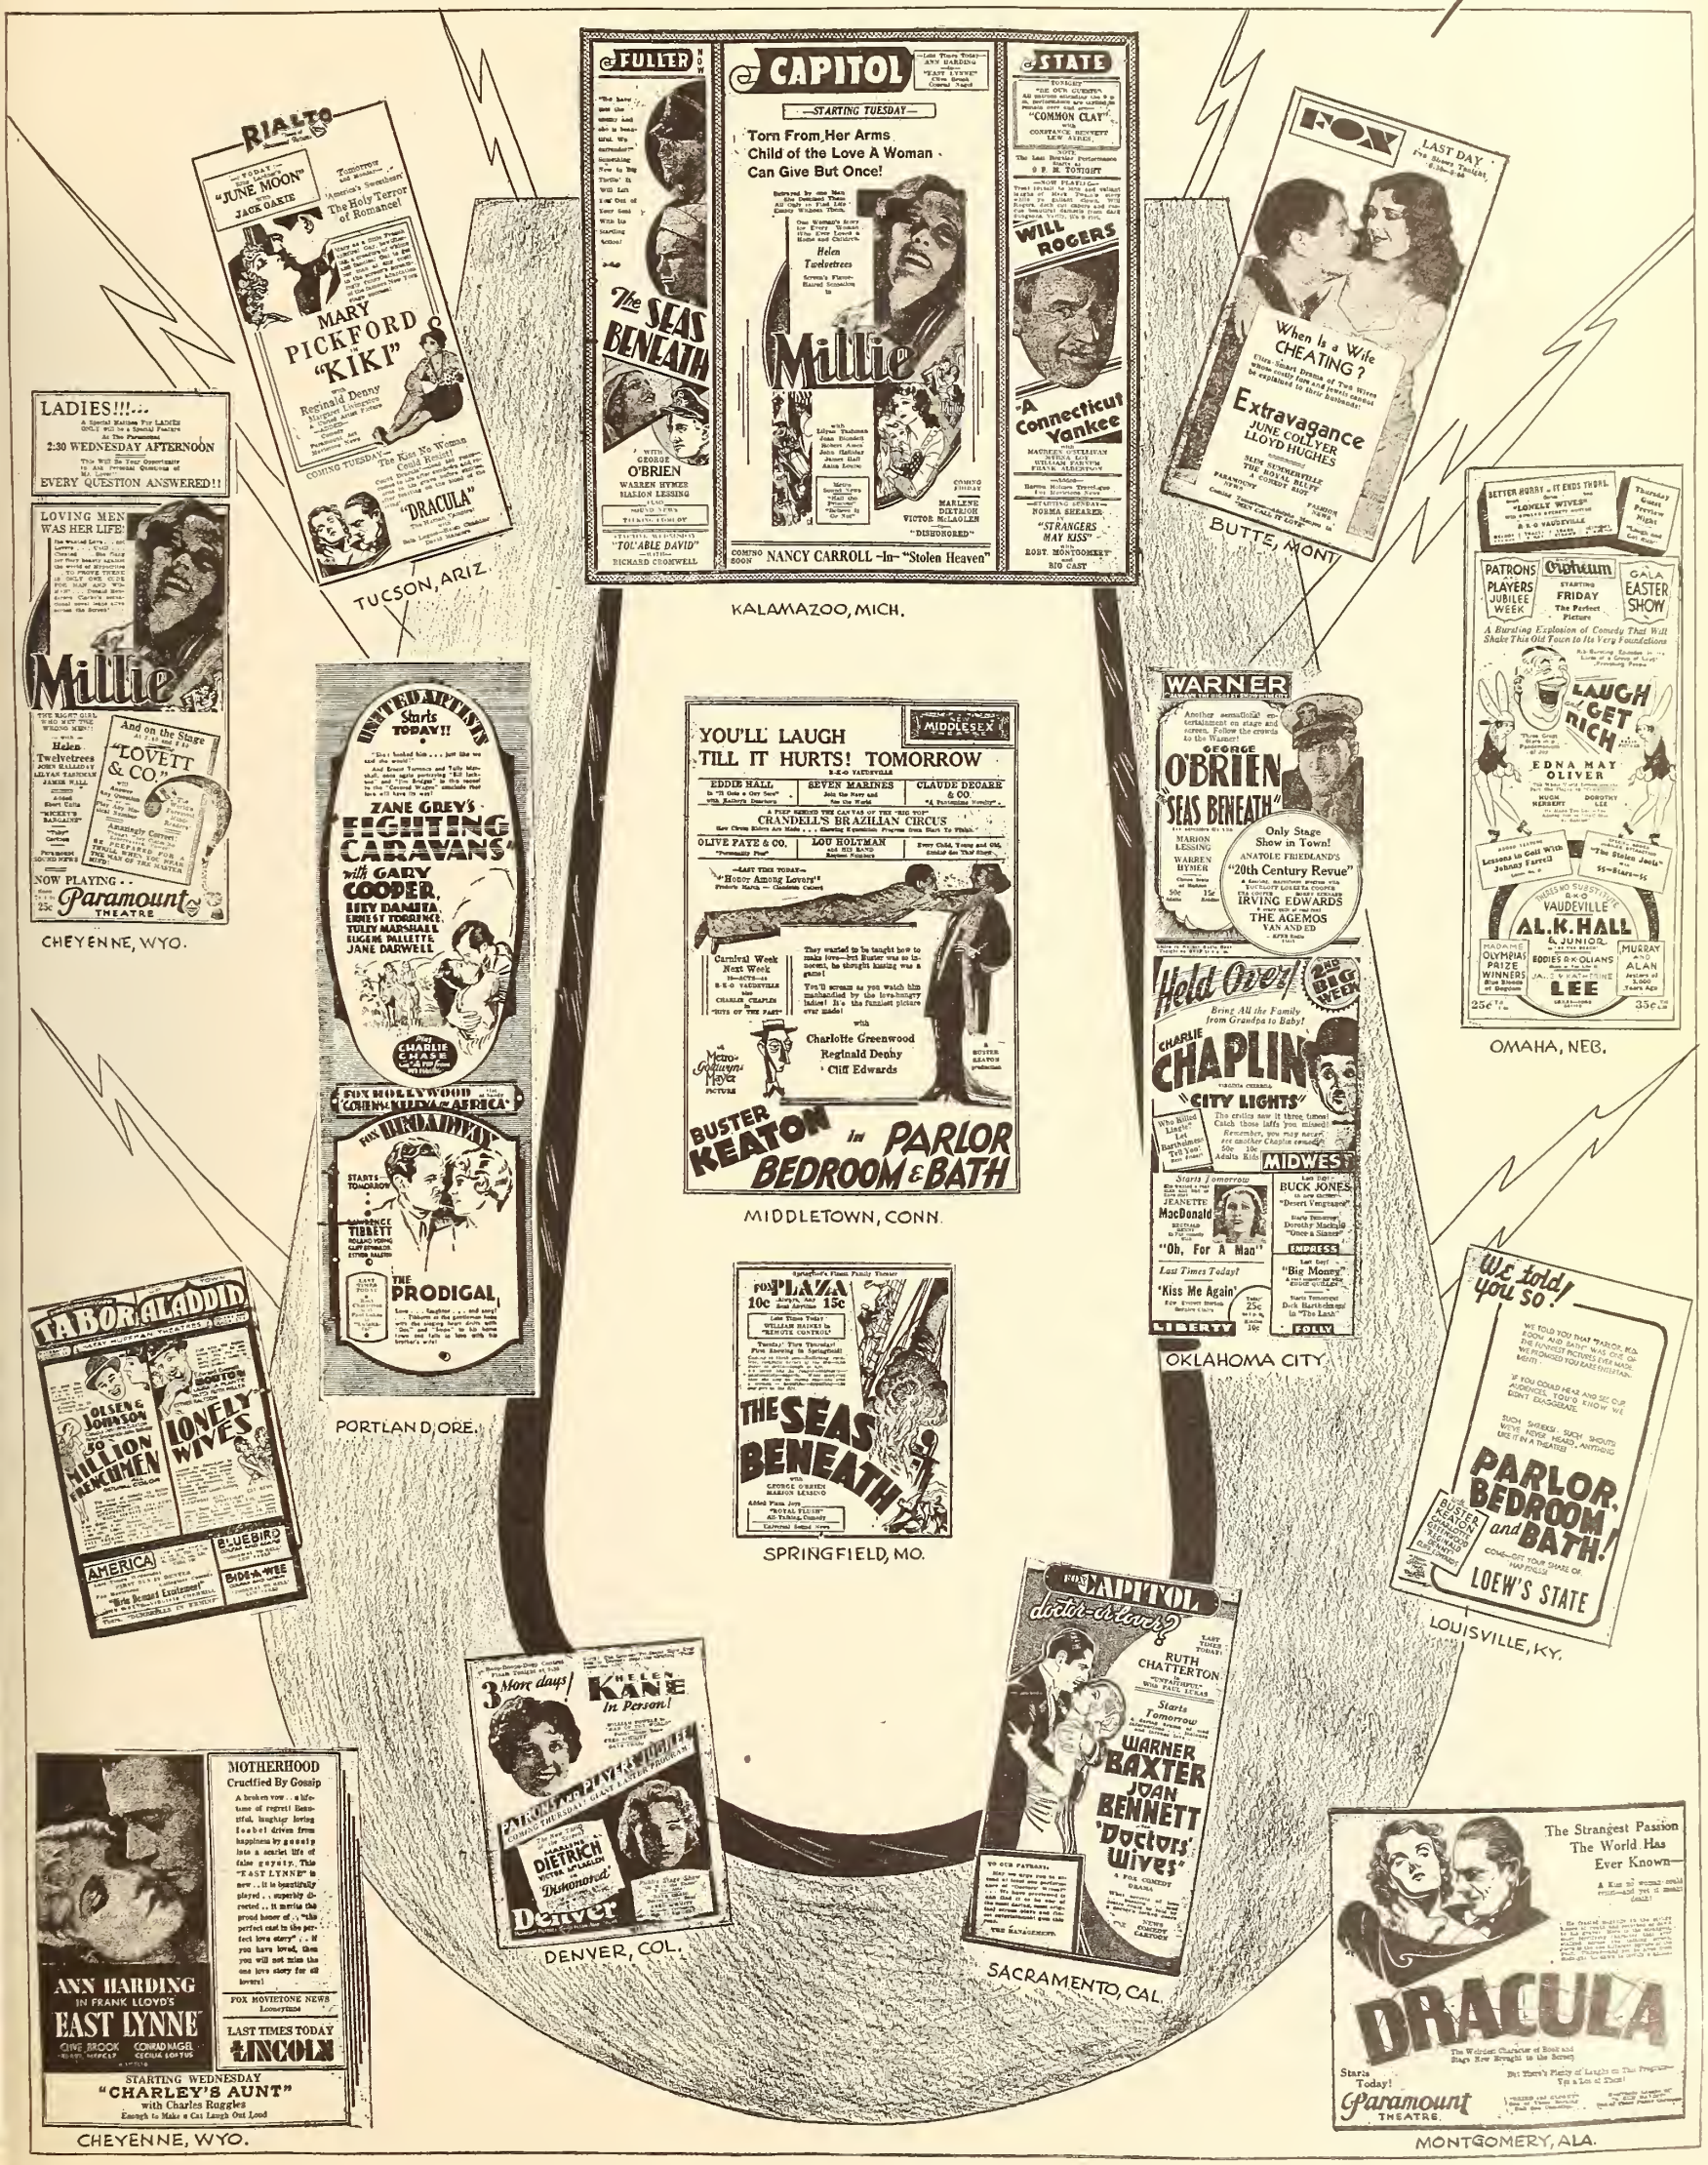
"Doc" Miller Used A Truck Loaded With Cargo of Beer Kegs

A good many laughs w recorded by R. R. (Doc) M ler, manager of the Parkw Theatre in Madison, Wis., cently. And what occasion the hilarity? It was a str ballyhoo that Doc decided use in order to let the to know that the Parkway was featuring "Little Caesar."

An open truck was secured and loaded with beer barrels. man was hired to sit atop the truck and guard its cargo witl rifle. Alongside the truck were placed banners: "Lay Off La This Beer Belongs to 'Little Caesar' Himself." (Theatre, pla dates, stars.) The truck cruised about the streets of Madis and was the subject of plenty of laughter, which later resolv into word-of-mouth comment on the picture. It is interesti to note that the film, against some of the stiffest oppositi possible, went over to excellent results.

Doc has a habit of turning out lots of stunts that click i him every time. We strongly suspect that this is due to knowing his public, as it seems to us he has taken the troul to figure out the type of work best fitted for public presentati that will be of value to the Parkway and its box-office. Ha we hit the right idea, Doc? Let's hear from you on the subje

Ableson And Beecher Promoted Ace Tie-Up In Sioux Falls, N. D.



District Manager A. E. Ab son and Manager Fred Beec effected a tie-up with a gro of merchants that grea helped to advertise "Dracul playing at the Publix-Egypt Theatre, Sioux Falls, S. The back pa contained copy about picture, theatre and playdates. One the inside pages listed the names of the merchants and approximate time "Dracula" would visit each respective sto

The other inside page gave instructions on what to say a what to do to win the prize. Business was excellent as a result of this gag. But we'll you in on a secret. It's nothing startling when stunts like are pulled in Sioux Falls, because Ableson and the rest of live-wires in his district have made quite a habit of hitting th over the center field fence for homers. Right, Art?

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING has BECOME the BOX-OFFICE MAGNET for MANY THEATRES

Australia Continues To Forge Ahead In Showselling Methods

An active showman to be found among our Australian contributors and members is Walter Helsden of Innisfail, whose favorite motto is "It Can Be Done."

Walter practices what he preaches, because he has long since proven to himself that if he puts his shoulder to the wheel he can, despite obstacles, put across pictures of merit. An example of Walter's work was seen when "Bulldog Drummond" was booked into the Airdrome. Three papier mache bulldogs were sent Walter by Frank Kenny. A local taxi driver happened to witness the delivery of the pseudo bulldogs at the station, and promptly asked for a loan of one, only to be told that he would have to wait a little while until the name of the theatre, the picture, and the playdates had been painted upon it. On the following day, the driver piloted his cab about town And on the radiator cap, ensconsed in glory, sat the bulldog. For two weeks the picture received an ace plug.

"It's a busy life," says Walter, "when one has to book film for three changes a week, from a distance of 1,600 miles (from Brisbane to Innisfail), keep expenses in reasonable limits, and endeavor to gauge the amusement tastes of a population that includes every nationality under the sun. In addition, the local newspaper publishes only twice a week, so that makes it all the more necessary to use every available means of exploitation. However, as I said, IT CAN BE DONE. And it is worth while, for the show business, after all, with all its irritations and strenuous work, is the only one worth talking about."

Walter should know; he has been in the game long enough! What do you say, Walt? Oke?

Now for a look at some of Mel Lawton's newspaper advertising. Our Regional Chairman for Australia handles the advertising for the Prince Edward Theatre in Melbourne. Look over his ad and see how he plugs the various attractions that the house offers, such as the special overture, the organ solo, cooling plant, etc. Lawton is well versed on local knowledge and he knows to the highest degree just what type of ad and what style of copy will best go over with the readers of the newspaper.

Next we'll say a word or two about the campaign that Ernie Pelling, under the direction of Ted Lane put over for the Winter Garden Theatre in Brisbane when the house played "Whoopee." The big event of the campaign was the New Year Whoopee Revel at Lennon's Hotel, which was the greatest social item of Brisbane to usher in 1931. The orchestra played and broadcasted many of the tuneful numbers contained in the picture.

On the campaign, many window displays were obtained in prominent stores and did much to account for a successful playdate. The front of the theatre, always a source of delight to patrons, was again up to snap, and featured a special arrangement in atmospheric style. A novel street ballyhoo, which we are showing, was that of staging a parade of cowgirls, Indians, horses, and persons dressed up to represent comic char-

On Shorts!

A SHOWMAN SAYS:

"Some of the short subjects here mean more than the feature. For instance, a cartoon of any kind, Laurel and Hardy comedies, Charlie Chase, and many others are sometimes the saving of the feature on the bill. So short subjects are always mentioned in ads and sign. The short subject field now is the best that it has ever been and should not be overlooked in your advertising or display in lobby.

An Advance Tip!

It won't be very long before furnaces and heat will be a closed incident to the present season, but it's never too early to sound a warning that the time to look after your heating equipment is NOT when the winter season is getting under way, but after the winter season is over.

Backed by many a headache and a whole flock of worries, we pass along the suggestion that you have your equipment thoroughly inspected as soon as the "fire" goes out for the last time. Have someone who knows what it is all about instruct the porter or engineer on the proper care of the boilers, etc., during the summer months to prevent corrosion and other troubles that pile up when care is not exercised.

Since winter "takes its bow" in some spots earlier than in others, this warning is not a bit too soon. If your heating plant is still in operation, jot a memo down on your diary pads that it won't slip by without your knowing it.

Title Mats in Co-Op. Ads

Very effective co-operative pages can be obtained through the judicious spotting of title mats in every ad. This method has been followed out for quite some time now by Floyd Morrow, and more recently by Barney Gurnette, manager of the T & D Theatre, Lodi, Calif.

By breaking up one of the exchange mats to secure the desired title, and casting as many plates as may be needed on the page, the showman will find that the newspaper page will take on a valuable appearance. Copy relative to the product of the co-operating merchants can be worked about the picture title. The cost of this stunt is small, as the local newspaper can easily take care of the casting.

Goldsmith's Efforts On "Dracula" Clicked Very Well For House

Though a split week ho the Majestic Theatre in Pe Amboy, N. J., played to good a gross that it was cided to hold the film "D cula" over for the rest of week. And in no small m ure was this due to the ex sive campaign turned out by A. S. Goldsmith, manager of house.

A teaser campaign was used in the outer lobby ten days advance of the showing of "Dracula." In the inner lobby special streamers of cut-out letters were used in advance. 2 28's were used around the rail leading to the mezzanine. special three-way frame was used, accompanied by 14 x photos, with a flasher behind cut-out letters of "Dracula.

2,000 tabloid newspaper heralds were distributed from ho to house. 2,000 envelopes containing dirt were distributed f house to house in other sections of the town. The significa of the dirt is the box containing dirt in which "Dracula" bu himself each day. This was explained on the imprint.

When word of the full week "hold over" was announ 1,500 postcards were mailed to the regular mailing list. All atre employees whispered to each patron coming in or leav the theatre, a week in advance, "DRACULA is coming!"

A teaser campaign was used in the newspapers three day advance of playdate. Several feature stories were carried the Perth Amboy Evening News regarding "Dracula." S with appropriate copy were placed in various down-town n chants' windows.

Special treatment was given the sound trailer which was u a week in advance. The trailer was projected with green g tin—stage lights and spots were all green—while running trailer all lights were dimmed.

acters in the picture. The parade went over to excellent succ Incidentally, a special prologue, "Indian Moods," preceded showing of the picture, and rated plenty of applause.

Victor Hobler of the Wintergarden and Olympia Thea in Townsville, Queensland, continues to keep the local publ kids and adults—informed on the appearances of "Mickey Mouse" at the theatre. So here we show a photo of the way Mickey is plugged on the streets by means of a float, again proving that the rodent has certainly given show audiences the world over a lot of entertainment.

We are not so sure that Larry Webb's stunt for "Three Live Ghosts" would click over on this side of the Big Pond, but we are passing this along to let you see how Larry sells them at the Paramount Theatre in Oakleigh, Victoria. On the three ni prior to the showing of the picture, the current performa was stopped midway, and the front curtains dropped in c plete blackout. A loud siren was then heard, and on the di lit, green shaded stage three boys, enveloped in white shee appeared. They shook the sheets violently and during the shr and yells of the audienc slide was projected upon screen and read: "T Live Ghosts" will appea this theatre (playdat The stunt, we are inforr was highly successful.

A street ballyhoo caused a lot of laughter this special ballyhoo we are showing which used by J. C. Smith, U Theatres' manager for Crown Theatre, Wol gong, N. S. W. A yo man was hired to parade street in a gaily colored equally gaily lettered ott costume. The gag ated quite a bit of comn from every one seeing it doubtless resulted in S obtaining some valu word-of-mouth comn for his theatre.

That's what a few of the Australian showmen are doing put their shows across. Of course, should space permit, could present a couple of more pages of their activities. H ever, we are sure that in the near future we'll have some n of their work to pass along. We want to thank Mel Lav and the rest of the live-wires who have become and are rem ing steady contributors to the Round Table pages and we forward to seeing their future contributions to Australian international showmanship.

Parker Plugs Shows Playing Theatre In A Masterly Fashion

When Jerry Parker, manager of the Commodore Hull Theatre in Derby, Conn., sets out to put a picture over, he puts it over, and no mistake about it. Take as an example his recent campaign on "Abraham Lincoln."

Here Parker was confronted with Lent, and, in addition, ots of the kids in town had decided they were not going to the ovies during the Lenten season. But Parker, upon immediate eceipt of his booking, scurried post haste over to the schools nd requested that the teachers announce to the children the fact that the picture was soon to be shown at the theatre. This the teachers did; and what is still more remarkable, advised youngsters voluntarily abstaining from theatres during the Lenten season also to see it.

On the opening day of the picture, Parker had the local high school drum corps, 40 in number, on the stage giving a concert. Friends, parents, and relatives were all there in gala array. The school teachers, at the conclusion of the entire performance, were so impressed with "Lincoln" that they requested the youngters to write compositions on it; and rather than read ooks to get material, to see the picture. This the kids did. ncidentally, about the drum corps we'd like to tell you that a icture showing them in uniform hit the pages of a New Haven aper.

For his selling of "Scandal Sheet," Parker tied-up with his ocal paper and invited the entire staff to see the newspaper film. his meant free publicity for the theatre, which accordingly as given. The picture went over very well from a publicity nd space-grabbing standpoint, we are assured.

Parker likes to make a play for the kids when he has a pic-ure he believes will interest them, and so on "River's End," e planted a mat in one of the local papers and arranged for a oloring contest. The kids went for this like nobody's business, nd as a result the film went up and up and up.

And now a word or two about the photos we are showing. he lobby displays at the Commodore Hull are the subject of a reat deal of comment from both townspeople and newspaper. t is seldom that a week goes by when a display is not com-ented upon by the press. So we are showing a couple of them. ne on "Illicit," the other on "Gentleman's Fate." Look them ver and then meet the artist responsible for them, Charles C. averan, whose picture heads this story.

Oke, Jerry. We're always glad to hear from you and to note hat you are doing. Keep up the good work and remember we ant you to keep us posted. Oke?

Boy Scouts Tendered Co-Operation And Helped E. Lavoy

The co-operation of the local Boy Scouts helped Eugene Lavoy to put over a corking idea when "Father's Son" played the Orpheum Theatre in Grand Forks, North Dakota.

Three groups of Scouts were stationed on the top of low uildings in the heart of the business section during the busi-ess hours. The Scouts wigwagged signals back and forth; the gnals spelling out the title of the picture. As each letter was eceived, one of the groups hung two-foot high letters on a pecial frame twelve feet long. When the full complement of tters were hung on the special frame, it read, " 'FATHER'S ON' Now Playing at the Orpheum." A Scout blew bugle calls t intervals calling attention to the signs.

A large telegram was promoted in the Western Union win-ow with copy, "You'll like 'FATHER'S SON' because it is a eal dad and kid picture. I am a mischievous kid and dad a ttle strict, but it is a lot of fun and you'll remember your kid ays and pranks when you see it at the Orpheum Theatre Fri-ay and Saturday.—Signed, (Leon Janney)."

2,000 Western Union telegrams were also promoted. Copy on ese read, "We have just seen 'Father's Son'. Leon Janney, the ischievous son, Lewis Stone, the disapproving father, Irene ich, the mother. It will dig mighty deep into your heart and emories. Any kid from six to sixty will enjoy every minute. ring the whole family Friday and Saturday to the Orpheum heatre." These telegrams were personally delivered by Boy couts who gave them directly to fathers.

A Successful (?) G. M.'s Advice To the Budding Young Showman!

There are so many serious things in the business today that it would not be amiss if we get the opportunity to chuckle once in a while. That is why we are publishing this story. It was written by a well-known showman in the east and how he knows his "general managers" is nobody's business. We tried it out first on some half dozen visiting managers and they got such a kick out of it we thought the rest of the gang would like to read it too. Here 'tis:

About 15 years ago I was a successful tailor, but the war soon robbed me of everything I had. I was destitute and hungry, my whole future seemed but a dark shadow. I became desperate and decided to end it all—to do away with myself in a manner that would not bring too much sorrow to my family. So, after careful thought, I decided to become a theatre manager, because I knew in that way I would be shut off from the world and my family, and then again it was more diplomatic than committing suicide.

I called to see Mr. B of the B. K. Theatres, Incorporated, and discovered that Mr. B. had once worked for me as a buttonhole maker in my tailoring business. Well, needless to mention, he immediately discharged a man by the name of O'Brien and I was engaged in his place as a manager.

The circuit grew in leaps and bounds, more theatres were added until the circuit became known as the greater B. K. Theatres, Incorporated, or the G. B. K. Circuit, and that is why, when business is good, the managers always refer to it as being G. B. K.

After a short time I married the boss's cross-eyed daughter and I was made the general manager of the circuit, which goes to prove, never work for an owner unless he has a cock-eyed daughter or else a good knowledge of using the needle is very necessary.

And now I am going to pass on to you the fundamental principals for good theatre management.

All lavatories should be dry-cleaned and pressed at least once a week.

An inventory of all toilet paper, soap, disinfectant cakes, mops and brass polish should be taken three times daily. (Without water.)

A duplicate set of numbered tickets should always be on hand in case the cashier says that she lost the other roll.

Lobbies should always be jammed full of cutouts, frames, flower vases, cuspidors, and baby carriages. Don't worry if your patrons trip over obstacles and break their legs. Remember you are insured and an ambulance in front of the theatre is good publicity.

Never change a burned-out lamp, because the color of a new one never matches the old one; wait until they all burn out and then change them at one time.

Instruct your cashier to cash all checks and for any one. Don't worry if they bounce back NG, because the home office checks come back the same way, so it evens things up.

All managers should stand in the lobby, by the doorman, with a perpetual silly grin on his map.

Newspaper Columning

More and more, local editors are accepting offers of showmen to write either daily or weekly columns on the movies. This is a very profitable angle for both showman and newspaper, permitting, as it does, the showman to get in some plugs on his attraction, and the editor having the advantage of securing additional reader interest.

The columns needs be nothing more than brief, newsy bits of information on pictures and picture folks. It might also be well to mention items of local importance in the column; for example, if a certain star happened to click in a previous picture at your house, mention the previous picture and the fact the Blanktown theatregoers liked the performer.

Whispering Ushers Was Stunt Used By Cohen In Hazelton

A whispering campaign was plotted and executed by Ben Cohen at the Capitol Theatre in Hazelton, Pa., when "Dracula" was booked into the house.

For a week in advance, the ushers "whispered" to patrons, "Dracula is coming." This same procedure was carried out at the schools and throughout the city in general. In fact, by the end of the week, most everybody and especially the kiddies were whispering to one another, "Dracula is coming."

A street ballyhoo was also used to put over the picture. This ballyhoo consisted of a boy dressed in a black cape with high hat, swallowtail coat, etc. White powder was used abundantly on his face with the lips and cheeks being done in black. "Dracula" was lettered on the cape and "Monday at the Capitol" on his shirt. And ssh! It clicked.

Now for a word or two to show you how Ben's service staff has the house's interest at heart. When "Cimarron" played the house, Cohen used a 50-foot cloth sign over the street directly in front of the theatre to advertise the film. Permission for the erection of the sign was granted by the Mayor, thus allowing the sign to be on display eight days. Cohen tells us that his chief usher worked on the net (sign) mornings and the entire usher staff pitched in after hours at the so-called "sign party." Enough wire was secured gratis so the sign was made at a minimum of cost and it can be used again at some future time.

We think his house staff deserves a compliment on their spirit. And you, too, Ben.

Recruiting Station Co-Operated; Loaned Display To Theatre

The co-operation of the local Navy Recruiting Service was an aid to the showman handling Fox's Theatre in Springfield, Mass., when "The Seas Beneath" film of naval struggles during war time was on view.

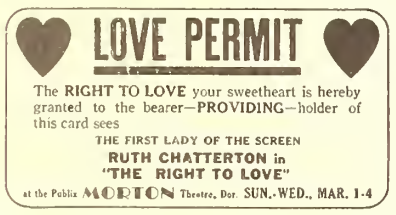
The recruiting department co-operated in every way possible. Guns, shells, uniforms and many trophies were obtained and placed at the disposal of the showman. In addition, a torpedo body and tail, signal flags, exercise head, ship's bell, life rings, rope samples of knot tying, and a ship model were loaned to the theatre. By the time the sailors got through transporting the stuff to the theatre and it was placed on display, the front was something that was bound to sell.

We are showing a photo of the display here. In the picture can be seen the members of the 12th Fleet Division who were invited as the guests of the management, and attended in a body. They all were in uniform. The invitation made a big hit with the local commander of the station and it is a sure thing that the good-will resulting towards the theatre isn't going to do the house any harm when future tie-ups are planned.

Here's Some More Of Al Lourie's Stunts; What Can You Use?

We haven't had any of Albert Lourie's work in some time. But knowing him as we do, we didn't start to wonder why. We figured that he was pretty busy selling shows at the Publix Morton Theatre in Dorchester, Mass., so we just waited to see what he was doing. In due time we found out. And so we pass along a collection of his work. Look it over and see what there is in it that it might help you with your showselling.

For "The Criminal Code," a pretty complete campaign was turned out. Working with the attorney general's office, Lourie effected a most unusual tie-up with the Massachusetts State Prison. The warden of the institution loaned the theatre a display valued at five hundred dollars and consisting of articles made by hand by the inmates. It proved one of the most attractive displays the theatre has ever used. We are showing a photo of it here. The display contained a checkerboard made up of beads—over a hundred thousand of them—and it took almost a year to finish the job. Lourie obtained permission to sell the articles and turn the money over to the prison. It is interesting to note that almost the entire display was sold. The newspaper in Dorchester, the surrounding towns, and in Boston, all carried stories on the display and mentioned the theatre.



As a street ballyhoo on the picture, an old patrol wagon, the first ever used in Boston, was secured, bannered and driven about the streets. The man driving the wagon was dressed in prisoner's clothes. From time to time he would clang the bell that was affixed to the wagon. Another stunt that went over well was a ballyhoo consisting of a man in an old-fashioned stock, the top of which was labelled: "The Old Way. During the days of early American history criminals were sentenced to the punishment stocks, of the type at which you are now looking." The other side of the stock read: "The New Way. The Criminal Code depicts in a most interesting and incomparable manner newest methods used in criminal reform for the handling of 20th Century criminals." A loudspeaker, operated by remote control, bellowed forth the "Prisoner's Song."

Special summonses were also distributed on the picture, and they went over very well. So did the picture. And now let's take some other activities used on various pictures.

Taking advantage of front-page stories given Constance Bennett when her salary was made public, Lourie made up a telegram purported to have come from Publix' district manager for the territory in which Lourie was informed that the star would appear in "Sin Takes a Holiday," which film had been obtained after great trouble and expense for a showing at the Publix Morton. The telegrams were then made up in multiform and distributed from house to house by Western Union boys in uniform. And make believe this didn't make a hit!

On "The Right to Love" a special love permit card was made up. We are showing this in the event that you'd like to look it over and perhaps use it in the future. A similar stunt was used for "Check and Double Check," only in this stunt a duplicate of a state license was made up and distributed. Printing was paid for by an ad on the back, secured from a local automobile dealer. "Abraham Lincoln" was given a marvelous exploitation campaign. 1,700 kids were tied-up on the stunt, and many of the classes ran essays on the Emancipator. The theatre offered awards of 45 tickets and three volumes of "The Life of Lincoln." In addition, blotters containing the Gettysburg Address, and a plug on the picture were given out. Everything went over great on this campaign, and the results more than gratified Lourie.

On Valentine's Day, the theatre has a party for the children, at which the kiddies were each given a beautiful little Valentine with the compliments of the theatre and the Publix organization. This stunt, as do most all of the stunts Louis engi-

G. M.'s Advice to Young Showman and say howdo to every man, woman and child who enters, regardless of age, nationality or color.

Patrons in their undershirts should never be permitted in the boxes unless first sprayed with "Flit" by the head usher.

Never argue with the patrons if they talk louder than the pictures—either give the patrons in front a pair of ear muffs, or else, tap the offender gently on the skull with a hammer.

Always get permission before attempting to talk to the operator and by all means address him as "SIR." Remember he is a high-salaried man and entitled to respect.

Use one hour each day in practicing expressions, "OK," "An' How," "You Bet," and also have a complete set of alibis for business, so in case your district manager comes in, or the office calls, you will know just what to say.

All managers should be in their theatres at 6:30 in the morning in order to get acquainted with the milk wagon drivers. In this way you may be able to work up a good early-bird matinee, for which the drivers would be thankful, to say nothing of their horses.

Managers should oversee the cleaning—removal of ashes, the firing of the boiler—have manicured nails, wear tuxedo—be insulted—never drink, smoke or even eat (if the porter cannot get him a sandwich) and for this they should receive a magnificent salary—and that magnificent salary being about $35!!!??

Regarding exploitation. A very good idea is to use heralds, throwaways, window cards, 24-sheet wagons or tin can matinees, or else they might try giving away chinaware, silverware, earthenware or underwear. These are sure to bring in the business, for wherever they have been tried packed houses have been the result.

However, if your budget will not permit this added expense, I offer you now an exploitation stunt that will bring you recognition not only from your bosses, but from the authorities as well.

Effect a tieup with the police department; arrange with the chief to have 25 policemen lined up, with drawn night sticks, from the front of your theatre across the road to the opposite side of the street.

Then take your assistant manager and five more policemen about 10 blocks up the avenue past your opposition theatre. At a given signal, shout "Stop Thief," and you start to run. The policemen fire their revolvers at you; the crowds on the sidewalks as well as the patrons in line at the opposition theatre will run along to see the thief caught. When they reach the front of your theatre, the 25 cops start to swing their clubs at the mob and their only means of escape is to run into your theatre, which they do without paying.

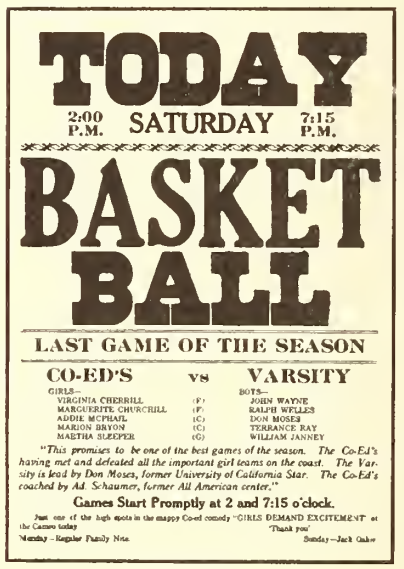
Your operator immediately throws on a trailer of the coming feature attraction that you are exploiting.

The policemen then surround your theatre and as the patrons come out they are placed under arrest for unlawful entry. They are each fined five dollars. The theatre gets 50 per cent of the fines and you not only exploited your coming attraction, but you have taken the theatre out of the red for that week.

Bus Company Tie-Up Aided Cox To Put Across "No Limit"

An advantageous tie-up wit his local bus company was e fected not so long ago by A G. Cox, manager of the Irvin Theatre in Wilkes-Barre, Pa as a plug on "No Limit." Ban ners were placed on either sid of the buses; the banners ca rying copy: "The Fiery 'IT' Girl, Clara Bow in 'No LIMIT at the Irving Theatre Today."

And in the windows could be seen cut-out heads of Clar herself. On the rear of the buses appeared a huge cut-out c Clara with a banner underneath reading: "Clara Bow."



The bus tie-up was one of the highlights of the campaig that Cox planned and executed. We understand that there i some ace showmanship coming from your region, Mr. Co and we'd like to hear some more from you. By the way, giv our regards to Morris Rosenthal and the rest of our Wilkes Barre friends, will you?

McCuann Is Active In His Town; Look At His Special Herald

If you want to get a line o some real honest-to-goodnes showmanship that is sellin the town right and left, dro into Mountain Grove, Mo and see how L. W. McCuan is selling his shows.

McCuann, who hasn't an convenient facilities at his command to help him put acros his shows with an ease and dexterity that is done in some of th larger cities, when heralds, newspaper tie-ups, etc., are wanted is nevertheless managing to put them over right and left. It the little touches he adds to his work that count.

Take his weekly program. When it came out the week c March 15, McCuann made sure that it was printed on gree stock, and suitable refer ence made to St. Patrick' Day. Also tying in the pic ture. The weekly program i printed on plain stock, bu it is well made up, contain ing ads, and carrying th program. In all of the ad is placed a scrambled nam Each ad carries one of thes "scrambled names." Th persons deciphering one c these names is given a ticke to the theatre. The stunt very popular with the loca residents.

On "No Limit," a specia summons, printed on on page, plain stock, in blac and white, was distributed Another novel herald wa the one on "Sin Takes Holiday," in which the fir page of the folded heral contained the word, in re "SIN." The inner page ca ried the rest of the title and the sales talk.

When he played "It Pays to Advertise," McCuann promoted full-page co-operative ad in the local newspaper that proved ver effective. For "Girls Demand Excitement," a herald in the for of a basketball program and score card was made up and dis tributed. The novelty of this herald aided its effectiveness. W are showing this herald here so that you can see what it looke like should you ever want to use one in conjunction with a fe ture or short you are showing in which the theme revolv around some sport such as basketball, prizefighter, baseball, et McCuann tries hard to plug every picture playing his house not because he thinks they are all going to flop on him, b because he knows that his sort of exploitation is always ce tain to bring some extra money in the box-office.

"After all," reasons he, "whether a showman is located in small town or a big city should make no difference. If he's real showman he'll want to sell his shows, even if he is som what handicapped as to mechanical and civic facilities."

That's oke, Mac.' and we might go still further and tell t Club that on "Whoopee" you announced that you'd give mon back to any person who believed he or she hadn't been real entertained by the picture. But that's another story, so we wor say anything about it now, nor will we say that no one requeste the money back. Let's hear from you again.

neers, created lots of good-will for the theatre. Yes, he's plen active in Dorchester. And he want's us to tell all his fello showmen that he receives some ace co-operation from Ni Feenan, his assistant; Hyman Pastman, the chief usher, ar other members of the staff. Oke, Albert. And remember, v are always glad to see what you are doing in Dorchester b cause it never fails to contain something of interest and pro to showmen.

D. George, Handling Publicity In Lima, O., Turns Out Ace Work

Easter activity was rampant in Lima, Ohio, just a couple of weeks ago. And you can credit D. F. George, who handles publicity for Warner's in Lima, Ohio; for it was George who figured out the ways and means for tying the theatre in with the annual Easter egg hunt the local Kiwanis sponsored.

The campaign engineered by George was based on five different events: an Egg Rolling Contest; an Egg Hunt; A Best Looking Easter Basket; A Best Looking Egg; and a coloring photo contest. The theatre managed, in some way or another, to tie in with every event.

For the Egg Hunt, the Kiwanis were in need of a couple of thousand eggs. Here the theatre stepped in and volunteered to run a special morning show, consisting of a Western, a news, and a comedy, for the kids, admission to which would be two hard boiled eggs, colored. Through this medium more eggs than were necessary were obtained; thus assuring the success of the Egg Hunt.

On the other stunts, such as the best looking basket, eggs, and colored photos, it was arranged that they be displayed in the lobby of the theatre a few days in advance of Easter. It was a great idea. And incidentally, George had another surprise up his sleeve that netted the theatre plenty of business. The Kiwanis agreed to stand the cost of taking motion pictures of the event. And 4,000 kiddies, as well as parents, relatives, etc., showed up at the theatre two days later when the pictures were shown. That's business-getting with a vengeance.

George is as active as they make 'em in Lima. Take as another example the special style show that he ran at the theatre. Here he secured 5,000 programs, at no cost to the theatre, from the local merchants; a double truck in the local newspaper on the day of the show's opening; three full pages of newspaper publicity during the campaign, as well as a half page during the show; an announcement over the radio in conjunction with the presentation of a harmonica band appearing on the theatre's vaudeville bill; a tie-up with a local company to supply afternoon teas on the mezzanine during the style show (and at these teas, the models of the show walked about in order to give the ladies present, close-ups of the latest in the style that were displayed from the stage; a local florist donated flower displays for the lobby and the stage, in addition to supplying the models with corsages, and giving a carnation to every lady present at the matinee teas; an automobile company loaned one of its sport models; the car appearing in the "Sport Number" of the show; all windows of a large local department store carried special displays of style show dresses, the meanwhile devoting plenty of space to plugging the theatre, and besides this, sent out a special letter to all its customers on the mailing list, and also placed heralds in every bundle leaving the store. The department store also paid for a trailer to run 10 days in advance of the style show. In the newspaper ads, the store mentioned the theatre. A local sporting goods store supplied the sport styles. And besides having all these mediums working for him, George also ran 40 car cards on the street cars, and also spotted 60 window cards about the town.

What a show! What a crowd! What business! And what publicity! What more do you want?

Building Good Will!

An excellent example of building community good will is contributed to these columns by Walt Murphy, manager of Aaron Shusterman's Roxy Theatre in the minds of N. J.

Not long ago a local fireman lost his life while fighting a local blaze. He left a widow and seven little kiddies to battle it out alone. Murphy heard about the case and immediately took action. Being a local resident he contrived to appear before a gathering of the entire Fire Department and outlined a plan for a benefit. He offered to stage a midnight show and devote the entire proceeds to a fund for the late fireman's widow. His offer was unanimously accepted.

Local lodges made requests for tickets following notice of the benefit in a Perth Amboy newspaper and the Local of Ironworkers sold 500 tickets in one day at 50 cents each. Needless to state, the event was a big success. And it brought immediate relief to the widow.

As the result of his sympathetic co-operation Murphy was not only brought in closer contact with many people but firmly planted the name of Roky Theatre in the minds of hundreds who had never before visited his house. We believe that publicity of this kind has a double-barreled kick to it and while, naturally, an opportunity of this kind only occasionally happens along, it is the quick thinking showman of the Murphy type who acts —and acts fast.

Thanks Murph for passing this along to the boys. It was good work. Very good. And let's hear from you again, soon. Oke?

"Skippy"

On page six of Paramount's press book for "Skippy" will be found a layout of revamp ads that will doubtless prove of value to the showman using them. They have been wisely chosen and their make-up runs from one column to the larger ads. Perhaps the most effective ad of the entire group is the one showing "Skippy" halloing and making an appeal to the kids with "Hey fellers!" (This mat can also be seen on page five.)

The pugnacious Jackie Cooper, playing the title role of "Skippy," has an ideal face for copy. In its pressbook for "Skippy," Paramount has turned out a worthwhile set of ads.

The exploitation section contains many suggestions to help the showman, but it seems to us that the best way to sell this film is through newspaper ads and kiddie klubs. Incidentally, a suggestion has been advanced that along with the ads can be run a special section, through a tie-up with the local paper and a photographer, whereby a full page of pictures of local kids can be run, and called: "Our Own Skippys."

Don't be afraid to make an appeal for adult patronage, too; judging from the reception given "Tom Sawyer" they'll like the picture as much—if not more—than the kids.

Oil Painting Helped Hruby to Put "Min & Bill" Over in Town

John Hruby, manager of t Harvey Theatre, Harvey, I included a novel tie-up in t campaign he used to explo his showing of "Min and Bill

Hruby arranged for a wi dow display with the loc Hartman Furniture Co., wher by they used two oil paintings which were brought down as tie-up for home furnishings. They displayed the paintings o the wall of a living-room display, and a card on the table co tained copy reading: "Both 'Min and Bill' say: 'There is n place like home when it's furnished by Hartman.' See Mar Dressler and Wallace Beery break up their's in 'Min and Bill' the Harvey."

One thousand small cards were imprinted with copy readin "Called, but you were out. See us at the Harvey. 'Min a Bill.'" Hruby had these cards distributed in the residenti sections of Harvey and Homewood.

George Hill directed "Min and Bill" in which Marie Dressl and Wallace Beery were co-featured. Included in the cast a Dorothy Jordan, Donald Dillaway, Marjorie Rambeau, Russ Simpson, and many others of note.

Oke, Hruby! We're glad to note that you are continuing display your well known activity. And we'd like to see mo of it, too, so that we can pass it along.

Heralds Were Used By Hampton To Plug Starting Of Serial

Another showman who b lieves in giving ace plugs his serials is R. Y. Hampto manager of the Paramou Theatre in Gulfport, Mi When he played the openi chapter of "Spell of the Ci cus" recently he hired a clo to give out heralds on the street.

The clown was from Sells-Floto Circus and carried his ow costumes and make-up. His services were obtained at a ve nominal cost; he working the streets between the hours of A. M. and 5 P. M. on Saturday—handing out heralds and givi a snappy sales talk about the picture.

The clown really knew his business in dispensing his sal talk. As the streets are usually crowded on Saturdays with pe ple from half a dozen neighboring towns, the clown drew plen of attention and attracted crowds wherever he chanced to stop proving a highly successful ballyhoo for the theatre.

That's what a southern showman did to put his serial acro Are you giving yours any special plugs? You know, it's t work that you put in that clicks later at the box-office. Perha you can use Hampton's stunt in your own town when you wa to plug any special attraction, be it a serial or a special kid sho

Charlie Chaplin Was Given Ace Plug At Theatre in Berlin

Charlie was all decked o for his opening at the U Palast in Berlin, Germany, r cently. And so we pass alon to you a photo of the way i which "City Lights" was plu ged on the opening night.

In characteristic pose, t shuffling tramp was placed alongside the theatre. He was e larged many times. The pose used is one familiar to all Berli theatregoers, hence the usage of only one cut-out of Chapli His name, though, was spotted about the front of the hous Charlie, of course, was sold above the picture, and if you look closely you will discern the way "City Lights" is spell in German. If Charlie, when figuring out the title of the pi ture, had an idea that he could help the showman save on e penses and make his advertising and publicity easier by usi a title that would adapt itself to all forms of layouts, he miss out in Germany. Some load of letters, eh?

But anyway, the purpose of this story is to show the fro of the Palast. So there it is. And you've seen how "City Light was sold in Berlin.

edo, Ohio, Paid nty Of Attention O'Connell's Ads

"What's in a name"? asked a noted bard. And then to illustrate his point he said: "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet."

Jack O'Connell, managing director of the Vita-Temple Theatre in Toledo, Ohio, ks on this same theory. For asks Jack: "What's a title got o with the value of a picture." He had a chance to show Toledo theatregoers what he meant, but his pet theory n he booked in "A Lady's Morals" and decided to tell To- he liked it's original title "Jenny Lind" better than the one producers has selected.

order that you may see how valuable O'Connell's gag was, would like to explain—for the benefit of those who haven't ed the picture and might not know the story—that it is d on the life of the Swedish nightingale, "Jenny Lind," ing to her love affairs, her debut at the old Castle Garden ew York under the hand of the master craftsman, Phineas arnum, and many other interesting incidents.

herefore, O'Connell, who knew the value of the film, decided his public wanted to see it as it is; wanted to see the vari- events in the life of Jenny Lind, and not walk into the tre attracted by the title, "A Lady's Morals," and expect to drawing room drama or something of a still more severe re, as the title would imply.

the two ads that we are showing broke. And they created ty of excitement in Toledo, make no mistake about that. only did the theatre benefit on additional business, but it ined, as well, publicity and good-will. We ask you, doesn't show why Jack has long ago earned the rating of an ace vman. But for further proof, we inserted the third ad. It es the picture is being held over. So Jack was right!

-Out Letters On ge Helped Weaver "Dracula" Over

Cut-out letters, placed on the stage, were used to good purpose by L. P. Weaver, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Phoenix, Ariz., when he gave "Dracula" an advance plug.

Large letters spelling out ACULA" and "No Woman Could Resist His Kiss" were red and hung on a set of lines in front of the title curtain. st prior to the showing of the feature picture at each show, house lights were turned off with the exception of the exit aisle lights. The house remained this way for about 15 nds, through which period the organist played a selection eird music. Then suddenly a beam of light shot from the ection booth and flooded the flittered letters; the light be- masked down just to cover the letters—using a piece of pur- gelatin for color.

ne organist, when the letters flashed greeted the scene with escendo. After the flood had been taken off, the house lights brought up slowly again back to running lights as the nist faded the music away. The message was changed sev- times by changing the selling line, but the title remained same.

SOME TIMELY TIPS!!!

¶ It's time to change your colors from winter-warm to summer-cool. Greens, blues, straw, etc., are suggested.

¶ House fans should be in good running condition now.

¶ Ventilating equipment must be ready for a summer of hard work.

¶ Newspaper ads and institutional copy ought to stress the "cool" angles of your house.

¶ If you use seat covers, make sure they are in a good, clean condition.

¶ Flowers and greens for the lobby, foyer, promenade and lounge rooms go great this season of the year. Get set now.

¶ How about a change to white duck trousers or skirts for the ushers and other house staff?

¶ Drapes, hangings and curtains ought to get a good treatment to prevent moths moving in for a sumptious repast this summer at your expense.

¶ A thorough clean-up of the theatre is now in order. Start in with those rarely used places and make sure all rubbish and old papers are disposed of.

¶ A careful inspection of your roofs will reveal whether they are in good or bad shape. Expensive redecorating can often be avoided through catching a bad spot on the roof and having it repaired before it becomes a leak.

¶ Loose chair standards or parts will generally loosen the purse-strings of your pocketbook. Besides it breeds accidents and trouble. Avoid both by keeping all seats in proper condition at all times.

¶ Mopping up those lavatory floors may be all right for speed, but not so good for cleanliness. "Down on the knees" with a scrubbing brush that gets into those dirty corners, is the solution to foul odors.

¶ A "stitch in time" will save many a yard of carpet if that stitch is taken care of promptly.

¶ All glass in your entrance doors, box-office windows and mirrors must be cleaned and polished every day. Where business is brisk enough to cause smudges on this glass, a second treatment is recommended before the evening performance.

¶ And don't overlook the managers office when that spring clean-up takes place. Most of those offices look as though a cyclone struck them. Many a manager is judged by the appearance of his office. How's yours?

Bill Brown Has Lots Of Talent On Call; He Makes Use Of It

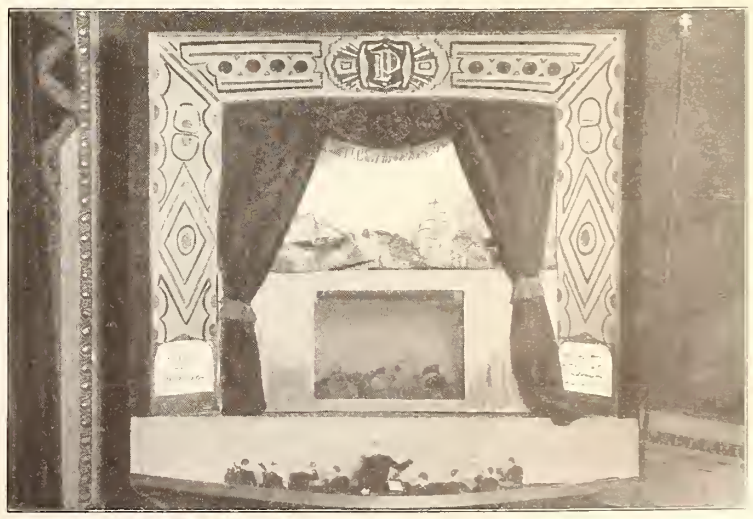
On the job, as usual, and taking advantage of every possible opportunity to get in plugs for his house, William Brown, manager of the Fox Marboro Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., pulled another one recently that went over so well he is continuing it, and presenting it twice each week.

The gag is an organ solo, rendered by Don Williams, assistant manager of the house and an accomplished organist. Each week it is Williams' plan to secure special talent and present them on Tuesday and Wednesday nights in conjunction with an organ solo. The first "Surprise Night"—as the gag is to be called—was a "howling" success.

After the introductory slide announcing him to the audience, Williams turned and requested that the audience join in the singing and shouting of one of Chevalier's pieces "My Ideal," and be his ideal audience. The audience was. Williams then swung into the next number, a popular tune "99 out of 100," dedicated to perennial players of the galloping nags. The audience lustily bellowed this one out. Then came relief in the form of a humorous slide, which was immediately after followed by "Blue Again." The audience liked the number. None blew!

At this juncture, Williams turned to the audience and in true master of ceremonies style declared (in a loud voice): "Folks, I have a big surprise for you this evening. One of the boys on the service staff of this theatre is an accomplished musician, and he has kindly consented to play on his violin for you. He is the lad that you usually find standing in the foyer as you enter to direct you to your seats. I now take great pleasure in presenting to you Mr. Arthur Strand. (Business of hand clapping.)

Strand walked out on the stage and was announced by Williams as ready to play "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver" (they'll call you a platinum blonde). The violinist then played the number, accompanied by Williams' soft playing. At the number's completion, a slide was used telling the audience to sing the next number accompanied by organ and violin. The number was "Sweet Jenny Lee." And Jenny was given a run for her money.



The solo was a sensational success, and in view of this Williams will continue weekly. Brown seems to have hit upon a corking good gag for his house in this one, as persons like organ solos as a change from the regular talking show. Perhaps it might be a good plan for you, too, to try out a stunt of this sort. The cost is practically nothing, and it will doubtless result in some favorable publicity for your house.

Keep us posted, Bill, on the various stunts you use on this gag so that we can pass them along.

Phelps Featured A Novel Advance Plug For "Seas Beneath"

Since he has found one of his best mediums for showselling to be an effective advance display placed in the lobby of his theatre, Joseph Phelps, manager of the Patchogue Theatre, Patchogue, Long Island, N. Y., centers his efforts towards this direction and manages to turn out some attractive work.

A special display was made up for "The Seas Beneath." It consisted of a miniature stage showing a couple of ships in mid-ocean. Beneath was placed an opening (really a fish bowl) showing fish swimming about a miniature submarine. On either side of the stage was placed annunciator cards. In front of a stage, a cut-out orchestra held sway. The display proved a marvelous attention getter and doubtless resulted in a few dollars additional at the box-office.

Many showmen use this method of plugging their coming attractions. Some use it weekly, others on special pictures only. They are simply constructed, all necessary being diligence to the task of recreating every little detail in order that it conform to that of the picture. We are glad to pass along this work turned out by Phelps, and we hope to have some more to show you soon.

The Mulrooney and the Screen

NORMALLY and ordinarily we would not be vastly concerned by the considerations on the art of the motion picture delivered by a policeman, but when he chances to be Mr. Edward P. Mulrooney, police commissioner of the city of New York, his position demands attention. There is, incidentally, evidence that this position is in process of evolution, as indicated by a sequence of expressions.

As reported in the daily press, Mr. Mulrooney, in an address at St. Marks Methodist Episcopal church, about a month ago declared the tabloid press and the motion picture inspirations to crime and the makers of young criminals.

April 14, the Morning Telegraph (N. Y.) presented an interview with the distinguished Dr. A. A. Brill, psychiatrist and a lecturer at the Police Department College, in which he said: "Motion pictures do not hurt anybody, or anything. The defective, who is the criminal, will commit a crime without any suggestion from motion pictures. If anything, the films are helping to combat crime. . . ."

The Police Journal for May, in a pointed editorial which does not name the Commissioner, says: "Little service is rendered to the forces of law and order and much harm is done to the integrity and reputation of police officials by laying the general charge of crime breeding at the door of the press or the cinema. The inference that police officials believe the way to deal with crime is to have it ignored both in the newspapers and on the screen has no foundation in fact. . . . The demand for films dealing with crime is, after all, a reflection of the public interest in the problems which crime presents. Even in the most inferior presentation of this type of picture, the insistent message of the screen is that the criminal must pay the penalties of his crime. The production code or regulations adopted by the motion picture industry definitely provides for the treatment of such subjects from a social and community viewpoint. In the realism of newspaper accounts the criminal often gets away with it. . . . But this is not true in the fictional treatment of crime reflected from the screen. Invariably in the movies the law reigns supreme. . . ."

But perhaps the light is breaking, for on April 26 Mr. Mulrooney lectured on "Crimes of Youth" before the Knights of Columbus at Fort Lee, the one-time motion picture capital of New Jersey, and did not mention the screen, saying: "My own opinion is that this youthful outlawry is due to lack of parental and religious control."

Since Mr. Mulrooney has given marked evidences of concern about the fair name of the upstanding police department of New York across the nation, it is to be hoped that he will not put it in an untenable position of unfairness toward the motion picture, which is the concern about the fair name of the upstanding police the city.

Substantial Exploitation

THE ingenious expedient of the RKO-theatre-of-the-air broadcast from the Empire State Building on its opening day, thus inter-relating the motion picture enterprise with a current news event of substantiality carries with it not only a success of the moment, but also a certain constructive implication in behalf of the institution of the screen. It has somewhere been remarked that the motion picture, while definitely a form of publication, has not yet achieved a recognition as to status and privilege tantamount to that which the public mind gives the press. However, the last ten years of the motion picture's more conscious effort have seen a vast betterment in its standing and a building up of its rights. This utilization of the radio to extend the domain of the screen can be an important aid.

The Engineers Meet

THE tremendous increase in the complexity of motion picture technology is reflected in the advance program for the spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which goes into session May 25 at Hollywood.

Reading over a schedule of scientific papers nine pages long impresses one with the relative simplicity of the dear old silent picture days when the business was all a matter of optics and photographic development, operations governed by long established formulae. Such imposing institutions as the Bell Laboratories, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and the Bureau of Standards are now made a part of the motion picture story as a daily matter of fact.

It is now no longer possible for one man or any half dozen men to hold possession of all of the knowledge and lore of the art. The making of pictures is now truly a business of coordinating the work of many experts. The days of rule of thumb and guess work are gone forever. The spring program of the Engineers is the most pretentious and ambitious thus far offered. It bespeaks the building of a solid foundation of technical skill and mechanisms of excellence for the art.

The motion picture industry can well recall with appreciation that for a good many years the major burden of the technological concerns of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and of the industry was carried by the Eastman Kodak Company. Through the early years of the industry and down at least until the beginning of the last decade the Eastman research laboratories from which so many of the expressions of the society emanated was the only large and well equipped and manned organization devoted exclusively to research on motion picture and related problems.

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

"UNLESS the theatre box office of the entire country improves in the Fall the picture business will face a crisis."

This is the quietly spoken, well considered utterance of an executive whose judgment is highly regarded and who, if anyone does, should know what he is talking about.

"The industry today," he said, "reminds me of nothing so much as a speedway with five automobiles, bunched together, racing madly around turns and utterly regardless of consequences. Nothing will stop them but a crash.

"If the box office graph turns upward, well and good. Prosperity saved the business three years ago when the talkies arrived. We have been fortunate—too fortunate, perhaps. We have got to believe that something will come along to swallow up the huge mistakes. But it is altogether unlikely that luck will always tag the business, that circumstance will continue to forgive blindness, blunders and buncombe.

"Old man Time and old man Economics are working right along—like the mills of the gods. They won't tolerate continued errors, incompetency, gross egotism, fatuous belief in sheer luck.

"What form will the crisis take? Well, to begin with, it will be a good thing to happen, in the long run. The business will pull through it safe and sound. It won't be a blow-up but what will happen is this: you will find many new faces in the higher places, men who can fill and hold their jobs through sheer ability and for no other reason whatever. This is inevitable."

And Was He Sore!

Stuart W. Webb, executive vice-president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., who presided at the recent and fervid annual meeting of the stockholders, had had a deal of experience in corporation affairs and is a veteran of the firing line in stockholders' controversies. A few years ago Mr. Webb became the managing and administrative head of the ailing Gordon Pew Fisheries concern, at the instance of the bankers involved. At a stockholders' meeting one militant offered a resolution for the record in which he denounced Mr. Webb most vigorously and insisted on the record including a declaration that in the year of Mr. Webb's operation of the concern there had been a loss of a million dollars.

Mr. Webb duly presented the motion for the adoption of the resolution, but offered the remark: "There is, however, one amendment that I would suggest."

Oh, Lester!

Lester Burton, a member of the board of directors of Pathe Exchange, Inc., wears the pin of a honorary fraternity at Yale. But Mr. Burton's scholarship honors were achieved through some rare diplomatic difficulties. He was flunked in a language course once because in an abstracted mood he wrote into an examination paper a translation of 'Honi soit qui mal y pense" as "You hold the baby while I dance with the sailor."

"Not a bit of it, no amendment," shouted the militant. "It must go in the record precisely as it is."

"Very well," responded Webb, and in due course the resolution was spread on the record.

After an adequate pause, Mr. Webb arose, saying: "Now that this has been disposed of, I would like to state that the loss should have been put down at two million dollars, not one million."

Figures, after all, are not calculated to make Mr. Webb dizzy. It is unrecorded but accurate history that he once spent $128,000,000 for Henry Ford, and in Mr. Ford's opinion, got his money's worth for it. That is why Mr. Ford and his son Edsel now own the Ford Motor Company. Proportionately Pathe's handful of millions cannot be made such a headache.

Hush, Hush!

Program of the spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to be held in Hollywood May 25-29, soberly announces a paper on "Noiseless Recording" by Mr. H. C. Silent of Electrical Research Products, Inc.

ALL Los Angeles remembers when Frank Whitbeck, erstwhile olympian exploiteer for Fox West Coast, 24-sheeted the information that "GARBO TALKS." Garbo talked, all right, but so did Frank—at a later date.

On the eve of his departure from West Coast ranks to collaborate with "Uncle" Carl Laemmle on "straight-from-the-shoulder" stuff, Frank was tendered a stag dinner by his friends. Assuming it was sort of gridiron dinner affair, Frank decided to speak even more frankly than usual. So he proceeded to discuss freely and entertainingly of the vices and virtues, the faults and the abilities of his associates at West Coast.

It was a masterpiece of eloquence, sarcasm, good-natured kidding and tear-producing eulogisms. He sat down midst mighty applause.

When it had subsided Mike Rosenberg, the toastmaster arose:

"Those wishing to have a record of Frank's historic speech may do so by getting in touch with Freeman Lang."

Mike reached overhead and pulled down some decorations suspended above the speakers' table. They concealed a microphone.

Frank left the next day for New York!

Height of "Yessing"

A couple of "the boys" who've been buddies these many years as they climbed toward high executive posts in the business are in the throes of a polite but bitter feud which, although they're distributors and not at the studios, comes near to being the height of something or other in "yessing."

When one of them stepped into a higher post the other took his job and everybody was quite glad. For the first time in many years Executive No. 2 was no longer the subordinate of his friends, and, also for the first time in many years, he began to do things the way he wanted to do them.

Although he had nothing to say about things and no responsibility in the matter the other boy was hurt. He figured himself a sort of an emeritus on the old job.

Bitter words are now being spoken, even the word "pansy" is used, and the pinochle games are no longer held—and that's somethin'.

TELEVISION WILL "ARRIVE" IN YEAR BUT WON'T HURT FILMS, SAYS RCA

Will Be Less Than One-Tenth as Much an Invasion of the Amusement Field as the Home Motion Picture Is Today, Declares One High Official

By TERRY RAMSAYE

Announcements of the week from the Radio Corporation of America indicate that within about a year television will be made a commercial fact with a considerable array of broadcasting stations.

It is the statement of a high official of the radio interests that "television in what it can expect to be for years will be at the most something less than one-tenth as much of an invasion of the motion picture and amusement industry as the home motion picture is today. And you know about how much that is."

The television picture which will go to the public in this coming year will be in all probability the equivalent of what is now the best laboratory performance. That performance consists in the delivery from the receiving set of a picture of approximately what photographers call a "quarter plate," which is 6½ by 8½ inches. The picture will have about the same degree of detail and quality as a newspaper halftone illustration, and it will appear in a yellow-green and tones of black, instead of the unpleasant black and pink which through earlier experimental work has been associated with television. The process will have the capacity to give satisfactory rendition of cartoons and the more strongly contrasty photographic images. Where subtle tones are involved, the reception, if attempted, will not prove satisfactory. The picture will be sufficiently brilliant to be seen under ordinary residence illumination.

David Sarnoff

This may well set at rest the apprehensions of a radical invasion by television which might prove destructive of box office business.

Also the most optimistic estimates by radio experts of the probable ultimate distribution of television sets do not contemplate that there will be more than perhaps a major fraction of the existing number of radio sound sets.

"It must be realized," observes Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, vice president and chief engineer of the Radio Corporation, "that the patron of the sound radios of today can turn on the set and let it run at will, meanwhile walking about, listening or not listening as the whim dictates, but that the reception of television, which of course will be accompanied by sound, will require that the patron of the art shall sit down, look and listen. That in itself places a limitation of significance. And the American disposition is restless. We just insist on getting up and walking around."

In a statement Wednesday at the annual meeting of the stockholders of Radio, David Sarnoff, president, discussed television in carefully measured terms, meanwhile de-

Board of Pathe Supports Flinn

The following official statement to Motion Picture Herald has been received from Stuart H. Webb, executive vice-president of Pathe Exchange, Inc.:

> Pathe Exchange, Inc. is very much pleased at the interest exhibited by the industry generally in John C. Flinn, and at the confidence in him which has been expressed by so many of his old associates and friends.
> Contrary to the idea held in some quarters, Pathe Exchange, by official action of its Board of Directors taken more than a year ago, retained counsel for John Flinn and for Fred Lally, who was indicted with him. Pathe has also met all other expenses arising in connection with the litigation as fast as they arose.

Nathan Burkan appeared in court this week in argument on appeal from the fine of $500 imposed on John C. Flinn and Lally, on the accusation of storing more than the allowed 5,000 feet of motion picture film in the Sound Studios, Inc., one of the actions growing out of the Pathe fire of 1928. It was anticipated that a decision on the appeal action would not be reached for at least a week.

The week brought no new phase of the second degree manslaughter case against Flinn and Lally, indicted for deaths in the fire. They are at liberty on bail while the habeas corpus action recently instituted pends.

Meanwhile the manslaughter case has been set down to go to trial May 21. This, however, is very possibly to be made subject to another postponement.

Commons Asks Questions!

London—In the House of Commons this week the president of the Board of Trade was asked if he was aware the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and Western Electric group had by subsidiary companies, recently acquired control of Gaumont-British and were Americanizing the entertainment industry in the country. He was also queried on whether or not he would permit amendment to the Companies Act to prevent undisclosed control of companies, and make similar provision in articles of association. Gaumont last week denied it was controlled by Fox Film.

Universal Shows Profit of Million

Universal and subsidiaries report a profit after all charges for the quarter ending January 31, of $1,045,326. This profit is described as abnormal due to the adoption by the company from November 1st, 1930 of the standard method of write-off of picture costs by amortizing such costs over the income-producing life of the pictures. This change was started with the pictures of the present season's releases. There is, therefore, included in the income for the quarter ending January 31st, revenue on pictures of prior season's releases, the costs of which had already been completely written off.

If the company had also revalued the prior season's release at November 1st, 1930, it is stated, profit for the quarter ending January 31st, would have been $90,432, and the surplus at the beginning of that quarter would have been increased by $1,165,342.

Hollywood—Samuel Goldwyn, in his new direction of United Artists, will place "Palmy Days," with Eddie Cantor and Charlotte Greenwood; and "The Unholy Garden" with Ronald Colman in production next week. "The Unholy Garden" is a July release and "Palmy Days" is scheduled for August.

Wilmington, Del.—A committee to study the motion film situation in this city was named at a meeting of the Wilmington Methodist Preachers' Asso. A report from the committee will be heard in two weeks.

DEMONSTRATE PRACTICABILITY OF "SCHOOL AND SCREEN"

MOTION PICTURE HERALD's formula for direct cooperation between pupil and theatre, through the department, "School and Screen," has been adopted by the RKO theatres in the Greater New York area for the showing of "Cimarron," a Radio picture.

More than 100,000 questionnaires on "Cimarron," as compiled by Rita C. McGoldrick for "School and Screen," were reprinted for distribution by history instructors in public schools in proximity to the more than 40 neighborhood RKO houses in the metropolitan district.

These questionnaires were used as the basis for 250-word compositions by pupils on the historic background of the picture. Seven prizes were awarded by each theatre, with the teachers determining the merit of the contributions.

First award at each house was $5; second, $2.50; with a pair of guest tickets for the next five prizes.

The campaign in which the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America participated, brought into active service on behalf of better pictures the Boy Scouts of America, this cooperation having been pledged by James E. West, chief scout master of America.

At the showings of this historic picture in the RKO metropolitan houses, the Scouts were present as monitors. Realizing that in some instances the juvenile attendance might run into the thousands, one women's club group had five chaperons in attendance at all matinees.

One school in Manhattan sent more than 2,000 pupils to see the picture. Upon each one of these girls and boys devolved the problem of writing a thesis. The winners from this and other schools will be announced shortly.

The New York situation, according to those who have handled the details, has been a difficult one. First, the problem of "minor" law of the state had to be overcome. In this no cooperation was received from the school board, although principals and teachers individually felt that the cause of better pictures was one demanding their personal attention.

Because of New York's "minor" law, and the vigilance of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, RKO managers hesitated some days before finally approving of the plan.

Prior to the opening the Hays office had mailed letters and questionnaires to 1,000 teachers in schools served by the neighborhood theatres. Through the mail there was little response, owing, it was said, to the fact that the school board had not placed its official stamp on the plan. However, the reaction as sensed by the various managers was so convincing that it was decided that this promotional plan should be carried through irrespective of the S. P. C. C.

It is felt in motion picture circles that once it is shown in New York that the plan is practicable, its adoption in the key centers of the country will be a simple matter.

The Hays office, in its endeavor to promote better pictures, believes that in the New York campaign a formula may be evolved for application throughout the country.

In bringing the "Cimarron" campaign to the attention of the teachers Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA, sent the following letter to principals and teachers:

"Doubtless you will recall the special showing of "Cimarron" arranged through the courtesy of RKO for teachers of history in the New York City schools at the Cameo Theatre. It was well attended and practically every teacher present took advantage of the offer to supply tickets which might be presented by her to honor students in her history classes.

"At the Saturday morning showing, May 2, 10 a. m. (11 a. m. at the houses playing vaudeville) and on each afternoon of the ensuing week at 3:15 p. m., the RKO theatre managers in Greater New York are asking various groups of women to have hostesses at each of these theatres; the Boy Scout organizations to supply Scouts as monitors; and the Police Department to so control traffic conditions that the children will be safe going to and from the theatre. These showings, as a consequence, will be ideal for students and school children to attend with their parents or teachers.

"The RKO folk are making up questionnaires, like that attached, which they will be happy to deliver to your history teachers through the managers of theatres in your immediate vicinity. Each theatre will supply seven prizes for the best essays of 250 words or less covering these questions; a first prize of $5, a second prize of $2.50, and five prizes of a pair of tickets. It is hoped that the teachers will utilize these essays as a part of the instruction requirements, thereafter turning them over to the theatre for the awarding of prizes.

"We think you have in this splendid picture, featuring the origin and development of the State of Oklahoma, a means of vitalizing your instruction in American history in a unique way.

"I enclose also an announcement of the special showings of 'Cimarron' for posting on your school bulletin board and I should welcome a note from you indicating that you wish the manager of one of the RKO houses to send you the details and literature for this essay contest."

RKO theatres in metropolitan New York adopt cooperative service plan in promoting "Cimarron"

MOTION PICTURE HERALD:—

The inauguration of your new department, "School and Screen" as a regular feature of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD is, I think, timely and useful, alike to the motion picture industry and those in charge of schools.

I believe you know how enthusiastic I am over talking pictures as a factor in education. Our children can learn much from the right kind of pictures in theatres, and I have no doubt but that in the future they will learn much from the pictures they will hear and see in their schools. A closer tie-in between the school and the screen will mean more education and better, and I congratulate your paper on its editorial support of this development.

President, Electrical Research Products.

Ticket Tax Passed In North Carolina

Raleigh, N. C. (QP)—The luxury tax of 10 per cent on all theatre tickets has won out in the North Carolina legislature, Senator R. Grady Rankin having capitulated after a two-weeks deadlock. The bill calls for a levy against a number of commodities, but the amusement assessment is considered heavier than the graduated tax recommended by the state tax commission, and no distinction is made between the small and large theatre. The revenue measure had failed three times in the senate.

Canadian Parliament To Press Copyright Bill

Ottawa—C. H. Cahan, government secretary, states that the bill to amend the Canadian Copyright Act has passed its second reading and will be adopted at this session of Parliament.

Provision has been added to the effect that the seat tax imposed by composers or authors, must be approved by the government. The government will regulate the amount of tax to be imposed by holders of assignments of music copyright or others.

Warner Lot Overcrowded

Hollywood—Crowded for space with eight productions in work, Warners have been obliged to utilize not only the Warner ranch for the circus scene for "Sideshow," which Roy Del Ruth is directing, but also the old Vitagraph lot for exteriors for the George Arliss film "Alexander Hamilton."

NDUSTRY EARNS 95 MILLIONS IN 1930

Survey of Industry's Financial Structure by HERALD Shows Motion Pictures a Close Runner-up to Public Utilities Group in Resisting Reactionary Influences of General Economic Conditions

Creating a record unsurpassed by any other major industry, the combined gross income of the motion picture business, based on reports of 16 companies, increased $253,866,704 in four years, or from $168,060,696 for 1927 to $421,927,400 for 1930, while collective net income of the industry rose $49,614,997 from $45,218,670 to $94,833,067 in the same period, a compilation by MOTION PICTURE HERALD shows.

This expansion in earning power was successive, both gross and net increasing in each year, reaching their peaks in a year of business recession that played havoc with the earnings of nearly every other major line of activity. While some recession from the 1930 figures is expected for the current year, the results indicate earnings of the motion picture business have been able to resist the reactionary influences of a general business depression longer than any other large industry, with the sole exception, perhaps, of public utility companies.

Moreover, by being aligned in this respect with the public utility industry as comparatively depression-proof, the motion picture business again throws sharply into relief the fact that its product has become one of the necessities in present day life, which is borne out by theatre attendance records during periods of economic setbacks.

For 1927, nine leading film companies reported gross income of $168,060,696, while 12 companies reported $236,084,596 for 1928 and an equal number reported $337,934,845 for 1929 and $421,937,400 for 1930.

The figures would be swelled many additional millions were gross income included of major units which do not publish gross earnings, notably Paramount and Eastman Kodak.

Net income for 1927, as reoorted by 12 companies, was $45,-218,670, while 15 companies reported $56,25,716 for 1928. For 1929, 16 companies had net of $91,059,154, while an equal number reported $94,833,067 for 1930.

Enviable earnings increases were marked up by major units of the industry in the four-year period, the compilation shows. While the 1930 report for Fox has not yet been issued, the company's gross for that year has ben estimated at $102,000,000 and net at $13,000,000. This compares with $40,068,258 and $9,469,051, respectively, in 1929, $29,328,-690 and $5,957,218 in 1928 and $22,847,132 and $8,120,557 in 1927.

RKO increased its gross from $42,624,965 in 1928 to $71,-357,831 in 1930 and the net from $877,334 to $3,385,628. Warners, Loew's, Paramount and MGM were among the other large gainers in the four-year period.

Gross earnings of Paramount and Eastman Kodak, which are not published, would swell the total gross income for 1930 to approximately $770,000,000, bringing the combined total gross figure to about $1,500,000,000.

ACADEMY AND S.M.P.E. MAP COORDINATION

Boards of Both Units to Meet on Coast May 21 to Effect Close Cooperative Tieup

The initial steps for cooperation and coordination between the Society of M. P. Engineers and the Technicians' branch of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences are being taken with a meeting of the board of the Engineers and the Academicians in Hollywood on May 21.

The two related, but distinct, technological sectors of special interest to the organization are, for the engineers, the making of the tools of picture product, for the Academy technicals the use of the tools.

Some weeks ago, feeling that what with the span of a continent between their headquarters and various other factors, there was the possibility of conflicts of purpose and destructive confusions, the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD addressed a letter to J. I. Crabtree, president of the Engineers, saying:

> We have been observing with interest the rise and development of the Technicians' Branch of the Academy of Arts

Tiffany-Educational Sales Session Set

The Educational-Tiffany-World Wide combination will not hold its sales convention until July, when, it is expected, all physical phases of the merger will have been effected. A convention city has not yet been determined.

The new combination continued this week with the merging of exchanges and sales forces, discontinuing either a Tiffany or an Educational branch in each key city and establishing two separate sales forces, one to handle feature and the other short subject material. In practically all cases, Tiffany managers, where they have not already resigned, have been placed under supervision of Educational branch heads, with the majority of Tiffany division and district managers not provided for.

E. W. Hammons and Grant L. Cook, executives of the new Educational-Tiffany combination, having completed reorganization of studio forces at Hollywood, have arrived in New York to inaugurate the merged unit's sales season.

Swimming Stars Signed for "Sportslants" of Vitaphone

Helene Madison and Georgia Coleman, swimming champions, have been signed for the second of Ted Husing's "Sportslants" for Vitaphone.

Harry T. Morey has been signed for the two-reel comedy, "Rough Sailing," starring Joe Penner.

A Hot One

San Francisco—Bernard F. Smith, comedian at the El Capitan Theatre, where a stage act is offered in connection with pictures, stopped the show recently but this brought him no happiness. As a climax to the act in which he takes part he is whammed with a slapstick in which a blank cartridge is inserted. An over-generous supply of powder in one of the cartridges caused him to yell and leap and sent him to the emergency hospital for powder burns. The audience gave him a curtain call but he failed to take it.

Preview Is Given For U's "Mother's Millions" in East

Universal's "Mother's Millions" was shown before the regular Friday night audience of Proctor's theatre at New Rochelle, N. Y., in an Eastern application of the Coast plan of previews of Universal pictures.

Carl Laemmle attended the New Rochelle preview of the first May Robson picture, and was accompanied by R. H. Cochrane, Sol Lesser, Phil Reisman, P. D. Cochrane, Fred McConnell, Sig Wittman, Paul Gulick, Joe Weil and Dave Werner.

In his comment on the Coast showing of the Liberty production, which Universal will distribute, Edward Churchill said in the February 28 issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD:

"This Liberty product is a masterpiece of acting, and a highly entertaining performance. Miss Robson's supporting cast has been well chosen and adds to the lustre of her portrayal of the crabby mistress of millions who wins her financial battles and, at the same time, whips manhood and womanhood into her son and daughter."

Klangfilm-Tobis Wins Suits; Forces Kinoton Users to Buy

Berlin—Klangfilm-Tobis has won its suits against exhibitors who installed Kinoton equipment and then refused to abide by the terms of the agreement between Tobis and Kinoton, which noted that exhibitors must buy costly parts from Klangfilm.

Kinoton has lost all suits and therefore cannot protect its customers, it is stated by Tobis.

Dedicated to Knute Rockne

Hollywood—Dedicated to the late Knute Rockne will be "The Spirit of Notre Dame," which Universal will make for 1931-32 release with Lew Ayres featured.

Disc Recording Costs Industry $500,000 Yearly

It is estimated that the industry would realize a saving of approximately $500,000 a year if the preparation of disc versions of feature productions were eliminated.

The figures, from authoritative production sources, are derived on the basis of the usual method of preparing the disc prints of features, which is the re-recording on disc after a film has been completely produced. The cost of recording on the master disc is estimated at about $2,000. Theatre records cost in the neighborhood of $3 per set, and with the addition of express charges and the like on several thousand such records, it is figured the discs, to supply the accounts having only disc equipment, would run to something like $20,000 per film, or $150,000 per year.

13,500 Theatres Are Equipped

A most recent survey of the country's theatres has resulted in the following figures:

Total Sound Equipped Theatres....	13,500
Disc Equipped Only	5,042
Sound-on-film and Disc Equipped..	8,458

The general opinion among both equipment and production men is that the disc is rapidly going out, though a great many of the theatres are equipped with both sound-on-film and disc apparatus, in a combination equipment. One official closely in touch with the equipment situation has said that there are less than half the number of "disc only" equipped houses there were in the country last year.

In the New York State territory, for example, figures indicate a proportion of about five to one of sound-on-film installations to disc. Only one of every 10 contracts, it is estimated, calls for a disc attachment.

There is a certain amount of "bootleg" disc equipment in the country but not enough to be considered a factor in the situation. One company official calls it essentially "uneconomic" to make and use disc, and describes the estimated cost cited above as "probably low."

It is understood that in the near future, Paramount will produce its newsreel exclusively on film, eliminating entirely the disc.

All pictures are made in combination by most of the major companies, with the disc equipped houses for which that form is made, noted as only the smaller theatres.

Disc Accounts Are Decreasing

One company official estimates that 2,000 "disc only" accounts in January, 1931, have already decreased to about 1,500, indicating an average conversion to sound-on-film of 500 in every six months period. He says, however, that, in his opinion, there will, after the final conversion is made, still remain some 1,000 to 1,500 small houses which will retain disc until they close their doors for one reason or another.

Compiled statements and reports from various sources would seem to indicate that the disc, rapidly fading from the picture as a reproduction medium, is looked upon, particularly in production circles, as an unsatisfactory condition, which is decidedly expensive on the one hand, and not nearly as satisfactory as sound-on-film.

DIVERGENT INDEPENDENT INTERESTS MAY PREVENT DOUBLE BILL RELIEF

War Against Double Features Declared by Major Companies

Again the Old Army Game

Insiders blame distributors, and not theatres for the present double featuring evil. Exchanges have not established and rigidly maintained—uniform rentals of sufficiently high proportions to make double booking impossible. By ridiculous price slashing and unheard of concessions at exchanges, they assert, double bills were not only permitted to continue, but were actually encouraged.

In some circles it is held that double-featuring houses are paying uniformly lower rentals today than they paid for silents.

Independents started the present vogue, which now presents serious competition to circuit houses. It has reached such serious proportions that producer-owned runs are quietly planning to adopt double bills in dozens of key spots.

Radio Fires the Opening Gun in Fight to Stamp Out Evil Which Schnitzer Terms "Threatening"

Warfare against "double-feature," declared by Joseph I. Schnitzer, in an address at Radio Pictures' sales convention, is accepted in inside picture circles as the opening gun in a battle against the "evil," which will eventually find all major interests aligned on the offensive.

Jos. I. Schnitzer

Permitted to continue, Schnitzer said the "double feature" policy would seriously threaten the stability of the entire industry.

"The very theatres that are maintaining this policy," he declared, "are digging their own financial graves. Actual box office figures prove that the public is looking for quality in its entertainment, not quantity. The public will be the first to realize, and to demonstrate by their lack of interest, that no theatre can give them two quality productions for the price of one.

"By the same token, no studio can produce two quality productions for the price of one.

"This studio, for one, will attempt no such thing!"

Continuing, he said:

"I want to urge each of you men to use every resource at your command to stamp out this evil. I personally promise you that I will do everything I can to destroy it before it destroys us.

"We must discourage double-billing for three good reasons: first, for the sake of the public; second, for the sake of the exhibitor himself, and third, for our own sake.

"I tell you that no exhibitor can operate a theatre, and no producing company can operate a studio under these conditions.

"We will continue to make quality product—product which does not need double-billing in any theatre in any situation.

"We will make pictures any theatre can make money with. That is our policy in production, and that will be our policy in sales."

Next Fox Confab on Coast

Fox will bring to the Coast all sales personnel and home office executives for its convention next year, when expansive building programs will have been completed at Movietone City.

Let Up Not Expected Until Sales Season Starts

Chicago Circuits Fail to Obtain End of "Evil" Through Clause In Zoning Regulations

Chicago (QP)—No relief from double featuring on its present citywide scale is looked for here until the new selling season gets under way. Collapse of the efforts to curb the policy dates back to a meeting held in the office of the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago last week, when circuit theatre representatives asked independents to approve a Chicago zoning plan which incorporated a clause prohibiting double featuring until the eighth week of general release. Independents met subsequently and rejected this condition.

Thereafter, circuit theatres made good their threat to extend the double feature policy throughout their houses. Balaban & Katz introduced the double bill at the Riveira, Norshore, Tower and Maryland, as well as lesser neighborhood houses to which the additional feature was still a stranger. Warners ran double features in all houses except the Capitol, Avalon and Orpheum.

Circuits to Continue Fight

Circuit representatives now state that no further meetings will be held with independent representatives on the subject of double features. The policy, they say, will be continued in de luxe circuit theatres throughout the summer. In line with this policy, Balaban & Katz organists will be dispensed with May 15th, for three months, to make way for the overtime programs. Refrigerated pre-release houses in all neighborhoods will offer double features immediately after the Loop runs, weeks before they are available to the smaller neighborhood houses, many of which will be obliged to run the lengthy programs in houses that have no cooling systems. The policy will be continued by the circuit houses on a large scale this summer though it proves unprofitable.

With the opening of the new selling season it is generally believed that a stop to the bargain rate rentals which have contributed largely to the spread of double featuring here will be made. Chicago exhibitors freely admit that they have been paying less for pictures they are using on double feature bills than they paid for the old silents.

Independent exhibitors assert that they will continue discussions which will have abandonment of double featuring as their objective, but outsiders hold little hope of a definite settlement resulting. Too many divergent interests and uncompromising attitudes are represented in the ranks to permit of an effective settlement being reached which would be binding on a sufficient number of independent exhibitors to make the switch back to single features a success. This was revealed, they say, at the joint meeting with circuit representatives.

Deposits Asked For Radio Deal

London—At least 90% of outstanding stock of Columbia Graphophone, Ltd. and the Gramophone Company, must be deposited in order to consummate consolidation of these companies, plans for which were announced on March 19, according to notification issued to shareholders. Deposits must be made before June 29.

The merger will be accomplished by exchanging shares of the two companies for shares of the newly-created Electric & Musical Industries, Ltd. Common of the companies will be exchanged share for share for stock of the new company, and before the consolidation is completed Columbia will distribute stock of its American subsidiary. Gramophone is controlled by the Radio-Victor interests in this country and Radio-Victor will hold a large interest in the combined companies.

Famous Not Interested in Budding Canadian Circuit

Moncton, N. B.—A syndicate represented by W. A. Beckett is buying up a number of theatres in the Maritime Provinces, the latest being the Empress and Capitol at Moncton. Beckett denies that Famous Players is interested and states that a new theatre will be built in Moncton.

A.A.A.A'S COMMITTEE DECLARES SCREEN ADS ARE YET EXPERIMENTAL

Agents Convention Reports Distribution a Problem

Organization Holds Secret Session To Discuss Issues Over Use of Film Merchandising Medium

Washington, D. C.—In anticipation of a sharp series of conflicts over the motion picture theatre screen as an avenue for advertising expression, the annual convention of the American Association of Advertising Agents in session here this week held a strictly secret and executive session for the discussion of the subject.

It became known, however, that representatives of interests identified with the exploitation of the media of the printed word and page gave voice to vigorous criticism of the movement toward the use of the theatre screen. This did not result in any final expression of disapproval of the screen by the advertising agents as an organization.

Issue To Be Worked Out

In substance the works of the convention have left the issue where it was at the beginning, still to be worked out in the field of experience.

The report of the committee on screen advertising, submitted by R. L. Strobridge of New York, vice chairman, favored the use of the screen, emphasizing the while that it is still in the pioneering stage.

"It is easy to get pictures made," Strobridge asserted, "but adequate distribution is neither simple nor certain. Your committee can perhaps be of no greater service to you at this stage than by emphasizing the highly experimental character of the medium at present. There is ground for belief that, properly handled, it can prove a highly profitable medium for advertiser and agent alike.

"There has been some loose talk lately in opposition to screen advertising. Most of it emanates from competitive interests in the motion picture business but, curiously enough, few complaints have come from the real judges—the public. Certain of the entertainment films, sponsored by advertisers, have already so established themselves in public favor that the first title of a new subject is applauded when shown.

Films Must Be Interesting

"Sponsored films, designed for showing to the general public, should be sufficiently entertaining to deserve a place on the programs of first run theatres."

The report referred to, and was followed by discussion of, the four types of films which are used for advertising: entertainment films, industrial films, educational pictures, and direct advertising films. In the last named class, it was pointed out that the motion picture industry itself is a prominent advertiser, through the use of trailers.

Circuit Operation "Ritualized," So Hughes-Franklin Will Be "Chain Operation Debunked!"

Hughes-Franklin circuit executives have decided that the string will be operated with "chain operation debunked!"

"Like all other branches of the show game," they state, "exhibition, particularly by circuits, has become ritualized."

Howard Hughes

H-F managers were told that "one of the foremost complaints of American exhibition is that it has time for everything but exhibition; what with filling out forms, attending meetings, goose-chasing with pet ideas from some executive who never ran a theatre in his life, and assorted kinds of other windy business that doesn't mean a nickel at the box-office.

"Naturally the boys in the field feel this virus; they get infected with a peculiar distemper; they begin to roll logs, worry more about form than substance, and spend a lot of time selling themselves, figuring that that means more than selling their shows.

"Maybe you can't blame them. It is not yet regular enough for the big jobs in this business to go to the deserving. You can still comb home offices and find there, at the important desks, not enough of the boys who have put over the individual theatres out in the territory.

Harold B. Franklin

"But—and it's a big but—maybe you haven't found those things as they should be heretofore; but you're going to find them at Hughes-Franklin . . . and how!

"We're going to cut out the hooey!"

Decision of Hughes Franklin executives to "debunk" chain operation, as they term present methods of circuit management, follows action of major interests in eliminating many of the so-called clerical duties from shoulders of managers in an attempt to rehabilitate the individual as a theatre operator.

Considerable leeway in operation has been given circuit house managers within recent weeks, when orders went forth from New York home offices to field personnel to hereafter drop "form-filling" duties and concentrate on upbuiling of local community contacts as a goodwill factor for the respective theatres.

Wide Film Goes Back on the Shelf as Lens Makers Quit

Reichenbach's Condition Is Unchanged as of Thursday

The condition of Harry Reichenbach, seriously ill at a New York hospital, remained unchanged on Thursday afternoon.

Reichenbach, dean of motion picture press agents, was forced by illness several months ago to discontinue activities in connection with his free-lance publicity company.

Carillo Double Checked

Amos 'n' Andy introduced Leo Carillo to news and trade press representatives at a luncheon tendered Carillo on Wednesday by Tiffany at the St. Moritz Hotel.

Producers Definitely Abandon New Size Because It Would Threaten Industry's Economic Structure

Wide film has been definitely abandoned and not just postponed until a more convenient opportunity, it is indicated by results of a checkup made by important technical interests with major producer-distributors.

Foreign lens makers have been instructed by their agents in Hollywood to discontinue the development of wide-film lenses, as pro

THE CAMERA REPORTS

REVEILLE. Quite a fascinating sequence (let's hope it is a sequence) depicting the awakening of love in the heart of a smiling lieutenant, who, alas, is taking this event in his life rather seriously. In other words, Maurice Chevalier and Claudette Colbert in Paramount's "A Smiling Lieutenant."

OFF TO SINGAPORE. Members of the Van Beuren-Buck expedition which is on its way to the Far East to make a series of short subjects in the little known country of Singapore under the supervision of the explorer, Frank Buck. Shown are Carl Berger and Nicholas Cavaliere, cameramen; Clyde E. Elliott, director, and Buck.

OFF TO EUROPE. Arriving here, however, are Irving Thalberg, production executive of M-G-M, and Mrs. Thalberg, readily identified, of course, as Norma Shearer, M-G-M star, in New York, Europe-bound.

TEAMED. One of the famous "couples" of the theatre, the Sotherns and Marlowes of our day, and just as individually famous as representatives of the best in dramatic art, are on their way to the screen in the signing by M-G-M of Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontaine, stars of many Theatre Guild productions, who will be starred in "Lullaby."

"HOME." (Right) While on the lot at First National, headquarters for Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., is this portable dressing room given him by his wife, Joan Crawford.

SCHEMER. Scheming new artistries for the screen, creating even here a striking portrait of Erich von Stroheim, director and author for the screen. Von Stroheim's latest production is Universal's "Blind Husband," now nearing completion.

BEST O' LUCK. A few hearty congratulations and best wishes photographed as they pass between Hal Wallis (left), First National production executive, and William McGann, who has been assigned to direct his first feature production. Once a cameraman for Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., he will direct Doug, Jr., in "I Like Your Nerve," as his first full-length contribution to the screen.

MILADY'S BOUDOIR. Beauty in the exquisite forms it takes under the loving care of riches—and of Nature in her more delicate moods. It is a bit of elegance created by Radio for "The Woman Between," and we see Lily Damita in negligee costume of metalline chiffon, arranged in flowing capelet and skirt.

IT'S A RACQUET. (Left) Each one of 'em, and a good one in the hands of William Tilden, III. The former tennis champion is shown in Hollywood, where he is making shorts for M-G-M.

BUDDHIST VISITOR. Shigeo Fuknichi, Buddhist priest from Japan visiting this country, is shown at the M-G-M studio as the immediate guests of Joan Crawford, Emma Dunn, Hobart Bosworth and Marjorie Rambeau, on the set for "Girls Together," Miss Crawford's new starring vehicle, which is being directed by Nick Grinde, with the other players shown in the supporting cast.

ANOTHER CHAMPION. An unusual shot of him making the kind of shots Bobbie Jones always makes, for his Warner Brothers series. Devry high-speed cameras are mounted on the scaffold to catch Jones' skill with his irons from an unique angle.

STOCKS HOLD ABOVE PREVIOUS WEEK

Move in Comparatively Narrow Range Despite Precipitate Breaks in Leaders in Other Sections

By THE ANALYST

Motion picture stock moved in a comparatively narrow range the past week and, despite precipitate breaks in some of the market leaders in other sections, held, in most instances, above the low levels touched in the previous week's reaction. With the Street convinced that dividends on some of the leading picture shares will not be maintained, it was believed that the stocks had well discounted this prospect and that the speculative and investment fraternity was paying more attention to the intrinsic worth of the shares.

In addition to dividend reduction possibilities, some of the principal film issues have discounted the certainty of reduced earnings in the current year, according to many observers, and the recent break has brought them down to attractive buying levels.

The fact that some of the picture shares have been pretty well oversold was evident in the action of Warners and Fox, which held above the previous week's lows and, in the case of Warners, averaged but a slight fraction from last Thursday's closing level.

A second adjournment of the Fox annual stockholders' meeting to May 15 left the situation in that quarter still highly uncertain, the reason for the postponement being that the annual earnings statement was not yet ready, a step which, according to the rules of the New York Stock Exchange, is required before these meetings can be held.

With approach of the directors' meeting of Paramount May 11, the stock was subject to some selling based on reports that the meeting possibly will see the annual dividend rate reduced from $4 to $2.50, as it was pointed out the earnings prospects and the company's commitment to purchase 95,000 shares of stock at a cost of $7,425,000 by Jan. 1, 1932, call for considerable conservatism in dividends.

Eastman Kodak again gave evidence of strong sponsorship, rising 6 points from its low of the week, while RKO encountered the usual recent support, moving in a fractional range. Loew's was rather weak though the earnings reported for the 28 weeks ended March 13 were the second largest for any corresponding period in the company's history, covering the regular and extra dividends. These earnings were exceeded only in the corresponding 1930 period.

Consolidated Film common and preferred gave a display of steadiness, while General Theatres held closely to the previous week's final levels in a moderate turnover. Among the inactive shares Warners preferred dipped to a new low, while American Seating ruled unchanged.

Motion picture issues on the curb displayed considerable improvement, Fox Theatres, Technicolor and Trans-Lux averaging fractions higher. Columbia Pictures issues again were weak spots, however, both common stock and voting trust certificates selling off into new low ground.

Action of amusement bonds stood out prominently in view of the general unsettlement. Warners convertible 6s reflected the steadier tone in the relative stock by an advance of about 2 points, while Paramount Broadway 5½s and Paramount-Publix 5½s were well taken at advancing levels. General Theatres convertibles, Loew's 6s and Pathe 7s were little changed.

RCA Net Income First Quarter Is 2 Cents a Share

Earnings per share of Radio Corporation of America and subsidiaries for the first quarter of 1931 equaled those of the full year 1930, with 2 cents a share for the period ended March 31. Net income for the three months was $1,566,519 after all charges such as depreciation, amortization and taxes, equal, after dividends on the "A" and "B" stocks, to 2 cents a share on the 13,160,750 shares of common outstanding.

Net income for 1930 amounted to $5,526,293, which was equal to 2 cents a share after preferred dividend requirements. The company did not publish its first quarter earnings last year.

The total gross earnings for the first 1931 quarter were $24,843,371 and the balance after all charges and dividends on A and B preferred was $263,647. The balance was carried to profit and loss surplus totaling $30,274,185 March 31 of this year, compared with $30,010,537 at the close of last year.

Fox Meet Finally Set for May 15, After Two Delays

Following a second postponement, the Fox stockholders' meeting originally scheduled for April 15, will be held on May 15. Adjournment is due to delay in submission of the financial report to the Stock Exchange, as required by law.

The publication delay is attributed to objections raised by Harley L. Clarke, president, to an audit made by Price, Waterhouse & Company

Radio in Competition with Makers of Current For Egg Beaters, Bread Toasters and Washers

Hollywood—Two billion watts of electric current!

Enough to operate 80,000,000 average-sized lights. Or, 10,000,000 homes.

Reduced still farther down the dizzy scale of statistics, this vast annual power consumption of the Radio lot will nightly light a city of 33,300 homes, or of 100,000 population.

A mathematical genius—only a genius could do it—might translate this tremendous equation into terms of bread toasters, washing machines and vacuum cleaners. However, this current has a more romantic usage.

Under the eye of William Johnson, chief electrician, it feeds into the studio's six gigantic generators, turns camera motors, projection machines and lights sets. It takes a lot of power to burn a single incandescent lamp—from 500 to 2500 watts—and there have been times when 300 lamps on a single set were insufficient.

Actual power input metered into the studio is actually 2,003,610 kilowatts for the year ending March, 1931—a kilowatt hour corresponds to 1,000 watts of current measured over a period of an hour. The studio's ranch, near Encino, consumes an annual power consumption of 6,730 kilowatts.

Handling this immense power is a man's job. In normal times 150 electricians are employed. At peak times, when production is at its highest, 280 operators are engaged. The average for the coming year will be about 220 men.

Paramount and United Fail To Iron Out Australia Tilt

Each Opens First Runs to Secure Representation After Circuits Continue to Hammer Rentals

Sydney, Australia—The competitive tilt between the two big circuits, United Theatres and Hoyt's, has been complicated by the entrance of a new factor in the person of United Artists, which, not satisfied with prices offered for its product in Melbourne and Sydney suburbs, has decided to turn exhibitor. As the first step in U. A.'s fight for representation, a hall was hired in St. Kilda, seating 1,000 and Western Electric equipped. The theatre is being run as a United Artists house, the Australian office taking full responsibility.

Paramount, feeling the same about conditions as did United Artists, now joins the latter and the scrap becomes four-cornered, or rather, three-cornered with Paramount and United Artists in the same corner.

The trading result of Hoyt's for the first six months under Fox control, showed a loss of approximately $50,000. Other companies were in the same condition. J. C. Williamson, Ltd., showed a loss of $400,000 on the year, as against a profit of $75,000 for the previous year. Union Theatres publish no balance sheet.

The recent disastrous earthquake has hurt business in New Zealand badly. Kemball's theatre in Hastings was destroyed, and the Fullers are said to have lost $125,000 through destruction of their Majestic in Napier.

San Francisco—Joe E. Brown, film star, has won his fight to keep his pictures from the advertising of the Al G. Barnes Circus. The $100,000 damage suit was settled out of court.

Tube Companies Ask 40 Millions In Suit vs. RCA

Wilmington, Del.—Attorneys for 15 radio tube companies are gathering forces to bring early action in U. S. District Court here in suits for triple damages against Radio Corporation of America, charged with having either ruined or curtailed their radio tube business because of R.C.A.'s famed clause "9." These companies claim damages totalling about $40,000,000.

Action of the companies has been precipitated by the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court which denied the petition of Radio for review of the lower court decisions holding the company had violated the Clayton anti-trust law.

The 15 tube companies that have filed suits for triple damages in the local U. S. Circuit Court are:

Gold Seal Electrical Co., Sunlight Lamp Co., Universal Electric Lamp Co., Diamond Vacuum Products Co., Continental Corp., Arcturus Radio Tube Co., Northern Mfg. Co., Meletrone Tube Co., Vesta Battery Corp., DeForest Radio Co., Howard W. Ivins, receiver for Van Horne Co., Schickerling Products Corp., Supertone Mfg. Co., Raytheon, Inc., and Marvin Radio Tube Co.

No definite action is in view as yet in the government's anti-trust suit against R.C.A., charged with patent monopoly.

Court Hears New Patents Argument

Washington—Arguments have begun in Supreme Court of the U. S. in the case of the De Forest Radio, petitioner, vs. General Electric, a patent infringement suit of importance to the radio industry.

The suit was brought in Federal District Court of Delaware by General Electric against De Forest alleging that the radio vacuum tubes made and sold by De Forest were an infringement of the Langmuir patent issued Oct. 20, 1925. Judge Morris in Delaware court held the Langmuir patent was invalid on three grounds, because of anticipation and want of invention, because of prior invention and because of prior public use. Appeal was taken to Circuit Court of Appeals for the 3d Circuit and that court at first affirmed the district court, but later, on rehearing, reversed it.

The result was a victory for General Electric, and De Forest brought the case before Supreme Court on certiorari. Effect of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, as made on rehearing, was to adjudge the Langmuir patent to be valid and infringed.

Academy Launches Membership Drive

Hollywood—Two hundred members and potential members of Academy of M. P. Arts & Sciences dined Wednesday night at Paramount studio, in furtherance of an Academy membership drive.

President William de Mille announced a reduction of membership dues from $60 to $30 annually and the initiation from $100 to $25. No more associate members will be elected except in assistant directors' section, and reduction in dues is expected to cause associates to become full Academy members.

De Mille reviewed work of the Academy for four years, and outlined a plan for awards this year. Other speakers were Conrad Nagel and Sam Hardy, for actors; Al Cohn and Waldemar Young, writers; Colonel Slaughter and J. T. Reed, technicians, and Mike Levee for producers. A special picture program was given by B. P. Schulberg in the studio theatre.

The producers' committee named at a meeting yesterday to meet writers and discuss their demands consists of Schulberg, chairman; Louis Mayer, Jack Warner, J. T. Schnitzer, William LeBaron and Sol Wurtzel.

Open meeting of writers is set for Monday night.

The Legal Bureau of New York has collected claims totaling $674,426.31 on contracts during the first nine months of operation, according to a report to members by the New York Film Board. Suits were filed against 3,969 exhibitors in the New York area and northern New Jersey.

No Digs in "Lifetime"

Carl Laemmle has declared that "Once in a Lifetime," Broadway play recently purchased by Universal, will be so produced as to retain all the comedy flavor without ridiculing the motion picture industry. As is common with other plays bought for film production, "Once in a Lifetime" will probably not be released for at least a year, and is not included in the product announcement for 1931-32.

Circuits Extend Double Features

Chicago (QP)—Double featuring is being spread in the circuits, Fox setting the new policy for all its seven houses and Publix B & K extending it still further, now that the negotiations with the independents to end the practice have failed.

Fox showed "Dracula" and "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" at the same time at the Monroe, until recently a first-run. At the Nortown, opened a month ago, Publix B & K has introduced the double featuring, and has done the same, with lowered prices, at the Regal, deluxe house in the colored section. In fact, 24 of the chain's 30 or more leading neighborhood theatres now have a permanent or part-time double bill policy. And all the near-Loop grind houses also have gone double-feature.

Martin Stern, in the announcement, said, "This is no more pointless gestures, but a sincere expression of respect for the manner in which the AMPA, under the able leadership of its president, has won kindred benefits for the motion picture industry."

Warners May Play Radio's Lineup On Entire Circuit

Warners are understood to be negotiating with Radio for its entire lineup to play the Warner circuit. Charles Rozensweig, vice president in charge of sales, is said to be handling the arrangements, as he did last year.

Hollywood—Charles Rozensweig, Radio vice president and Phil Hodes are on their way to New York following the annual sales convention. Radio's Eastern sales force have returned to their posts following the meeting.

N.Y. Curb Members Queried on Stock

An investigation into dealings in Trans-Lux Daylight Picture Screen stock is being conducted by the New York Curb Exchange, it was learned during the past week.

All members of the New York Curb Exchange, it was learned, have been sent questionnaires asking for details of their transactions in the stock.

Percy Furber, president of Trans-Lux, is reported to have become considerably incensed at the methods employed by a brokerage house endeavoring to sell shares of his company and is said to have taken an active part in the inquiry, in conjunction with the curb exchange.

While no fraud or drastic irregularities are expected to be revealed by the inquiry it was reported a brokerage firm might be reprimanded.

Moral: Know Your Firemen If You Would Offer Competition

Chicago—(QP) Theatre business in a certain, small, central Indiana town in this territory had been excellent for a long time. Now it was getting better, and Mr. A, who represented the town's theatre business, for all practical purposes should have been a happy and contented man. There was, however, a single irritating fly in his ointment of success, which was the even greater prosperity of Mr. B, who operated the lone theatre in the thriving, neighboring town. It disturbed Mr. A no end to hear that, no matter how high his grosses ran, the final count over in Mr. B's box office was inevitably several hundred dollars higher.

If, A mused to himself, someone should open a competitive theatre in B's town it could be made to be profitable and it would certainly halt the spectacular performance of that monopolistic rival of his. Why, he asked himself, should not he be the one to conduct just such a theatre in that neighboring town? Apparently, there was, at that time, no answer to the question, so the month of its birth saw the idea bear material fruit in the gleaming, luxurious new theatre on the main thoroughfare of Mr. B's community.

Things went along right well from the start. Nothing spectacular, you know; nothing sensational. Just a nice steady, profitable patronage that continued to grow from day to day, and the satisfying certainty of knowing that every increase in his new business meant a corresponding decrease in the business of competitor B.

Within a few weeks, the new enterprise was on such a sound basis, running so smoothly, that Mr. A, made giddy and romantic minded by good fortune, was impelled to take a long-considered but oft-deferred step. He married the girl of his choice and the happy pair departed on their honeymoon.

Back in B's town, two days later, catastrophe in the form of an employees' carelessness with fire descended on Mr. A's newest enterprise. The village alarms were sounded, and volunteer firemen, ever alert to their responsibilities, heard and answered. Mr. B, the town's first theatre owner, was among them, for in all his years as a member of the volunteer fire department, he had not failed to answer a single alarm. So, by the time the valiant boys had answered and the apparatus was manned, Mr. B was in his accustomed place in the driver's seat of the village fire truck.

With bells clanging and sirens shrieking, Mr. B guided the burnished fire truck down the main street with his customary dash and skill. Within a block or two of the blazing theatre, at just about the spot where a person familiar through long habit with the buildings of the town, could be certain of the identity of the blazing structure, something went wrong with the fire truck, quite suddenly and unaccountably. It coughed, sputtered, hesitated, and with a final, despairing sigh, came to a complete and uncompromising halt. Efforts to coax it further, though determined, were unavailing. Precious time was lost. So much of it, in fact, that by the time the heavy apparatus had been pushed by willing but unequal hands to the scene of the blaze, our poor Mr. A's prosperous, new theatre had been reduced to a sorrowful heap of charred rafters and dull embers that winked, it seemed, with wise tolerance at Mr. B and his fellow members of the town's volunteer fire department.

Naturally, the regrettable incident incited much malicious gossip in and about the town. As a result of it, the townsman who inevitably is seen alongside Mr. B on the driver's seat of the fire truck as it rushes headlong to the scene of local conflagrations, withdrew his name from the list of volunteer firemen. In his eagerness to get to the theatre blaze, it was explained, Mr. B's companion had unwittingly pulled the carburetor choke, which, instead of urging the truck on to greater speed, as was intended, flooded the feed lines and brought the mechanism to its disastrous state of inertia.

But still the gossips will not be downed. They go about the town whispering. And the assistant fire truck driver may be seen comfortably ensconced in Mr. B's theatre office, where, they will tell you, he now holds a responsible position.

English the Big Factor in Publix Foreign Business

Fifty-three per cent of all grosses rolled up by Paramount on rentals abroad are obtained from English speaking countries, according to Joseph Seidelman, assistant to Emil Shauer, chief of Paramount's foreign departments.

Jos. Seidelman

Spanish speaking countries contribute 14½% of rentals collected abroad, with French speaking countries collecting 12⅓% of foreign grosses. The remainder is divided among foreign countries of the world in smaller proportions.

These figures, which obviously belittle the importance of foreign versions as related to impressions now prevalent in the industry, indicate the extent to which a major distributor may secure world-wide representation with features made in only three versions—English, Spanish and French.

Rebuilding the Market

That foreign business is rapidly reaching the point of pre-sound days is indicated by Seidelman who stated that "in the first quarter of 1931, we exceeded our income for the same period in 1930 which was our record year. In that year we topped sales of former years by 20%."

"In rehabilitating the foreign field," Seidelman declared, "we have salvaged all value in silents and in addition worked in talkies during this transition." He said that "revolutions and political upheavals are a big handicap because commercial exchange is based on the dollars in New York. These exchange values fluctuate with every national change.

"The department has expanded in theatre operation, now having 48 houses under its control, while six more are in the course of construction."

SPANISH REVOLT AND FALL OF KING IN HEARST METROTONE NEWS

Thrilling Scenes as Spain Becomes Republic Now Showing at Local Theatres

With King Alfonso of Spain in exile, Hearst Metrotone News presents in its current issue, thrilling pictures of street scenes in Madrid as the last of the Bourbon kings surrenders his crown and Spain becomes a Republic. There are pictures of the members of the royal family and of the new leaders in Spain, and the climax of the subject is a speech by the former Monarch and some film high-lights of his career.

Contrasted with these scenes in the capital of Spain, are pictures that show what is transpiring in the capital of the United States the very same day. InWashington, President Hoover and his cabinet attend the opening of the baseball season and see the Champion Athletics beat Washington by a score of 5-3 before a crowd almost as tremendous as that which thronged the streets of Madrid. There are also pictures of the opening of the season in New York between the Yankees and the Boston Red Sox which was witnessed by more than 75,000 persons, and the titanic struggle in Chicago as the Cubs defeated the Pirates before a crowd of 45,000. and Sciences. This brings us to wondering just how the development relates itself to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and in what manner, if any, the endeavors of these organizations will be coordinated.

In response, under date of May 1, Mr. Crabtree replied:

In reply to your letter of April 1, I have been giving considerable thought to the problem of closer co-operation and co-ordination of effort on the part of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and our Society. With this in mind, I invited the Assistant Secretary of the Academy to discuss with our Board of Governors the problem of co-ordination in September, 1930, and as a result of this discussion the Board of Governors resolved to set aside a section of our Journal in which to record the technical activities of the Academy.

The members of our board are also to meet with the Technicians Branch of the Academy on May 21 in Hollywood, Calif., previous to the opening of the spring convention.

To date, I don't think there has been much duplication of effort, but I am anxious that in future this should be reduced to a minimum.

You realize, of course, that there is a definite field of usefulness for both the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. We are concerned primarily with the "tools" of the industry and the fundamental principles which lead to their development, while the Academy, which is sponsored and subsidized by the producers is concerned largely with the application of the tools which the engineer devises to the production of motion pictures.

To illustrate this, take the matter of wide film—the Academy has ceased to concern itself further with wide film problems because it considers that at its present stage of development the wide film does not contribute sufficiently to the box office value of the picture to justify the expense involved; the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, on the other hand, is encouraging further research work on the problem in the hope that a larger picture can be exhibited in the theatre with much less expenditure than would be necessary were the industry to change over to the use of an extremely wide film.

I propose to deal at some length with the activities of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the Academy in regard to education of the technicians, co-operative research and standardization during our spring convention and at that time outline possible means of better co-operation between the two organizations.

The spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is to be held at the Roosevelt Hotel in Hollywood May 25 to 29.

Sound Pictures, Utilized for Instruction, Are Approved by U. S. Office of Education

Washington—United States Government, through its Office of Education, officially accepts sound pictures as a new force in education.

Educational opportunities hitherto unattainable for millions of citizens, especially those living in rural areas and small towns, are now available, it was explained.

Much has been said of the general educational value of pictures even though they are primarily commercial. Aside from this, scientific research with them, especially accelerated since talking pictures have appeared, has gone forward.

Educators in all parts of the United States, recognizing the significance of the talking picture as an adjunct to education, are cooperating with the educational departments of sound producers and are working out a systematic program. A number of pictures have been produced. The whole educational program is being conceived in harmony with prevailing educational standards and practices.

As the program developed, specialists in the Office of Education were approached for suggestions. One of the most significant recommendations proffered was that they direct their attention to parent-teacher associations so that wider publicity be given their efforts. Through this medium not only is the new force in education brought to them but they are enabled to utilize the materials for their own constructive programs.

Wide Film Goes Back on Shelf

ducers have definitely decided not to proceed with the use of wide stock.

Present economic conditions within the industry, which would be considerably aggravated if studios and theatres were compelled to spend millions to switch to wide stock, prompted the decision to abandon the new width.

Inability of several wide film sponsors to get together on a uniform size did not influence the abandonment, it is held, because adoption of the new factor would automatically compel producers to effect a standard.

Leading raw stock manufacturers and equipment concerns are understood to have practically completed arrangements for the switchover when producers decided to junk the wide size.

Television Will Arrive In Year, Says RCA Chief

claring that it promised "another great industrial development."

"Last year," he pointed out, "I said that perfected television would come within five years. The results of our work in the last six months has brought the goal some years nearer. But television will not supersede sound broadcasting. The two services will be complementary."

To assure the industrial development that is promised by television, Sarnoff added: "We cannot disappoint the public and defeat the possibilities of a future great service by hasty and premature action at the present time.

"Important forward strides are being made with television. In our development work now proceeding at Camden we are seeking to perfect television to a point where it is capable of rendering real service before offering it to the market. While the public was willing, and even eager, to experiment with radio in the early stages of broadcast development, it seems to us that it will desire a comparatively more advanced television receiver than the early crystal radios. There was no precedent for the taking of sound and music out of space, but the public has been educated by the motion picture industry to expect picture transmission of a high quality, and it is doubtful whether interest can be long sustained by inferior television images.

"The progress we have made so far has given us the belief that ultimately a great service of television can and will be made available. Because of our present and past efforts in this field of research and development I feel that the position of the Radio Corporation both as to patent rights and technical facilities is promising. I do not believe that television will supersede sound broadcasting by radio. It will be a correlated industry.

Speaking of business conditions and radio activity, Sarnoff said: "It is gratifying to report that there has been improvement in respect to sales within recent months," he said, adding that the first quarter report, showing a surplus of $263,648 after preferred dividends, was a marked improvement over the first quarter of 1930, when there was a loss.

RKO SPREADS SCREEN CAUSE WITH BROADCAST TO NATION'S MILLIONS

Empire-State Opening Key To National Attention

Notables of Society and Screen Attend Triumphant Event of The Theatre of the Air

An audience of 20,000,000 listeners heard the RKO-Theatre of the Air broadcast from the observation tower of the Empire State building a thousand feet above Fifth avenue in connection with the official opening of the great structure May 1, according to the estimates of officials of the National Broadcasting Company. This is likely an unparalleled figure for a motion picture broadcast.

This Radio-Keith-Orpheum broadcast became the climax of the opening day's busy schedule of social and official events which dedicated the world's tallest structure. In the afternoon the speakers included Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, Alfred E. Smith, Mayor James J. Walker and other state and municipal officials, following a signal from President Hoover in Washington, which started the ceremonials.

At the evening broadcast, which was followed by a reception and buffet supper atop the Empire State, the "RKO Theatre of the Air" entertained a distinguished and representative audience which included city officials, executives of the production companies allied with RKO, and many members of the press, stage, screen and society. The party of more than two hundred persons included:

Hon. and Mrs. Alfred E. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Hiram S. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Vanderlip, Mrs. August Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Marcus, Mr. James H. Turner, Mr. Floyd Gibbons, Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Rothafel, Mr. and Mrs. Lew Fields, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Weber, Miss Ruth Roland, Miss Lillian Roth, Mr. Harry Richman, Mr. Terry Ramsaye, Mr. and Mrs. Ned E. Depinet, Mr. Julian Street, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Botsford, Mr. Jules Levy, Mr. and Mrs. Nate Blumberg, Mr. Ken Hallem, Mr. and Mrs. Hy Daab, Mr. and Mrs. Nick Kenny, Major and Mrs. William C. Kennelly, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Zohbel, Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Kahane, Mr. and Mrs. Mark A. Luescher, Mr. and Mrs. William Mallard, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Schwarzwald, Mr. and Mrs. Amedee J. Van Beuren, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Johnstone, Mr. John F. Royal, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stone, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Kennedy.

One important factor of this broadcast is the fact that it is the latest of a series of RKO programs over this network staged in unique and interesting locales. Previously the "RKO Theatre of the Air" had come from a U. S. battleship; from the Club Leviathan and from the SS Conde Grande. All of these have resulted in accumulated nationwide interest with an increasing audience.

The outstanding success of the "RKO Theatre of the Air" according to observers, dates from the time the radio activities of RKO were taken directly under the wing of James H. Turner, assistant to president Hiram S. Brown. Previously this hour had attracted so marked attention either from the general public nor from the personnel in the organization itself. It lacked originality, novelty and showmanship. Today it is classified among the leaders both in public appeal and in institutional usefulness.

"This Empire State-RKO broadcast is," observed Mark Luescher, "a fine example of co-operation with an important civic development as noted in this same Empire State adventure. Here and by this means, the RKO executives indicate to their men in the field everywhere, a definite desire and policy of becoming identified with a celebration of local interest; to tie-up with events which are beneficial to the growth and development of communities, and to cooperate with and become a part of every local movement that is of far-reaching significance. The RKO message which came from the towers of the Empire State on May 1 was more than a radio program—it was a humanizing, friendly and neighborly gesture."

On June 5th, another interesting experiment is being made when the "RKO Theatre of the Air" will dedicate its entire program to the Portland Rose Festival, an annual event which has taken on national importance. This dedication is a tribute to the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Oregon, sponsors of an activity that is fast paralleling the Mardi Gras of New Orleans in nationwide interest.

Ohio Houses Win Sunday Shows

Columbus, Ohio (QP)—Showing of motion pictures on Sunday afternoons and evenings is now legal in Ohio, with the signing of the Marshall bill by Governor White. The bill passed 23 to 1 in the senate and 72 to 42 in the house. The governor pointed out that the vast majority of citizens in many communities had been nullifying the law.

Even with the enactment of the bill, however, individual municipalities have the power to enforce local option according to the dictates of the community.

Passage of the new law is credited largely to the efforts of William James, president of the MPTO of Ohio, and P. J. Wood, business manager.

FOX BRINGS BACK STARS OF SILENT DAYS TO VIE WITH NEWEST LEADERS

Youngsters of the Stage Get Their Chance

Sheehan Expects to Have Sixteen of Year's Outlay of 48 Pictures Ready by August

Personalities will be emphasized in the 1931-1932 schedule of forty-eight pictures of the Fox Film Corporation. Established favorites are heavily represented, two new stars appear, several men and women famous in silent films are brought back, and a group of youngsters who have made reputations on the stage are slated for important roles.

Among the highlights of the program will be three Will Rogers productions, "Young As You Feel," "The Plutocrat" and "Ambassador from U. S."; three Gaynor-Farrell pictures; another Flagg and Quirt vehicle, "Disorderly Conduct," with Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe, and a presentation of "Over The Hill" as a talking picture with Mae Marsh in the principal role. This will be her first appearance on the screen since her retirement six years ago.

Two New Stars

Elissa Landi and Spencer Tracy, the company's newest stars, figure conspicuously in the line-up.

Three authors with outstanding box office drawing power are represented. There will be two Peter B. Kyne stories, two by Zane Grey, and two Charlie Chan mystery stories by Earl Derr Biggers.

Work on the forty-eight pictures is already under way. One Will Rogers picture, "Young As You Feel," was previewed at the annual sales convention, two are in work at the studio—"Transatlantic" and "Over The Hill."

By the middle of August Winfield Sheehan, vice president and general manager, expects to have sixteen of the program finished.

Other New Personalities

Among the new personalities to be brought forward are Allan Dinehart, well known leading man, who appeared on the stage last season in "That's Gratitude," and Linda Watkins, the heroine of "June Moon" on the stage.

From the stage also have been recruited Hardie Albright, the juvenile who had three leading ladies in "The Greeks Had A Word For It." He recently finished his first role in a Fox picture, "Young Sinners," and made a distinct impression.

Howard Phillips, juvenile actor, who was featured in "An American Tragedy," "The Patriarch" and "The Last Mile" on Broadway and Minna Gombell, leading lady on Broadway for several years, are other additions from the stage.

Among those famous on the silent screen who are returning to important roles are Greta Nissen, who has just scored a hit in Raoul Walsh's "Women Of All Nations." She is scheduled for important parts during the coming season.

Mae Marsh has been absent six years, and is now the mother of three children. Her matured beauty and charm are expected to restore her to the pinnacle she occupied in the days of the silent picture.

Thomas Meighan has just demonstrated that he has not lost his hold on the affections of the American film-going public in "Young Sinners," and is to have several featured roles.

At the present time the Fox organization has twenty-seven men players and twenty-two women under contract. The men are Warner Baxter, Charles Farrell, Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen, Will Rogers, John Arledge, Hardie Albright, Frank Albertson, El Brendel, Paul Cavanagh, William Collier, Sr., Donald Dillaway, Allan Dinehart, Jesse DeVorska, William Holden, Warren Hymer, J. M. Kerrigan, James Kirkwood, Thomas Meighan, George O'Brien, Gaylord Pendleton, Howard Phillips, Terrance Ray, George E. Stone, James Todd, James Dunn and Spencer Tracy.

The women are Janet Gaynor, Joan Bennett, Virginia Cherrill, Joan Castle, Marguerite Churchill, Roxanne Curtis, Fifi Dorsay, Sally Eilers, Minna Gombell, Myrna Loy, Elissa Landi, Mae Marsh, Una Merkel, Greta Nissen, Maureen O'Sullivan, Cecilia Parker, Yvonne Pelletier, Rosalie Roy, Peggy Ross, Linda Watkins, Marjorie White and Elda Voelkel.

Eighteen directors will produce the forty-eight pictures. They are J. G. Blystone, Frank Borzage, Rowland Brown, David Butler, Irving Cummings, Seymour Felix, John Ford, William K. Howard, Henry King, Henry Lehrman, Hamilton MacFadden, Kenneth MacKenna, William Cameron Menzies, Alfred Santell, Benjamin Stoloff, Sam Taylor, Raoul Walsh and Alfred Werker.

Still Still Okeh Here

Ocala, Fla.—Possession of a still, of the moonshine variety, while unlawful is not criminal when used as a lobby ballyhoo, according to municipal judge in the trial of Manager J. T. Central Booking Plan May Be Adopted by RKO Over U. S.

RKO may adopt the central booking office plan for its exchanges, perhaps to be put into effect within the next few months. The plan is being discussed by company officials.

Universal started the system several months ago, being the first. Others are considering it. Universal's plan calls for four bookers in central points over the country, all having duplicate sets of playdates covered by exchanges in their areas. This method provides play dates for idle prints.

Lesser Appointed To Handle All of Universal Houses

Sol Lesser, who recently joined Universal as executive assistant to Carl Laemmle, has taken charge of all the company's houses in the country. He will effect a consolidation of all Universal theatre interests, uniformity of operation and closer cooperation with the distributing department.

Lesser was the founder of West Coast Theatres, Inc., which he built to 176 houses. He is now at the home office, where he will remain for two weeks, when he will leave for the Coast to establish his headquarters there.

Redwood Chain to Hughes-Franklin

Hollywood—Ten theatres in the Redwood Theatre Circuit in Northern California have been purchased from George M. Mann by Hughes-Franklin and a divisional office in charge of the Redwood circuit will be established in the Warfield theatre building in San Francisco, with Charles Koerner as division manager.

The theatres are the Rialto, Liberty and State in Eureka, State in Fortuna, State and Hart in Ferndale, State in Fort Bragg, Williams in Dinuba, Minor in Arcata and State in Ukiah, totaling 15,000 seats.

British Renters Watching Exhibitors Returns of Rentals

London (QP)—The Kinematograph Renters' Society has decided that exhibitors making returns under sharing contracts, must include in their totals all fees charged to patrons for advance booking of seats. These, the K.R.S. points out, belong properly to gross earnings of the film, and the renter is entitled to his share of the total taken in at the box office, regardless. Exhibitors had in many cases regarded booking fees as "extras" similar to chocolate and smoke sales.

80 Year Old Stockholder Sues Two Film Companies

Supreme Court Justice James A. Dunne in Brooklyn has permitted Henry A. Siebrecht, 80, of New Rochelle, to intervene as a party plaintiff with the State of New York in the action to restrain the sale of assets of stock of the International Film Laboratories, Inc., and Duplex Motion Picture Industries, Inc., Long Island City.

The court also denied the defense motion to remove Edmund J. Pickup as temporary receiver for the two companies.

WHEN THE SCREEN TEACHES

by
RITA C. McGOLDRICK

ONE month ago, MOTION PICTURE HERALD launched a new project in the department "School and Screen." Believing that the entertainment screen is a valuable educational factor which has been too long overlooked by teachers, "School and Screen" announced a selection of those pictures of the month that were of outstanding importance to the school child. A synopsis of each picture written for the teacher and a set of carefully prepared questionnaires for the children to answer after they had seen the suggested pictures were part of the plan which has for its definite aims:

1. To encourage children to see the best things of the screen, thereby leaving them less time and money for the poorer kind.
2. To have the entertainment screen contribute directly and constructively to their education.
3. To encourage producers to make more high type pictures by winning support for those already released.

One measures the success of any public undertaking by the reaction it causes. The quality of the response that has poured in since the announcement of the "School and Screen" Department is assurance beyond the shadow of doubt that the great field is fertile and ready for the tilling and the planting.

Educators, Parent-Teacher groups, Better Film Councils and committees, producers, and theatre managers, radio lecturers and editors, have written with surprising enthusiasm of the practical and far-reaching possibilities they foresee in the development of this new service.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD is gratified at the volume and unanimity of the replies that have come from so many important sources. It is more than ever convinced that this is the solution of the problem of the school child and his motion picture requirements. A reprint of this service will be sent periodically without cost or other obligation to those persons who are in a position to make definite contacts between the schools and the theatres. This service is conducted for the general good of the motion picture business by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, the leading business publication of the trade. MOTION PICTURE HERALD is not available to persons not directly associated with the motion picture business. Address School and Screen, MOTION PICTURE HERALD, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

A. H. Blank, President, Central States Theatre Corporation, Des Moines, Iowa (a chain of 22 theatres in 11 cities), writes as follows: "I am for your new work in every sense and feel that you have launched what will prove to be a most beneficial movement. MOTION PICTURE HERALD through this service, has most efficiently opened up a wonderful contact, a contact that will not come from us and our theatres alone but from New York City, thereby proving 100 per cent more effective!" Mr. Blank distributed copies of the questionnaire on "Trader Horn" throughout this circuit.

I shall make regular mention of the uses and ambitions of 'School and Screen' to the layman through my feature articles for King Features."

* * *

El Libro Bueno, Mexico, D. F.: "We are constantly receiving requests from hundreds of schools, colleges and theatres for lists of better pictures. Consequently we are sure that with your service we can create a regular demand for the pictures you mention which would have a ready market in the whole South American continent, in all, about 24 different countries."

A Connecticut Yankee

A Fox Feature Picture

Stars: Will Rogers, William Farnum, Merna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan

"The Connecticut Yankee" is based on Mark Twain's famous story of the same name and reaches delicious heights of comedy with Will Rogers cast as the gallant knight of King Arthur's Court in England in 528. The fine flower of chivalry known in that period has been cartooned with gay humor in this picture — huge knights in heavy armor dash about in Austin cars, telephone girls in court costume rush off on roller skates, Will Rogers in the best cowboy fashion lassos a knight errant off his horse in the tournament. This is the kind of nonsense of which the picture is made, but it is fine satire and fine entertainment. There are a number of valuable lessons for adults and for children in this comedy.

1. Who was Mark Twain?
2. When did he die?
3. How many books of his can you name?
4. When did he write "The Connecticut Yankee"?

Skippy

A Paramount Picture

Stars: Jackie Cooper, Robert Coogan, Mitzi Green

In "Skippy" Paramount has given us the childhood classic of the screen, not only the year's best juvenile picture but the spark which has lighted the tinder of inspiration in other companies to produce more of the same kind. "Skippy" is a human document for adults as well as for juveniles. It is made up of that inimitable trio, a boy, his pal and his dog. The characters follow the amusing and clever cartoon strip of Percy Crosby. It tells the story of Skippy, the happy-go-lucky offspring of comfortable parents, who cares more for the society of Sooky Wayne of Shantytown than he cares for the society of the more polite boys in his familiar part of the town. So Skippy finds his happiness in that run-down section of the community that lies across the tracks, and in the companionship of his good friend Sooky and Sooky's all-important dog "Penny." There are moments in which this picture reaches the heights of greatness.

"Skippy" is the unanswerable argument for motion pictures for children and the enthusiastic attendance that has been recorded where the production has been shown.

1. Who originated Skippy?
2. What other characters has he drawn?
3. What is the difference between a cartoon, a photograph and a painting?
4. Why do you think that this particular comic strip of "Skippy" became nationally famous?
5. Name all the characters you can remember in the motion picture "Skippy."
6. In what part of town did they live?
7. Why does everybody love Skippy?
8. What did you think were the best things about him?
9. Describe Shantytown.
10. What was the difference between Skippy's home and Sooky's home?
11. Describe Sooky's dog.
12. What did you think were the three funniest things in the picture?
13. What part of the picture made you want to cry?
14. Does this picture teach a lesson in kindness to animals?
15. What other lesson do you think it teaches?
16. What was the most exciting moment in the picture?
17. Describe Sooky's talk with his father.
18. Which child actor do you think played his or her part best?
19. How many games did they play that you play?
20. Have you seen any picture this year that you liked better than "Skippy"?

Write a 250-word composition on "Motion Pictures for Children."

Associacao Brasileira de Educacao, Brazil, will broadcast "School and Screen" as a club feature beginning in September. The broadcasts will be in Portuguese.

Dirigible

A Columbia Picture

Stars: Jack Holt, Ralph Graves and Fay Wray.

"Dirigible" is a spectacular air epic which will, without doubt, be listed as one of the outstanding pictures of the year. The story, filled with suspense, concerns the attempted flight of an airplane and a dirigible to the South Pole. A romantic picture, magnificently photographed and containing every type of thrill, "Dirigible" was made with the cooperation of the United States Navy officials who loaned the Los Angeles for her part in the play, the battleships of the fleet, with their airplane carrying decks, and all the official resources of the Lakehurst hangar. This was done with the direct purpose of presenting to the youth of the country the practical possibilities of lighter-than-air craft. Every boy in America can afford to see "Dirigible" and every alert girl should see it.

1. What is the difference between lighter-than-air and heavier-than-air craft?
2. Why do you think the Government is so particularly interested in lighter-than-air craft?
3. How many of the mechanical details can you remember of the inside of the dirigible?
4. Describe the stunt flying of the airplane at Lakehurst.
5. What thing did you particularly notice about the Lakehurst hangar?

13. What were the chief hardships the men had to endure after the fall of the plane?
14. Describe the leave-taking of the dirigible from Lakehurst on its errand of mercy to the disabled plane.
15. Why did the dirigible seem so dependable and steady to you?
16. What instrument did the commander of the dirigible use to guide his direction?
17. How did the dirigible locate the stranded men?
18. What kind of radio equipment did the lost men have?
19. Describe the rescue.
20. Why do you think this is an important picture?

Note: President Washington was interested in balloons: President Lincoln signed the first permit for an air pilot who was to go up in an observation in the Civil War. There is much fascinating history on lighter-than-air craft.

The Great Meadow

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Stars: John Mack Brown, Eleanor Boardman

"The Great Meadow," after the novel by Katherine Forde Maddox, is an important addition to the library of great epic pictures of which the "Covered Wagon," "The Iron Horse" and "The Big Trail" are outstanding examples. It parallels these in spirit, telling the story of the sturdy settlers who left their established homes in Virginia to travel through an Indian-infested wilderness to the Great Meadow of Kentucky. It is an artistic and thrilling production, authentic in detail and historically important. One sees the little caravan of heroic men and women struggling over unchartered ground, through marshes and through thicket, over tedious hills and desolate valleys, in rain and shine. Through all of these difficulties the family life seems to go on and they face the Indians' attack and nature's bitter hardships with unflinching courage. "The Great Meadow" is an important picture, sincere, true and with a quality of beauty. It is a little heavy for young children but high school students should be required to see it, as an impetus to further study of the problems and vicissitudes that were confronted and overcome by those pioneers who opened up the fertile ground of Kentucky in the onward march of civilization.

1. What author wrote the novel from which "The Great Meadow" was made?
2. Describe the pioneer homes in Virginia.
3. What kind of people were these that had settled in Virginia?
4. Why did they leave their homes in search of new land?
5. Who was Daniel Boone?
6. Why did people take his stories so seriously?
7. In what way did he influence the settlers from Virginia?
8. What other books do you know of that have told the story of Daniel Boone?
9. What did the pioneers hope to find in Kentucky?
10. Locate on your map the route taken by them in this expedition.
11. How many miles did they actually travel?
12. How long did it take them?
13. How long would it take an airplane today to go that distance?
14. About how long would it take a railroad train?
15. Describe the country over which they traveled.
16. Did they find a Great Meadow when they got to Kentucky?
17. Describe their settlement in the new land.
18. How did they protect themselves against the Indians?
19. What was the most exciting moment in the picture?
20. What did you think of the character of these men and women?

Write a 250-word composition on "The Pioneers of Virginia."

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 76

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 81—Describe the sound pick-up system of the Western Electric Sound system. Tell exactly of what it consists. Describe the slit assembly. What is used to locate the slit assembly? Describe the exciting lamp assembly and tell of its purpose. How woudl you proceed to test the exciting lamp for correctness as to sidewise position?

The questions were: What is the secret of horn action? What would happen were not the horn tapered from point to point in exact accordance with the exponential curve? Explain what "volume" really consists of.

Some of the answers display ample evidence of the need for such a "school" as this. One chap answered: "The secret of horn action is that you put electricity into one end of it and sound comes out the other," and this man is one of the projection staff in what I happen to know is a large, very fine theatre, too, located in a city of goodly size.

Those sending in acceptable answers are: Lester Borst, Herman Billings, C. Rau and S. Evans, P. L. Stanton, Thomas Bailey, G. L. Hatchard, John Williams, G. L. Doe, John Doe, Bill Doe, Claud Addington, Frank D. Dinsel, Lewis Henderson, N. D. Garling, George Thompson, F. K. Lowery, Neut Van Valkenburg, James McGuire, F. T. Earneman, S. Evans, S. Simms, R. B. Schroeder, Robert Dodson, A. R. Speilt, Harry Crowley, D. McDowell, Len Lomax, Daxe Goodsell, P. L. Topeing, A. G. Chase, Frank Fullen, Harry D. Jameson, L. McArthur, R. A. Andersen, Riley A. Boyd and Emmerson Carter—just about 50 out of more than 700 answers.

There are three answers which are best, and about equal in excellence. They are those of Rau and Evans, Herman Billings and Lester Borst. I have selected the reply of Brother Borst for publication, altering his phraseology slightly, but not his meaning.

He says:

"(A) The secret of horn action lies in the construction or shape of the horn itself, which of course shapes the air column. The tapering of the horn from throat to mouth in accordance with exponential curvature permits approximately equal passage of all frequencies to the outer air, resulting in the most perfect possible acoustical amplification, as the science of sound and hearing terms it.

"(B) Were the horn sides not tapered in exponential form, many of the frequencies would fail to reach the air outside the horn, hence the sound as heard by audiences would be imperfect.

"(C) What we term 'volume' is the energy of sound and the proportionate strength of all sound frequencies exciting the diaphragm of the human ear. A base drum may boom forth like thunder, while a piccolo sending forth sound of equal intensity would seem to the hearer as being very weak by comparison. This accounts for the fact that the lower frequencies, setting up air vibrations of greater intensity, give the impression of having greater power, whereas their actual loudness and carrying power may not be any greater or even so great as those of the higher frequencies."

Mac Improving

Our old friend P. A. McGuire, advertising manager for International Projector Corporation, is recovering from a very serious operation. That he is recovering and now out of all danger is evidenced by the fact that he is beginning to tell us about "his operation," always a good sign.

When your editor visited him down at St. Vincent Hospital he had to shove aside the banks of flowers, baskets of fruit and what not his army of friends had already sent, before a good view of his face could be had.

We were worried, for Mac, as he is dubbed by friends, has not been very well for some while. When it was finally decided that he must go to St. Vincent and have his cylinder escapement and chronometer ballance taken out, sand papered, polished up and oiled we all felt pretty gloomy. For you never can tell what may happen when friend Sawbones gets his flock of hatchets, saws, probes and what not out and begins to dig in for the winter. Might easily turn out badly, and what would we do without Mac?

Some Considerable Speed

We are now told that a scientist of Japan, Baron Shiba by name and title, has evolved a high-speed camera, by the use of which it is possible to take 40,000 photographs per each second of time.

It seems incredible that light can impress itself sufficiently upon silver salts at such inconceivable speed, but I guess the report that it has been done is truthworthy, hence we must accept it as fact.

Projecting a film made with exposures at the rate of 40,000 per second would slow up the speed of action as shown at the present projection speed of 90 feet of film per minute, or 1,440 pictures per minute, or 24 per second, just 1,666 times, so that an action which really lasted one second would last 1,666 seconds, or 25 minutes, approximately.

The fond kiss of "affection" administered by the shiek usually lasts, at the very least, 25 seconds, hence under this system he would be enabled to see himself enjoying osculation for 25 times 25 minutes, or 125 minutes, or a bit more than six hours. Oh, joyful joy!

It would seem that such terrific speed should be quite sufficient. We are told, however, the baron is now working on a camera designed to increase this tremendous speed to 60,000 pictures per second, so some of these days you may be projecting that sort of stuff and will have to stay up all night to project a bullet through, say, 15 feet of its travel.

Baron Shiba is director of engineering of the Aeronautical Research Institute of Japan.

Mystery Thriller

A mystery thriller with an intelligent plot hich requires no sliding panels, no mysterious pparitions and a minimum of darkness, is ofred by Columbia in "Subway Express." The ory is entirely logical, the mystery is deep, it at the same time is explainable and no foolh loose ends are left hanging, when the murerer is finally apprehended.

On the other hand, the lack of the usual ookum" in this picture may militate against s chances. There is but little physical action the plot and the setting is strictly limited. is a one-set affair, with the camera always ained on the interior of an express train. his effect, which scored so well on the stage Eva Kay Flint's and Martha Madison's play, om which the film has been adapted, becomes ightly monotonous on the screen. Hardly once uring the action of the plot does Jack Holt, aying the detective, move more than a half-ozen paces from the center doors of the train. ortunately the story is strong enough to stand is static strain and the dyed-in-the-wool ystery film fan will enjoy its intelligence. On e other hand, the "chill-and-gasp" addicts ight find the plot slow.

The action is laid in a north-bound subway xpress train in New York. Leaving the Times quare station, a scuffle is precipitated when o intoxicated men insult a woman passenger. companion resents the affair, starts a brawl ith the men, a revolver is fired and when the noke clears, it is discovered the woman's husnd has been killed. Within a very short time ter the arrival of Inspector Killian, played by ck Holt, it is discovered that the woman d been estranged from her husband, that the an accused of shooting the husband had rlier threatened to kill him, and that, being s business partner, he would benefit to the tent of $100,000 insurance.

However, the shooting still seems accidental til the police surgeon makes the astounding scovery that before the shot had taken effect, e man had been killed by electrocution. The rist of the plot absolves the partner of the tual killing, but suggests an accomplice. veryone on the train is under suspicion and e finger of guilt points at several in interting and logical fashion. With the exception at the climax is too quiet for effective melorama, it should satisfy the discriminating ystery fan.

The plot throws no heavy burden on the cast, ough the performances are entirely adequate. olt has one of his square-lipped, ready-ngued parts as the inspector, and makes the st of his limited opportunities. The comedy introduced mainly in the form of a stupid liceman, a rather overworked idea, though ed Kelcey scores a real laugh when he stages wrestling match with himself to determine w the shooting happened. Aileen Pringle as wife and Jason Robards as the partner are isfactory.

Entertaining Farce

Lowell Sherman, through his intelligent direction and acting, has made this Willard Mack story a very interesting piece of screen entertainment. His ability to keep the story moving swiftly at all times is a great help and makes the piece brisk and sharply defined.

Sherman gives the best performance in the cast, while Edward Martindel and Karen Morley take second honors. Others whose work is highly satisfactory are Mae Murray and Leland Hodgson. Charles Coleman, the butler, adds to the comedy with his usual performance. Sherman's ability to get the most out of his lines proves the outstanding bit of work, however.

The story deals with the attempt of Mae Murray and her accomplice, Leland Hodgson, to get hold of a large portion of Martindel's wealth. Miss Murray marries the middle-aged widower and through her wiles makes him think she is deeply in love with him. Her plan is later to tell him she is about to become a mother and have him settle a large sum of money on her for the support of the child. Before she and Hodgson can go through with their scheme, Sherman discovers the plan of the pair and investigates. His disclosures are revealed to his brother, Martindel, who doesn't believe them until Sherman gives him proof and forces Miss Murray and Hodgson to leave.

It concludes with Martindel realizing how foolish he has been in the hands of the designing Miss Murray and that his brother Sherman is not the worthless drunkard he is thought to be. In the meantime Sherman's love affair with Karen Morley, Martindel's secretary had been further developed and the ending comes with the three, Sherman, Morley and Martindel, on a honeymoon trip.

The screen play and dialogue by J. Walter Ruben is well handled and adds greatly to the story. The comedy is made more important than the drama and this keeps the picture from becoming dry and uninteresting.

Svengali

(Warner Brothers)

It's Barrymore's Show

John Barrymore's fondness for dramatically prancing from pillar-to-post, too theatrically dressed for the part, appears to have been given sole consideration in "Svengali," which years ago found its way to the silent screen in the form of "Trilby." And while it is true that the star delivers a performance with which Barrymore admirers will probably not be disappointed, his rendition of Du Maurier's maestro has been made by Director Archie Mayo to settle down in a class which is far above and more or less widely separated from the other component parts which go to make up this feature production.

The picture, therefore, may be considered from two angles, these including Barrymore on the one side, giving a splendid and highly dramatic performance, and counterbalanced on the other by only fair support of a cast which works its way through lukewarm treatment of Du Maurier's sombrely dramatic tale.

It's terrifically heavy fan material, with but very few snatches of laughter, and these widely interspersed throughout a few initial reels. The entire vehicle is made to revolve around Barrymore, who as Svengali, the erratic, egotistical and sometimes sinister genius of musical composition meets Trilby, who models for his three artist friends, one of whom, Billee, falls madly in love with her. The romance progresses until the filthy and unkempt maestro Svengali comforts Trilby in a row with Billee and induces her to depart with him for Continental capitals, where, after a lapse of years, we find Trilby, under Svengali's tutorship, a renowned singer.

Eventually, Billee and his classmates, Taffy and Laird, attend the concert in Paris and there meet Trilby, its star. Svengeli's hypnotic influence over the singer develops a strong barrier between her and Billee and despite vigorous attempts to win her back, Billee doses when Svengali, dying, further strengthens his hypnotic spell over the girl.

The atmosphere which is built around Svengali is very stagy, both when Svengali lives in a stifling attic studio and when he later reaches the heights of glory, influence and wealth. In the latter state, there is a very pronounced touch of Continental elaborateness.

In an attempt to amplify many dramatic moments, the action has been made to suffer tremendously in numerous spots.

Photography throughout is splendid and is aided immeasurably by lighting and other allied technical phases.

This is drama personified; shorts of a very light nature are needed, therefore, to balance your program.

BRITISH TO FIGHT FOR CHANGES IN "BLUE" LAW

Seek Revision of Amendments Before Action is Taken by Parliament Committee

By WILLIAM H. MOORING

London—Although Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association headquarters in London are inclined to regard the passage of the second reading of the anti-Sunday show bill as a "half way home" halt, the majority of the association's branches up and down the country are adamant that a fight must be made to secure some vital amendments while the bill is in committee stage.

The principal bone of contention is whether or not the government supporters of the bill shall be permitted to pass the measure back to Commons for a third reading without first altering substantially that clause which gives local licensing authorities power to grant Sunday permits subject only to the payment to approved charities, of such sums as shall be deemed by the licensing body, to represent the profit on such Sunday shows as they shall authorize. Which means that not only are exhibitors, under this bill, to be disallowed making any profit by Sundays shows, but they are to be at the mercy of their local license magistrates, who may apparently fix any sum they wish as representing the likely profit from any given Sunday show.

May Get Around Charity Clause

London exhibitors who for years past have accepted the condition of contributing to charities approved by the London County Council are almost unanimously in favor of a continuance of this policy under legal compulsion. Anything, apparently, to be able to open on Sundays. There is little doubt that under the former L.C.C. arrangement, exhibitors managed to keep a little for themselves. That they would be able to do so if the proposed bill were passed as it stands, looks extremely unlikely, though one may plead that "hope springs eternal in the human breast."

In many districts, however, the position is very different. Some places have enjoyed Sunday licenses for years without being compelled to pass over anything to charities. In these localities there is a terrific hub-bub, exhibitors demanding to know what the C.E.A. is going to do to protect them from such an iniquitous piece of legislation, which certainly creates a novel precedent in commercial practice. Other lines of business—non-essential as well as essential—catering to the public on Sundays are not expected to part with any of their profits in order apparently to moralize their commercialization of the Sabbath.

Parliament to Get Changes

It is expected that about 50 Parliament members will form the committee to consider proposed amendments to the bill, and the C.E.A., having already committed its members to the principle of compulsory charity, is in a dilemma. For it will have to resist the principle insofar as it concerns their members in districts not hitherto subjected to this form of penalty.

Theatre interests also are tabling amendments to the bill, because as the measure stands it will not permit the opening of legit theatres on equal terms with cinemas. Nor will Sunday boxing, dog-racing, dirt track riding, or similar joys be legalized unless the terms of the bill are so widened.

It is probably the weakest and most timid draft ever put before the House of Commons on any vital issue.

It connives at the hypocrisy of the past by declaring legal what the high courts recently declared was illegal. But it leaves the principle of local option and fails entirely to make any progressive move in the direction of securing a settlement, on a national basis, of the question as to public right concerning how or where Sunday may be spent.

The Home Secretary J. R. Clynes, forced to devise a bill, has been at pains to create no precedent, to offer no lead, to do nothing that could end once and for all in every part of the kingdom the subjection of a docile and decent minded majority, to the cranky will of a noisy and meddlesome minority.

Paramount and Stars

The recent convention statement of Sidney R. Kent, sales chief, who said that Paramount will have "no star series this year—we are going to make 70 motion pictures!" has left insiders wondering to what extent the company's long active and deeply imbedded star policy will be revised in future product as a result of the switch, a few months ago, of several stellar lights from the Lasky studio to other lots.

S. R. Kent

Paramount executives believe that "the weakness of the old system," Kent declared, "was that we had to set five or six stories ahead for stars. This year, we will make 70 Paramount pictures. In each one of these, the story will fit the star and the star will fit the story."

He pointed out that two things were being particularly stressed this year. The first was the concentration upon good stories, with particular stress being laid upon strong titles which were box-office without being vulgar.

On the other hand, Fox, Warners and other major distributors intend to give to stars more thought in new season's product than heretofore.

Donovan's Kid

(Radio)

Good Melodrama

Radio previewed this picture in the Belmont theatre immediately following "Cimarron," which was the feature attraction, and through the 18 reels of Richard Dix acting no one left the house. That alone should show how the picture rates.

The story is filled with numerous human interest angles which at times become a trifle sentimental. It is for the most part, though, well handled and carries a punch. It has some hokum, but of the kind audiences like.

Acting honors are shared by Dix and Jackie Cooper. This child Cooper, we think, has no equal on the screen in the child role, and in this film gives a performance that mixes laughter with tears and vice versa. Marion Shilling, as the heroine, is sweet and charming and plays her part well. Boris Karloff, as Cokey Joe, is suitable for his role. Others who add to the picture with good characterizations are Frank Sheridan, Richard Alexander, Dick Rush and Fred Kelsey.

It is when Alexander, Cooper's brother, dies in a gunfight that the youngster adopts Dix as his "Big Brother." The child's love for him changes Dix's mode of living and he even goes to work for a living, leaving his gang. When the welfare officers take the lad from him Dix is ready to return to a life of crime. It is then that Miss Shilling pleads with him and he stays on the "straight and narrow." When she is robbed by Cokey Joe, Dix is accused of the crime. He escapes the police, however, and finds the real thieves. In the fracas he is shot and near death, when the kid is brought to him. This gives him the desire to live and the end comes with the "brothers" together.

Although some of the dialogue is a trifle overdone and too dramatic, it doesn't seem to matter a great deal, at least not at the preview showing.

Though it is an underworld story, it isn't the gangster type, and in no way does it glorify the gunman.

Comedy or cartoon shorts will balance nicely here.

Gold Dust Gertie

(Warner)

Misses Fire

Name draw of Winnie Lightner, plus whatever strength Olsen and Johnson may have built for themselves by their two previous appearances, give "Gold Dust Gertie" its main chance of general success.

The plot boasts very little that hasn't been done before, ofttimes to better advantage. Nor are the lines and comedy business particularly fresh. As for treatment, it is the old slap-stick one-reeler stretched to 65 minutes.

In a short prologue, we witness the wedding ceremony of Winnie and Johnson. Three years elapse and Winnie marries Olsen. Another elapse of time finds Olsen and Johnson co-honeymooning with Dorothy Christy and Vivian Oakland. It seems their boss, being a conservative old duffer, favors marriage and wants all his employees to enjoy the connubial bliss. This despite the fact he is a bachelor and owns a bathing suit factory.

Winnie seeks out the boys to collect long-overdue alimony and threatens to take her claims to the boss. The boys explain that their previous marriage is a dark secret which if known would cost them their jobs, the boss being that much opposed to divorce.

At this confession, Winnie agrees to help. She gets the position of chief designer of bathing suits, talks the old man into exhibiting a one-piece model in the Florida beauty parade, a thing he would never do before, and ends by becoming engaged to the boss.

There is much running around with characters chasing one another aimlessly throughout the footage. The climax is, of course, a chase, in motorboats this time and perhaps the highlight of the feature. The preview audience, at least, seemed to enjoy it.

All the laughs the picture provokes are obtained through action and not by dialogue. As an example of the lack of comedy in the lines, there may be cited a bit of business in the office sequence. Olsen and Johnson are trying to hide Winnie while their wives storm the office door. They put her in closets and finally attempt to shove her under the desk. She comes up on the other side with a waste-basket over her head and uttering the brilliant line, "What do you think I am, a cuspidor?" One might say that was a typical example of the whole film.

Winnie and Olsen and Johnson do the best possible with the material handed them. The same can be said of the rest of the cast with Claude Gillingwater giving the nearest thing to a legitimate performance as the bathing suit manufacturer. Considerably more could have been realized from the beauty parade.

Use dramatic shorts and musicals for best balance with this film.

Funny Business

Louisville, Ky.—Free publicity for pictures in readers' columns of newspapers are okeh, provided they don't take a sock as hard as that taken at "Trader Horn" when it played Loew's State here.

Many letters were printed and in some vigorous protest was voiced against alleged cruelty to animals, while others charged that much of the "wild" African scenes were shot in California or Mexico, that tame animals were used instead of wild; that photographers tricked certain sequences and that antiquated shots were used.

All of which prompted more than a little bit of speculation as to the possibiilty of a little plot on the part of competitors.

Chances

(First National)

Mild War Yarn

"Chances" takes its name from the attitude its central character holds toward life. And thereby defeats itself, for sympathy is lessened for the boy who can have his choice of many women, yet chooses his brother's sweetheart.

However, A. Hamilton Gibbs developed the theme in his novel, the screen treatment glosses over motivations and makes trivial an affair which should have been vital. Part of this fault must be borne by the manner in which the characters are introduced.

With creditable swiftness, Alan Dwan's direction established the locale as London and the time as World War days. Two young officers are picked up in the fog. Headed for a nearby "pub," their paths cross that of a girl. One of the officers accosts her and stops for a moment to chat, telling his fellow he will join him later.

The girl is frankly questioned, told the officer has three days' leave to spend and asked if he can spend it with her. She laughs him off and departs in a cab after giving her phone number. The audience is allowed to guess she recognizes the boy, though he does not know her.

The uniformed Don Juan goes to join his friend at a glass of beer. At the table, the conversation discloses them as brothers who are genuinely fond of one another. This scene and subsequent ones between Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Anthony Bushell are among the best played in the picture.

Fairbanks attempts to call his girl of the fog, but he has confused the numerals of her phone number. Thinking she has given him a wrong number, he forgets the matter.

On the train the following day, headed home to spend their leave with their mother, the characters of the brothers are further developed. Fairbanks, we discover, has always taken his fun where he found it. Bushell, on the other hand, is not a ladies' man. Only one girl has ever meant much to him, a sort of a childhood sweetheart and a girl for whom, as a boy, Doug held an aversion.

While at home, the brothers meet this girl again and, of course, she turns out to be Fairbanks' lady of the fog. Doug launches a campaign to sweep her off her feet, but does a quick about-face when his brother's love is brought to his attention by a chance remark. He pretends the whole affair was an amusing flirtation and the girl, deeply hurt, accepts Bushell's proposal, partly on the rebound, partly because she feels their families expect it of her.

The brothers return to the front and the plot stands still while the audience is treated to some great battle sequences. The action concerns field artillery unit manoeuvers which, to say the least, are a welcome change from aerial warfare.

As reward for a particularly valiant service, Fairbanks is granted a week's leave. In Paris he meets the girl who is now driving a general's car. They spend his last 24 hours together and he returns to the front with her picture. This falls accidentally into Bushell's hands and he thinks it was meant for him.

It is at this point that "Chances" goes wrong. Instead of lying like a gentleman, Fairbanks tells his brother the truth about the whole affair. This on the eve of an expected German advance.

Bushell's world crashes about his ears. He feels there is nothing left to live for and exposes himself unnecessarily under fire. That he gets his is to be expected.

An attempted rescue that costs Fairbanks an arm comes as an anti-climax. It was his love for his brother's girl which caused Bushell's death and a large portion of the audience will resent it. Had some novel twist been added in explanation, the result would have been different. But as it stands, Fairbanks is suddenly less of a hero and more of a cad. Which wasn't intended at all.

The performance Fairbanks gives makes the weakness of his first starring vehicle all the more regrettable. His work is very good throughout. Second only to Fairbanks is the portrayal of Bushell.

The Vice Squad

(Paramount)

Weak Story Hurts

The opening scene in "The Vice Squad," John Cromwell's Paramount effort to portray the frameup of innocent girls as brought to the public attention recently by New York police investigations, is the climax of the picture. From this moment the action in the film wanes, as did the interest of a preview audience, until a flat and unsatisfying finis is reached.

It is a pity that a cast, possessing the ability of this one, should be sacrificed to the entirely unworthy plot that marks "The Vice Squad."

Paul Lukas, while giving evidences of his acting ability, is obviously miscast as the stool-pigeon responsible for the framing of innocent girls. The fact is brought out in one scene that he has been suffering from malnutrition and perhaps that explains the wistful look he carried on his face throughout the production, or maybe it was due to his efforts to create sympathy and understanding for his characterization.

A Jewish lawyer, with his arm waving, accounts for 99 per cent of the action in the film. Dull dialogue, too long and without audience appeal, features the plot. The characters stand in one position for several minutes and then, as if wakening from a deep sleep, read their lines.

Esther Howard, as the friend of Miss Johnson, provokes a number of laughs with her "hardboiled" mannerisms. William Davidson, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Monte Carter, G. Pat Collins, Phil Tead, Davidson Clark, Tom Wilson, James Durkin and William Arnold all give good performances.

Sound and photography are fine, but they cannot atone for the obvious weakness of the plot.

Tarnished Lady

(Paramount)

Tallulah Deserves Better

Paramount has made much fuss over Tallulah Bankhead and her first talker, "Tarnished Lady." The producer is correct in waxing somewhat excited about Tallulah. Insofar as she is concerned, the promises bear fruit, but of her first vehicle the same cannot be said.

Miss Bankhead is sophisticated, smart and very much in the vogue. Donald Ogden Stewart, author of the story, attempted a sophisticated yarn which is in keeping with the characteristics of the star. But somewhere along the line, things began to miss and the result, therefore, is not too happy.

Those who like their stories obvious may enjoy "Tarnished Lady." A sophisticated New York audience, gathered together for a class premiere, apparently thought otherwise about it and expressed its reactions toward the goings on on the screen by frequent guffaws of laughter where certainly neither author or producer meant them to be.

You have here Miss Beankhead as the financially embarrassed daughter of an old New York family. She is in love with a young author, but mother dictates the wisdom of a marriage with Clive Brook, self-made financier as the way out of the family's financial troubles.

Tallulah takes the hint, although much against her inclinations, and marries Brook. The marriage is one of those things and the two fail to hit it off pleasantly. Eventually, and on the day that the stock market crashes hubby's fortunes, Miss Bankhead determines to leave her home fireside, although it should be said for her that the decline of the family fortune had nothing to do with the case.

She determines to return to her first and only sweetheart, but discovers that, in the interim, her best society-girl friend has stepped into the breach. It looks like beer and skittles for Tallulah, who goes rather to the bad as she continues down the line.

Eventually, a baby is born, Tallulah takes a job in the Fifth Avenue establishment of an old friend and the reconciliation with husband Brook is ultimately concluded. It seems she discovers she loves him, although the story development doesn't make it clear when the awakening of her affection first developed. As a matter of fact, there is little in the picture that strikes a genuine note. The story often slides from logic to something else and, as you might expect, consequently never impresses as being the real thing.

Miss Bankhead had a lot of difficulties, none of her own making, to overcome. She gives as real a performance as the role allows. It is to be regretted that her debut vehicle was not a more fortunate one. She has a definite ability as an actress and deserves a better break

Everything's Rosie

(Radio)

And So It Is

There is a tradition in the theatre which has to do with a comedian's little black book. Some say the book is red, but regardless of its color, custom demands that every line the comedian says which gets over is jotted down for future reference.

Robert Woolsey must have brought such a little book with him when he came to the talkers from the stage. In company with Ber Wheeler, he has used a number of them i previous film appearances. Now that Woolse is solo starring, he uses more of these ancien wheezes.

But for some reason or another, the audi ence which witnessed the preview of "Every thing's Rosie" didn't mind the age, antecedent or lineage of Woolsey's remarks. Immoderat laughter greeted every word he uttered.

What serves as a plot concerns the adven tures of Woolsey as a carnival medicine man He adopts a three-year-old girl and for th next 14 years is father, mother and doctor t the waif. That he must have done a good jo is attested by the fact that the girl, at 17, i played by charming Anita Louise, a most b lievable ingenue.

Anita falls in love with John Darrow, scio of a wealthy family in a small town, and a her request Woolsey agrees to leave the sho and settle down. He goes to work as an au tioneer in the local jewelry store.

The romance is nearly wrecked when th store is robbed and Woolsey accused of t crime. He works the shell game on the jail and escapes with the girl. But Darrow an the sheriff give chase and catch them to explai that the real thieves have been caught. S Woolsey leaves Anita with her lover an drives off to rejoin the carnival.

"Everything's Rosie" was chosen for the titl instead of "Going, Going, Gone" after it wa decided to call the girl Anita plays "Rosie. Even at that it is a misnomer. "Everything' Woolsey" would be nearer the truth.

With the exception of the love interest a enacted by Anita and Darrow, every one els in the cast merely supports Woolsey. Lit Chevret does well in a vamp role.

however, to marry for money, so, aided by the coaxing of Marie Prevost, another chorus girl, she plans to get Kerr by trickery. The plan works well until Joe Cawthorn, an actor appearing as Mary's father, imbibes too freely and discloses the plan. Kerr, ready to marry Miss Brian, plans to go through with the ceremony until the last vow is to be taken and then refuse. Mary, just before the ceremony, decides to quit the game and leave town. She loves Kerr and doesn't want to win him by trickery.

Kerr, however, brings her to the church and the ceremony is performed, but not as planned. Kerr says yes, much to the surprise of his friends. All is explained when Kerr shows that Mary had written him a letter telling the details of the plan.

Sheer Luck

(Big 4)

Fair Action

Bobby Vernon uses his best efforts as a comedian to save this film from being decidedly weak, and almost tiresome. There is little enough, and practically nothing at all new, in the story. Philo McCullough as the villain, attempts to win the girl, played by Jobyna Ralston, with his dastardly machinations.

Of course, he is foiled by Nick Stuart, hero in the best style, with the able assistance of Bobby Vernon, whose comic antics are a saving and life-giving bright spot in the otherwise weak picture.

Picture patrons who enjoy the action type of film, should derive some little enjoyment from the effort.

A Rider of the Plains

(Syndicate)

Entertaining Western

Two contributing factors serve to make this Western a thoroughly enjoyable and fast moving bit of picture entertainment. In the first place both performances of the players and the direction of J. P. McCarthy are notably sincere and convey the impression of reality; and secondly by reason of the entertaining child appeal embodied in the film through the efforts of Tom Tyler's partner, Sandy.

There is nothing startlingly new in the story itself, being patterned more or less on the rather general type of Western story, but the treatment has served to make it a decidedly entertaining bit of screen fare.

The plot concerns the fortunes and misfortunes which come to a stranger and his partner, who arrive in one of the old centers of the West, with the hero naturally falling in love with the girl. He is accused of holding up the express office only to vindicate himself later through the evidence supplied by his partner.

Tom Tyler wins out over the parson in the concluding sequence, and everybody is completely happy at the end.

Llewellyn Totman did the screen adaptation for the film.

American Silents Head Egypt Market; French Talkers Strong

Consul Horace Remillard at Port Said, Egypt, has reported to the Department of Commerce that American silent films have nothing to fear from European importations, since the market continues among lower class native element. Animated cartoons and newsreels in sound go well because of their superiority over European product.

The prospect for talkers, however, is not so bright, since the French product is severe competition. He suggests that American producers send out talkers in French and with French actors.

Mother Goose Melodies
(Columbia—Disney)
Great

Walt Disney has done a most unusual piece of work in this "Silly Symphony" number. There is indicated a great step forward technically, in animation and synchronization, in addition to excellent subject material, clever animated ideas, and rapidity of action. There is almost the illusion of real life in some of the figures, so fine is the animation. Many well known Mother Goose rhymes are included with the stories neatly running together. Old King Cole is featured, and Little Jack Horner is present as well. The youngsters will devour this and ask for more, and the elderly children will enjoy it hugely. By all means do not miss it. It is great.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Chasing trouble
(RKO Pathe)
Fair Laughs

The idea in this comedy is good for a number of laughs, though it is by no means new. Franklin Pangborn, as the husband, arrives home from a year's trip a day ahead of time. He surprises his wife, and is himself surprised when he is put to work at housecleaning. This should strike the right spot with numbers of home folks. The wife's bridge partners arrive with their children, complicating things for hubby. Dot Farley does well as the wife and Junior Coghlan does a fine job as the mischievous youngster.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Taking Chances
(Vitaphone)
No Good Reason

Billy Wayne and Thelma White are responsible for the acting, but it isn't all their fault. Billy comes out of the hospital after his arrival from the foot of his girl's father, and returns to the mansion dressed as a maid. The two are set to elope when the old man arrives on the scene. Back to the hospital, of course. Short is too illogical, continuity weak, and decidedly too few laughs.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Wild West of Today
(Fox)
Magnificent Photography

C. W. Herbert was the master photographic hand at the camera in this splendid number of the Magic Carpet series. Panchomatic stock is used with distinguished result. The sequences, filmed in the Wyoming mountains have almost the realistic quality of the etching. There is great interest in the picturization of new methods of herding and grazing. Much praise for cameraman Herbert on an exceptional bit of work.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Grand Dame
(Vitaphone)
Fine

The musical comedy player, Patsy Kelly, has the effective lead in this number, when as the gunman's girl she breaks into a confidence game, believing it to be high society. Plenty of laughs, and the manner in which she casually lets fall the smart remarks throughout is vastly amusing. Good.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Happy Days in the Tyrol
(Fox)
Odd

A yodeling contest in the Bavarian Alps, in which old and young take part, forms number three of the new "Magic Carpet of Movietone" series. Not too much dialogue and what there is, is in German, appropriately. Different from the usual run of shorts and most interesting to anyone.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Pageant of Siam
(Fox)
Interesting

Also of the Magic Carpet series, and this time devoted to Bangkok and the Siamese. The scenes are not particularly unusual, nor are they new, having been shown in other shorts of this type, but the use of natural sound recording makes them a bit different and therefore newly interesting. Buddhist temples, the king's palace, the sacred white elephants and varied scenes of the people and their customs make splendid material for any audience.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Laugh It Off
(Paramount)
Not Particularly

A feminine, but very deep voice emanates from June McCloy in what is supposed to be a comedy affair, but therein it fails badly. She becomes a nurse and gives the soldier patients a treat. The music is anything but new, and her voice hardly gets across in lullaby attempts. Howard Bretherton directed. No good reason for this.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Wild Life on the Veldt
(Fox)
Interesting Africa

Photographed on the preserves of the Government of South Africa, this number of the Magic Carpet group shows natives of the African jungle animal tribes in their daily lives. It is understood that the cameraman travelled much the same territory covered in the filming of "Trader Horn." Good material and, of course, as an animal number, of great general appeal.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Bosco's Holiday
(Vitaphone)
Amusing

The Looney Tune featured player, Bosco the animated cartoon star, has a great deal of fun himself, and pleases the audience generally with his antics. This number is no exception. Clever drawings, though the story, of course, means little or nothing. Good for a light spot almost anywhere.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Peeps at Peking
(M-G-M)
Fine

There is great general appeal in this Burton Holmes number, in which intimate flashes are shown of various spots in the capital of China. The audience will be amused and pleased with sequences indicating the peculiar customs and habits of the native families. Good for any type of bill or audience.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Troubadour
(Vitaphone)
Excellent

Another of the Martinelli series, and the Metropolitan Opera star is in fine voice. The numbers are somewhat lighter than previous subjects of the series, which increases the appeal. A dance interlude, splendidly rendered, rounds out the short most effectively. Of a high type, but generally appealing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The World at Prayer
(Fox)
Striking

The cameraman moves over the world, showing various peoples in their native countries at their religious devotions. Pictured are the Miracle at Lourdes, France; the muezzin summoning the Mohammedan to his daily prayers, in the Far East; rabbis chanting the ceremonial religious hymns in New York temples; Bavarians firing muskets as the call to services, and the Episcopal church ceremony in New York's St. Thomas'. Decidedly worth playing.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Down to Damascus
(Fox)
Interesting
